THE OPEN GATE.

SELECTED BY S. W. BOLLINGER.

There is a gate stands open wide,
And through its portals gleaming,
A radiance, from the cross afar
The Savior's love revealing.

CHORUS:
O! depths of mercy, can there be
That gate stands open wide for me,
Stands open wide both night and day?
Stands open wide for me?

That open gate stands free for all.
Who seek through it salvation;
The rich and poor, the great and small,
Of every tribe and nation.

CHORUS:
O depths of mercy, &c.

It open stands for old and young,
Though filled with joy or sorrow,
The spirit woos your soul along;
The gate may close to morrow.

CHO.

O sinner, waken from your guilt,
Nor let your heart deceive you;
For you the blood of Christ was spilled,
He's waiting to receive you.

CHO.

O blessed spirit, lead me in
And let me falter never;
Make me a victor over sin,
I'll praise Thee, then forever.

CHO.

Press onward, then, though foes may frown
While mercy's gate is open;
Accept the cross and win the crown,
Love's everlasting token.

CHO.

When on the river's brink we lay,
The cross that here is given.
And bear a crown of life away,
I'll praise thee then in heaven.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THOUGHTS ON THE CLOSE OF THE OLD, AND BEGINNING OF THE NEW YEAR.

"Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am."—Ps. 39: 4.

The poet sings,

"And now my soul, another year,
Of thy short life is past."

In a general sense, this sentiment is not strictly correct, as the life of the soul is not short, but is eternal. But in the restricted sense in which we use andunderstand it, in its existing in the body, it is true, and we do well to heed it. The Scripture heading these thoughts is very suggestive to the reflecting mind. Lord make me to know mine end. How very solemn to contemplate that on earth we have an end. Notwithstanding the prominence of the man either in the Church or in the State, his life on earth has an end; and useful as he may be, his usefulness on earth will end. Then Lord make ME to know my end; personally, make ME know it for myself and not for another; and the measure, or NUMBER, of my days what it is. If by reason of strength, man should live four score years, the number of his days would be 29,220, and how rapidly do these pass away, and how very short will this long life be after 29,000 of its days are past and gone. But how few attain this high number of days. Yesterday I buried one who had only attained 10 days, and a few days previous, one who had attained 23,335 days. Then Oh, Lord teach us to number our days, and at the close of each one, to make the proper deduction, that I may know how frail I am.

The Psalmist says, I thought on my ways, and we do well often to think on ours. I have found it profitable to associate these thoughts with periodic seasons or events, such as our birthdays, the last, and the first days of the year, the day of our baptismal covenant with God &c. By this none will understand me to mean that these are the only days in our lives that we can with profit think on our ways. But these returning periods in our lives are suggestive of special seriousness, and to the few whose birthday is also New Years day, it is extraordinarily so. The baptismal day of some is also New Years day. So at the closing of the old, and beginning of the New Year, let us all unite in thinking over the past, and contemplate the new year upon which we now enter.

Many, very many, both in and out of God and His Church, who commenced the year of our Lord 1873 with us under as fair prospects to live to see its closing scenes as we, have sickened and died, and thus have passed from the scenes and turmoils incident to a life of trial and disappointment; some by slow and lingering disease, others suddenly hurried hence without a moments notice. Their bodies have returned to the earth from whence they came, and their spirits to God who gave it, in whose custody they will remain until "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; where He will call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. And to gather his saints to him who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice," while the unregenerate shall then come forth to everlasting shame and contempt.

We who have survived these, and have been permitted to remain in the body to see and realize the close of the old, and the beginning of the New Year, have yet to pass through the same ordeal through which they have passed; and will that event transpire this year, is a thought that we do well to consider.

In the past year many of the faithful in the Church have fallen beneath the heavy tread of the pale horse with his rider, DEATH. Among these were the Elders, standard bearers in the ranks of Zion. And some fathers and mothers in the Israel of God, too, have fallen; some of these were full of years and bear the marks of many hard fought battles for the Lord; they had borne the trials of many anxious days, and wearisome nights; they were waiting for their change and the burden of their prayer was, how long oh Lord? They went to their graves like shocks of ripe and well matured corn. But the young in Israel too have fallen. The young men and maidens in the Church have ripened for the sickel before harvest time had fully come, a first fruit for the Lord. These, as died the veteran soldier of the cross, under the triumphs of faith, go to the Father's home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. With them ALL IS WELL.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

But the gay, the giddy, the carnally minded, the unregenerate, both old and young have fallen. How is it with them? Reader whose lot would you prefer? God has spared your life to enter upon another year in the Christian era. What are your thoughts as you step upon this new era of time?

The record of the past year is with us, we are familiar with it, and while it has brought peace and comfort to some, it has brought sorrow, distress, and sore disappointment to others. Will the one upon which we are just entering bring along diffe ent results? It is one of the wise and gracious arrangements of the providence of God that our troubles, trials and disappointments are hidden from us, so that we cannot tell what even a day or night, much less, a year may bring forth. Yet His children who are born of water and of the spirit do know, that God the Father will not suffer them to be tried above that they are able to bear, and that He will, with every trial, make a way for their escape. The Lord being their Shepherd, they shall not want any good thing in life. And though at last they must go through the valley of the shadow of death, they need fear no evil, because their Lord will be with them there, and it will be only a walk and not a frightened run through the shady valley.

The ungodly however, are not so; they scare at the rustling of a leaf, and flee when there is none pursuing. They are like the chaff which the wind driveth away. Therefore they shall not stand in the judgment, nor in the congregation of the righteous. Then let us on this New Years day, one and all, seriously think to which class we belong, and whose we are. Many one year ago promised themselves and God a holier life. Now fellow pilgrim, God in mercy has spared our lives to see the end of the year, let us bring the days, the weeks, and the months in review before us, and see how near we have filled our promise, and performed our vows.

Many of the readers of the PILGRIM apparently live out of the Church against their wish or will. What shall I say to you? Some of you I know had no thought on last New Year's day that you would be out of the Church by mid-summer: how terrible is your surprise now, that the entire year has slipped away, and thus another New Year finds you still out of Christ and His Church, and you don't know what has become of the 365 days which have passed away with the year 1873. What resolves will you now make? Will you try again? Let me urge you to resolve anew with this new year to go to Jesus THINK, seriously think what would be your condition if you had died in your unregenerate life you lived through 1873. Be not discouraged because you failed to realize your fond hopes of being in Christ before the Old Year closed. The cause of failure is with yourself; find out your mistakes and improve on them in the future. You have failed to realize your wishes (or your hope if you prefer that word) simply because you did not begin the work. You must not only wish or hope to be a Christian, but you must be a co-worker with God to become one. When the prodigal came to himself and found he was in a country far from home, and in want, he did not only say I will arise and go to my Father's house, but he did arise and go. He did not merely say he would say to Him, "Father, I have sinned against Heaven and before thee," but he did so say, and his success is known to all Scripture readers. See Luke 15. After this pattern and take fresh courage for the year 1874, upon which you have just entered. Wishing and hoping much, and doing nothing towards attaining what we wish or hope for, is worth nothing. One who always makes excuses and offers apologies for not doing his duty, is good for nothing. Let not the year of our Lord 1874 find you so doing. May the grace of God make this a happy New Year to one and all of us, I pray in Jesus name. Amen. D. P. SAYLER.

DILIGENCE is a fair fortune, and industry a good estate.

THE SINKING SHIP.

Recently a ship went down in the middle of the Atlantic, carrying hundreds of men, women and children to the bottom of the ocean. One of the survivors describes the terrible calamity somewhat thus: "The steamer struck on the starboard side; the rigging was carried away. The long boat was not crushed on deck, but after being lowered, the mizzen mast fell upon it and killed nearly all its occupants The main mast fell after the mizzen, toppling over on deck and killing many persons. In a few moments the ship began to sink, amid great disorder and frantic terror. The scene was awful beyond all description. The air was rent with shrieks. But some were heard saying calmly, "As we must die let us die nobly." The water rushed into the hold with incredible velocity. I undressed myself and with a companion jumped over board. As I left I heard the ship cracking, and looking back, saw her go down with one plunge forward. For a moment the shrieks were terrible; then all was silent. It was the silence of death."

Who will deny that such scenes are "awful beyond de-cription."? Not those at least who feel the pangs of bereavement. How many have dear friends in the deep, dread ocean! To such, no doubt, every ship looks like a great wing d sea monster, cruel as fate and dark as the chamber of death. What some regard as music, enticing and sweet, is to them the saddest of all sad sounds, the funeral dirge of the loved and the lost. To them the wave has no "silvery crest," it is black all over, and deceitful as the te opter's smiles. Tears and sighs and blasted hopes— these tell the story of the sinking ship.

If we knew that a ship was destined to sink, how few of us would take passage on it! And are not many immortal beings—some of our dearest friends, too—on a ship that we all know will sink sooner or later? It is quite common to speak of life as being a "sea," and of course we can not cross this sea without being in some vessel. Reader, are you in the sinking ship, or are you not? Is Christ with you? If so, you need not fear: His gentle "peace, be still" will calm the most turbulent sea. Let us be sure that we are in the same boat with Christ and we need not fear the elements; let us have Paul on board and we need not fear how soon our vessel (our body) is wrecked; we "shall suffer no loss."

The rigging was carried away. There is a great deal of "rigging" on the sinking ship to which we allude. But it will all be carried away. Purple and fine linen could not sail the rich man to Heaven. They were as worthless as the rags of the poor beggar, and with these they had to remain and rot. How naked, the soul when its covering is gone!—more naked than the mast that has lost its rigging. Let us secure the robe that will not be carried away at the very hour when a covering is most needed. "The fashion of this world passeth away." Yet how many seem fit for nothing but to "follow the fashion," and who despise those who do not run with them of the same excess of folly and wicked weakness. But let all such remember that when their vessel sinks all the rigging will be carried away.

The main mast fell. Error is the main mast of the sinking ship. It may assume many different forms, and is made of different kinds of material. Sometimes it is made pure of gold, yet it must fall, and those who trust in it will fall with it—crushed by the very thing in which they had most confidence. Christ says it were better for some men if they had a mill stone tied about their necks and were cast into the sea. Bags of gold are millstones, and perdition is deeper than the deepest sea. Oh, let us not trust in uncertain riches, or in error of any form, lest our main must fall and we be irretrievably lost.

As we must die, let us die nobly. Yes, but how dare we say this, unless we have first lived nobly? How many of us there are, who hope to reap where we have not sown! We are as sure that we must die, as were the brave souls who could meet death so calmly on the ill fated ship, yet how reckless are our lives! We hope to "die nobly" some day and go to Heaven, but we little think how necessary it is to be ready for the summons now, to-day and all the time. Be ye ready, says the good apostle. We may not meet Death on the ocean, or in any of his more terrible forms, yet it is certain that we must meet him somewhere and in some form. Should our ignorance of the hour, when and where, be an excuse for carelessness and indifference? Not at all. God will not accept it as an excuse. We are as liable to accidents on the land as on the sea; disease may find us at home or abroad, at one period of life as well as at another. We know this; observation as well as the Bible teaches it, and God holds us responsible for our knowledge. Let us live nobly every day, and God who watches with a fatherly care over us all, will in his own good time, and loving way provide for the rest.

VITAL CHRISTIANITY.

Much has been said of late in our periodicals, in regard to "stand by the old landmarks the fathers have set," which is all right, but as much as the greater part was said in reference to the external, I thought it not more than just to say a little in regard to the internal part of the Christian religion This we should indeed not neglect to practice, neither leave the other undone. Close observation causes us to doubt whether there will not be many more accused in the day of judgment for dilitoriousness and inactivity in their labors belonging to the body of Christ, than all the others put together. Brethren and sisters, do not startle when I thus express myself, as this article shall be addressed chiefly to us who claim to be followers of Christ. Is there not a cause? Do we not see the welfare of Zion neglected, and the spread of Christianity retarded, and in consequence thereof, many precious souls famishing for the want of the Bread of Life properly dealt out to them? Is it for the want of means, or is it on account of religious liberty? Or, may it be that we hold our money-string too tight for fear some little might slip out in support of the cause? Ponder well. Let us see whether we do our duty, whether we are alive to our noble Christian principles as developed in the lives of the primitive Christians and forefathers of our Church, or whether we have only the name that we live. "I know thy work, that thou hast a name that thou livest and art dead." O we would admonish, in the language of the Revelator, "Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, for I have not found thy works perfect before God." Too many live as drones in a beehive; they have the name brother, sister, and will say when interrogated, "I am a member of your body," and if not told by themselves, very few would know it Their seats in church are very seldom occupied, and if it is, often not until after prayer, hence the most important services are lost. No wonder drowsiness will seize his mind, and perhaps deep sleep will overwhelm him before half of the services are over, and then the cry will be raised against the poor preachers, whose hearts are made to bleed, and their minds confused, and speech almost suffocated in seeing such a callous audience, wholly disinterested in solemn assembly, and their own members sleeping or playing with children in time of services, preaching dull, not interesting services too long. I was so tired sitting, for I had to work so hard last week, which made me so sleepy; if brother, so and so, had preached, I could have kept awake.

Brethren, these things ought not so to be. Such lifeless members are hardly ever seen at church meetings, nor at public meetings on week days The excuse is, either they had this or that to do, or the weather was too unpleasant; but very frequently such are the first to find fault with the proceedings in church council. We want to have a little more life, more vitality displayed in our church members, so that by their lives exemplified the world can know them, and all can see in them the true essence of religion; their souls in full possession of the love of God, and their hearts filled with the vital power of godliness. By an external form and humble garb, men may be deceived, but when vitality is added by a zealous concern for our Christian principles being manifested to the world in a godly life holy conversation and social benevolence, by a daily dying to sin and living to righteousness, showing mercy to the poor, visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and by keeping ourselves unspotted from the world, and no one will be deceived. The Prophet says, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." Remember your baptismal covenant. By being buried with Christ in baptism you made the figure of dying to sin, and burial of the old man, and by rising with him you signify your willingness to walk in newness of life; "hence you have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." "Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another. If any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye, and above all these things put on charity, (love) which is the bond of perfectness.

Let us be on our guard and found active in our Christian duties, lest we be neither cold nor hot but found in luke warm condition, and say we are rich and increased in goods and have need of nothing, and know not that we are wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. Depend upon it, the worst disappointment, and the most aggravated one, will be to that soul, who with the expectation of meeting the approval of God, arrives at the bar of his judge to hear the dreadful sentence, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was anhungered and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked and ye clothed me not; sick and in prison and ye visited me not." May the Lord preserve us from that dreadful doom. Hence my brethren and sisters, let us have a great deal more of vital Christianity.

PRIDE AND PRUDENCE—A SOLILOQUY.

J. S. Flory.

Pride and Prudence both have the first letters alike, but they don't belong to the same family, are no kin whatever—have no resemblance in any particular—they don't dwell together, are at enmity with each other. Prudence was born in heaven—a maid of Paradise, an angel of light from the throne of God. Pride eminates from below, is a sister of satan, an elf, a she demon with a fair countenance. Prudence and heavenly wisdom are sisters, always well spoken of, David loved them. Holy men of all ages adored them, God blessed Prudence. Prudence is fair as the sun, pure as heavenly holiness. She belongs to the essence of pure religion. Prudence dictates aright. Prudence adds enchantment to the life of the Christian. Pride goes before destruction. Hell always follows her! In every instance she is evil spoken of by the Lord of Hosts. Some good meaning people would give her honor, saying, every one ought to have some pride—pride enough to be decent. The term is misapplied. Prudence dictates decency. Pride is an indecent coquett. Just as well say a little drunk is all right, as to say there is no harm in a little pride. A small leak will sink a ship; a little pride will sink a soul! The one millioneth particle of pride is sin. Prudence tells us how to be decent how to be tidy, how to be courteous, how to dress to be healthy and consistent to our religious principles. Prudence and Humility are of the of the same family, never disagree, always play together. Pride soars aloft and looks down with contempt on such as Prudence and Humility. Pride is a bird of fine feathers. Prudence is clothed in down soft as lamb's wool. One feather of Pride will show where the carcass belongs. Pride sings sweet songs and many worship her; in the world she is lauded to the skies, is rich in every mart, while Prudence goes a begging. Pride is in the city, town, and hamlet, in the poor man's house, in the rich man's palace, in the street, in the car, with the school, and in the house of worship. Pride has a seat in the pew by the organ, and in the pulpit! Ye gaping wondering crowd, see how Pride is adored! Nations bow to her shrine to be baptized in her sheen of splendor. A Christian is going after her. Prudence intercedes with the blood dripping cross of Calvary! A few follow her humble plaintive pleadings. But see! pride opens her mouth and belches forth a stream of lava, vapor, hot from the confines of hell, but the followers of Prudence endure it all.

Pride is presumptious, selfwilled, pride is cunning, pride is deceitful, pride is abominable, pride is a vain fool, with her sisters fashion and folly, all of which must fall and be cast into the eternal burnings. Prudence is meek and humble, prudence points the way to God, the way to Heaven. Oh, prudence is to be admired for she hath sense, virtue, and true religion. Oh, shall we ever plead for Pride? Better plead for satan at once, as to plead for his hell-crowned sister. Pride can never elevate but always abases. Before pride, people, nations and kingdoms must fall; or rather they shall fall after her.

Well truly! Pride is not a fit companion for a Christian or a Christian Church. If then pride have a finger holt in the Church, hath seized her "by the forelock." Where, oh where, are the Sampsons in faith that will hurl her hence to her dark abode? Oh, may we hear the echo coming forth from a host, here! here! to the rescue! to the battle! down with pride! down with the usurper! Jesus shall reign!!

THESE THREE.

And now abideth faith, hope, and charity; these three; but the greatest of these is charity. 1 Cor. 13:13.

In these three graces are couched all the graces and all the principles of the participant "of His divine nature, having escaped the corruptions which are in the world through lust." Couched in them not only for the time being, but in these all, or either of them, now, henceforth, and forever.

In faith—not such a faith as devils possess and tremble, but a faith which worketh by love. A faith which worketh by love to God is alive in works first, unto Him that is seizing upon his holy ordinances without hesitation—by love to man, remembering that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever," had such a faith "on Him, should not perish but have eternal life." Hence loving God he loveth man whom God loveth, and seizeth with holy energy upon all the duties toward man. In such a faith is embraced many holy and heavenly principles and a disposition never to grieve or offend God nor man whom God loveth, and for whom Christ died.

Secondly there is hope. There is a hope cherished by the sinner. The hope which is the result of a dead faith is a dead hope. They simply hope to obtain a HOPE of an eternal HOPE. But there is a "living hope," a "lively hope," a "blessed hope." Such a hope is the result of such a faith as above described, a living faith, hence a living hope. One who possesseth a dead hope, only will despair in adversity,—goes to worse rather than to better, perhaps once was moral, now, a drunken sot. Perhaps once was an affectionate consort of a loving parent, but now a grim monster. But one who possesseth that lively, blessed hope, founded and grounded upon the true principles of a living faith that worketh by love, when adversity cometh he fleeth to his anchor, the emblem of hope. When the rains descend, and the floods come and the winds beat upon him he casteth out his anchor. He now finds time to praise and bless his Maker, hoping to receive an hundred fold in this time, and in the world to come eternal life. He can well afford to deal out to the needy around him of his earthly store, and according to his capacity of the bread and water of eternal life, while he leaneth on the anchor.

"Charity is the greatest, because by it are the former suspended and holden. By charity are suspended and holden up, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, and brotherly kindness. Break asunder the steeple and its subjacent will fall. * * * * "And though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned [in hope of an unpromised acceptance with God] and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing. 'Charity suffereth long" but loving God its possessor deviateth not from his law, else it has become transgression and not charity that suffereth long. A charitable long-suffering is not to yield to error, but to continue long in steadfastness and divine example.

The term charity, is now mistaken, or at least substituted by the popular feigned Christendom for the term theological liberality. In conjunction to every "wail in the camp," we hear a pretended prayer for more charity. "Oh for charity on the part of Christ's doctrine that the traditions of men may prevail—that our prudential maxims (heterodoxies) may receive due credence," &c. But ah, my brethren and sisters, true charity is that love of God, characterizing that mind in us which is in Christ, that we lay down our lives for the preservation of the purity of His Gospel, and the salvation of souls; that mind which was in the apostles, —never "shunning to declare all the counsels of God," "not ashamed of the Gospel, because it is the power of God unto salvation," &c; that we will suffer our bodies to undergo all manner of persecutions for the love of souls and the honor of truth and the author thereof. This is charity which suffereth long, which endureth forever in God's element, for of such love is God.

"Charity never faileth," hence is greater than faith, because that which we believe, we know only in part. "But when that which is perfect shall come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Charity is greater than hope, because "hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for?" So when the object hoped for is obtained, then hope passeth away. But while there is a God to love, charity faileth not for "God is love." Turn, Oh! God, my heart toward thee, that it may believe. Employ my hands "to do of thy good pleasure," and guide my feet in the "right way." And this with all thy Israel everywhere.

ON PRAYER.

There is great necessity of sincerity and honesty in our religious duties. They are not to be done to be seen of men. If they are, they can not be performed acceptably. God looks on the heart, nor is it possible to deceive him. And of what avail is it to deceive men. How poor and pitiable is the reward of the hypocrit. How contemptible the praise of men when God is displeased. How awful the condition of such a one beyond the grave. Christ has in a particular manner urged the duty of prayer. He has given a model for prayer and nothing can equal this composition in simplicity. At the same time it is so simple that it can be understood by a child; it contains the expression of all the wants of man at any age.

The duty of prayer is urged by every consideration. None but God can provide us; none but he can forgive and guide and support us, none but he can bring us into heaven. He is ever ready to hear us, and the humble he sends not away empty. Those who ask receive, and they who seek find. How natural and proper then is prayer. How strange that any one is willing to go to eternity with this sad reflection: I have gone through this world, spent my time of probation, wasted my strength, and am dying, and have never prayed. How awful will be the reflection of that soul through all eternity. I was offered eternal life, but I never asked for it. I lived from day to day, and from year to year in God's world, breathed his air, rioted on his benificence, forgot his goodness, and never once asked him to save my soul. Who will be to blame if the prayerless soul is lost? Secret and family prayer should be observed. All have the same necessity of prayer, are exposed to the same dangers, tread on the borders of the same heaven or hell. How should the voice of praise and prayer go up as incense in the morning, and rise as rich perfome in the shades of each evening. What more lovely objects on earth is there, than one in the bloom of health and the tidiness of youth, bending with reverence before the King of heaven; seeking forgiveness, peace, guidance, and salvation. And what a strange, misguided, piteous soul is he who never prays.

Forgiveness is essential to prayer. If we come to God, harboring malice, and unwilling to forgive, we have his solemn assurance that we shall never be ourselves forgiven, but we should come with a meek, penitent, and forgiving heart, and then He will forgive us. Oh! how heaven-like it is to see the father and mother coming around the family altar with their little family, to pour out their hearts in prayer. It looks heaven-like, and as if they would meet one day above to help compose the family of God. Oh, what a joyful meeting that will be, when parents shall meet their little ones that now sleep under the sod who have often met us when away from home at our return with the little hands raised saying, "papa I sot you come home again."

BUILDING CHARACTER.

In youth we commence to build a structure called character. Almost unconsciously we find ourselves with others on the voyage of life. Everything around us seems pleasant, and the future looks bright and prosperous to our youthful minds, as we are not aware of the many shoals our barks must pass, on the rough ocean of life.

With all bright before us, we travel in the beginning of our journey with the idea that life is very pleasant, and are surprised to hear elder ones speak of the sorrows and troubles that life affords.

Thus we enter upon our journey, and while traveling we are all building characters. At this period of life, there being a difference in tastes, dispositions and surrounding circumstances, all do not build alike. Some act upon the principles of right, and build moral characters. Each one adds little by little to his structure—builds on day by day, and year by year, until his building is erected.

Behold what a difference! The former has built himself a character which is good, honorable, and which will qualify him for the duties of life; the latter has perhaps steeped himself in crime, until he is unfit for the society of the good. The former has rowed against the current; the latter floated with it. Their barks are far apart.

When we have traveled thus far on our journey, if we have tried to erect a moral character, we have perhaps not found all so pleasant as anticipated in the outset. We have found many obstacles in our pathway, many difficulties to surmount. We have no doubt noticed, that among those who have rowed or floated, one now and then was called from the stage of action, who perhaps started with us on the journey. While we reflect upon this, we think we might be one of that number, and this causes us to look at our building. We think we have built a noble structure, a moral character, and are much better than others far down the current, yet sometimes we doubt about it. We soon come to the conclusion that it will do us good only in this life. Our doubts frequently arise, and finally our building falls to the ground; our good is but filthy rags in the sight of God.

We find in God's Word, that if we would be wise master-builders we must dig deeper and build Christian characters. To build such a character we must first have a foundation. The apostle Peter says, "Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect precious: and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded." "Ye are no more strangers." &c. "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone." With such a sure foundation as this, why need we fear to build? Nothing can remove our foundation; it is too strong. But we must dig deep, as there is much rubbish to be removed; there is danger of being foolish and building on the sand. Paul says again, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

If we have this foundation, it is next necessary to know how to build thereon. We must not stop at the foundation as many do; we have only commenced the building. "Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble: Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." We should be very careful in building, or the temple in which we are each a stone, will not be "fitly framed together." "Ye also as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Our life is short at longest, and our life-work should be to build such a Christian character that will fit us for Heaven, for the society of angels.

Some professed Christians can't think much on God because their minds are exhausted thinking of worldly matters. They borrow the blessings of God to pay off mammon. When the day of paying interest comes, it will be a sad day indeed.—J. S. Flory.

AN ADDRESS TO OUR PATRONS.

"The Pilgrim" to our patrons
Who dwell afar and near,
Extends a cordial greeting,
As dies another year.

We've aimed through all its pages
To feed the Christian mind;
Inviting man to lighten
The burdens of his kind.

We've held aloft the banner,
Of Heaven's mighty King;
Whilst o'er the towering ramparts,
The watchword loud did ring.

Guard well, "the ancient landmarks"
The pioneers have set,
Who trod the way before us,
With eager longing feet.

They guide the way-worn traveler,
Along the narrow way;
And speak of bliss immortal,
In realms of endless day.

Incited by no motive
Of selfishness or gain;
We've sought the cross of Jesus,
In meekness to sustain.

How well we have succeeded
Eternity will tell;
Of those who've been persuaded
In Zion's courts to dwell.

Though marred by defects human;
Which oft our judgments sway;
God looks upon the motive,
Our hearts to Him display.

If any weak uncomely
Opinion has obtained;
Pray aid it not to rankle,
Or to dissension tend.

But crush the thought of evil,
Ere it assume control,
And rack with fierce convulsions,
The powers of the soul.

But how has time's hand fallen
Upon the faithful band,
Who read the Weekly Pilgrim
O'er all this goodly land.

Who by their aid have lighted
The gloom of weary days,
Encouragement imparted,
In life's uneven maze.

While some have caught the gleaming,
Which linger o'er the path
Connecting earth with Heaven;
Trod by the feet of death.

A number have gone over
The cold and sluggish tide;
And dwell with "God's anointed,"
Among the sanctified.

But those who still unsummoned,
On earth's dim sphere remain;
How sore have been their conflicts,
How galling passions chains.

How varied were the phazes,
Of each ensuing day.
To each expectant bosom,
As it swiftly sped away.

How many souls have gladdened,
Beneath its genial smiles,
Whilst others fell the victim
Of Satans deepest wiles.

How oft has sorrow entered
And severed golden ties;
Transplanting lovely flow'rets
Beyond the starry skies.

And yet what priceless blessings,
Have cheered despondent hearts
Who sought the light of heaven;
Forsaking mammon's mart.

Abundant grace is offered
To all who Christ obey;
And tread the shining portal
Of mercy's narrow way.

The hand of God, has opened
And deep affliction poured;
On portions of our country
Has fallen fierce his sword.

Reminding men that mercy,
And justice, both abide
Within the mind eternal,
And blend in righteous tide.

Evincing boundless wisdom,
And love for guilty souls;
Though men, in awe, may wonder
Why streams of anguish roll.

But let us not mistake Him,
God cannot be unkind;
Behind His frowning justice
Doth sunny mercy shine.

Oh! let us hail with gladness,
The rosy infant year.
And bless the God who gave it;
No cause have we to fear.

For Jesus will sustain us;
His promises behold.
More precious to the Christian
Than stars of ophirs gold.

For Him we mean to battle,
Regardless of the frowns
Of Satan's fiendish minions;
Nor lay our armor down.

Whilst power is imparted
To wield the Spirits sword.
Or bind a wayward captive
Who's wandering from his Lord.

Now thankful to our patrons,
And all our friends so kind;
We hope within the future
They many joys may find.

And thus, beneath God's blessing,
We wend through life our way.
To meet beyond the river
Where shines eternal day.

THE PAST, THE PRESENT AND FUTURE.

The past, Ah, what is it? It is a dreadful reality that looms up before us in all its greatness. How wonderful the thought, that one hundred years ago the world was populated by its millions, to-day there may be a few who were then dandled upon the knee, that live to tell the tale, but the great mass, the world, now sleep among the silent nations of the dead, all gone, to their long homes. But we shall not go back so far, as the year that has just closed, is freighted with sufficient subject matter for the present purpose. Since we last, entered a New Year, with happy and jovial hearts, many sorrowful and strange things have intervened. Many who started out with us in the beginning of 1873 are no more. Their number is told, and their day of grace is past, forever past, and it, even now pains our heart to think of what may be their impending doom. But when we think of those that fell asleep in Christ--we are made to take courage and thank God.

The year that is just past, was fraught with many great and some terrible events. It was a year of commotion, travail, sorrow, and death. According to the ancient prophecies, nation arose against nation, brother against brother, the hands that God made to administer to each others wants, were used for each others destruction, and while a few, for braveries done, received the world's empty applause, thousands fell victims to their worldly ambition. Not only did cruel war cast its saddening gloom over the nations, but devouring fires, devastating storms, and destructive floods prevailed, and to cap the whole, the great financial storm has burst in upon us, and threatens to revolutionize the whole nation. Those who, a few months ago, reveled in sin, as money kings, are to-day, bereft of their idol, and a few are reaping their wages in the felon's cell. Was the world filled with such characters, the past would truly be a subject for sorrowful meditation, and we might well wish that it was past forever. But when we accept the truth as given by the Revelator, "their works shall follow them" our souls are made glad, and we look forward with an ever increasing hope to the time when the past shall again return, bringing its rewards with it. Seeing then that another year is past, let us take instruction from it, and forgetting those things which are behind, let us reach forward to those things which are before.

The present is that portion of time which is said to be ours, not because we are, in any way, connected with its durance, but because God has made us free agents, and set before us life and death, for our choice. If we choose life, the power of death is destroyed, but if we choose death life will be taken from us. This liberty has been set before us every day since we were able to make a choice, and it seems strange indeed that any of us should choose death in preference to life, especially when it is promised on such easy terms, and followed by such glorious rewards. The present seems only to embrace "to-day" "To-day if ye hear my voice harden not your hearts," is the gentle wooings of the spirit to us all. That voice is ever present with us and we are glad to know that, it is even to-day with us. The present is our only time for action. All the labor that is performed in the world is accomplished in this short period of time. On it depends every thing, our present, our future, and our eternal all. This should be an important consideration, especially when so much is at stake. The Christian life is composed of good deeds and they are the result of present action. If we spend every day in performing good deeds, our past will result in a glorious future,

The future, is a prospective present, a something that we hope for but may never receive. It is a division of time that belongs to God and not to us, ever looked for, but never reached, as to-day is ever present, so is to-morrow ever in the future. It is a book unopened, a page unturned, a curtain unlifted, and those who defer the present for its advantages are unwise.

It has been declared, "Time was," this we have realized in the year that has just past. "Time is." This we are now enjoying, and may it be especially precious as we now enter the New Year, a new scene of time. We hope all our dear readers will make new resolves to live better than they ever did before, to commence it in the service of the Lord, continue in His service and end it in His service, for the great prophecy ended in saying, "but time shall be no longer." This must be fulfilled in us shortly, and as we know not the time, let us ever be ready, so that the day come not upon us unawares, or as a thief in the night. Wishing you all a happy and prosperous New Year, we submit our few roving thoughts for the present, hoping that by the time our pilgrimage may end with you for 1874 we may all be wiser and better by our sojourning together.

MAKE A RESOLVE.

We have now, dear readers, entered a new period of time, and just as we bid adieu to the old shaggy tattered year of 1873, our mind dwells some in the past. The past scenes and experiences are reproduced now more especially by the things which have preceded. The closing number of the present volume brings to our mind vividly the close of last year, and thus by association many of the events, the scenes, the experiences and the doings of the past, are brought before the mind. This is certainly one of the grand laws of our being. It is well for the mind to revert, and bring up before it afresh the doings of the past and consider them whether they be good or evil. We have no doubt, dear readers, as we bade farewell to 1873, thought much on our way, and what feelings of remorse many of us have experienced! How wicked have been our thoughts, how wicked our doings: how often have we neglected our duty, how often have we done the things we should not have done, and left undone the things we should have done. All of us will, no doubt, in considering our past actions, have much to regret, but there is a time coming when our remorse will still be greater. We can not now bring up all our past misdoings and even what we can, the dim vista of the past partially obscures, but there is a time coming when the mind will be so expanded and comprehensive that every evil thought and action will be reproduced in the mind clearly. What a vast and dark record of evil deeds and thoughts will there come up before us! What remorse must then seize the soul! Ah yes, that will be a time in which the dark side of our life will be shown clearly, and the thought of that time, should surely cause us to endeavor to direct our thoughts more to things of a heavenly and divine nature.

Our minds, no doubt, revert to pleasing scenes and events during the past year, but when we come to compare our doings with the law of right, we will discover that we are carnal, yea, unholy and indeed our good deeds may be few in comparison with the evil. Should we not then at the commencement of this new period of time make a resolve to do better in the future Ah.? yes, brethren and sisters let us make a determined resolution that we will live closer to our God, that we will love him more, so that there be no uncertainty as regards our acceptance with Him. It is for want of love to God that we become so unholy, and doubts and fears intervene to mar our peace and joy. "Perfect love casteth out fear," and "he that feareth is not perfect in love." If then our past sins have been such as to cause us to have doubts as to our acceptance with God, we can feel assured that we have not loved him as we should. Let us then resolve to cultivate the love of God in our hearts, and this may be done by meditating more upon what he has done for us. His goodness, His mercy is daily and hourly lavished upon us although we are disobedient and ungrateful. When we contemplate upon these things our affections will surely be drawn more towards God.

But there is another class of individuals that should be making good resolutions. There are those who, like the prodigal, have wandered away from the Father's House, and who, perhaps, feel that they are in want. There are others again who are wasting their substance in riotous living, and do not feel that they are in want. Their time, talent, and energy is spent in the service of the adversary. Oh, that a famine might pervade your kingdom, that you might be made to feel your destitution, and make the glorious resolve to arise and go to your father. There are many who are perhaps making ing this resolve and have determined that before another New Year's day they will be in the service of Jesus. But how often these resolutions are not carried out. You resolve to go but never get ready. What do resolutions amount to if they are not carout. If resolutions alone would save any body what a vast mass of the people would be saved. But this will not do. God can not be pleased with those who are always going to consecrate themselves to him at some time but never get ready. He can only look upon them as robbers, as they rob Him of time that ought to be devoted to His service so long as they procrastinate the day of grace. How many have spent their time in this way, waiting for a more convenient season, and thus waited just a little too long. The time allotted to you to make preparations may end suddenly, and if you are not ready when Jesus comes or death overtakes you, you can not be among the redeemed who hail His presence with delight and say, "Lo we have waited for thee, we will be glad and rejoice in thy salvation." May God help all who are yet out of the ark of safety to make a determined resolution and carry it out before the period of time which we have just entered shall have closed. What thou doest, do it quickly for the day of thy salvation may be near at hand. "To-day if you hear His voice harden not your hearts." J. B. B.

OUR EDITORIAL.

We feel that we owe an apology to our readers for the character and subject matter of our editorials for the few past months, and we are assured if you knew our circumstances and the amount of labor we perform, you would accept it as being in place.

Our new building not only cost us a large amount of money, but of labor and care, so much so that our attention was considerably drawn from our publication. About one half of our time was spent at the building, so that we were necessitated to do much of our editorial labor at night, and that very often while others were snugly laid away for repose. We are not of those who sail through life on flowery beds of ease, but with our hands, perform a goodly share of our own labor, which is not confined to writing editorials alone, but to keeping books, sending out Almanacs, books, papers, answering inquiries, correspondents and a host of other things belonging to the business. So you see, work is our element, and we only feel at home when it is piled all around us. All our labor would not trouble us in the least if we were perfect enough to always remain in the right frame of mind. But unfortunately, this we cannot always do, neither could anybody else short of a saint, if placed in our position.

It is true, we have our seasons of joy, so much so that at times our cup seems almost to overflow. Our mails are all fraught with missles of love and cheer—everybody seems to appreciate our labor and pray for its success, but then comes the bittter. A few, during this season of editorial blessedness, have been at work carefully picking out our errors and short comings, and then send them home with a storm, accompanied with the pleasant information that they do not wish a paper that admits discussions, advocates Sunday Schools, and disapproves of random sermons. The PILGRIM has been as free from discussions, as could well be expected.

In advocating Sunday Schools, we only do what Annual Meeting has done, and as for random sermons, we do not have much faith in them, as we don't believe in a random religion under any circumstances. We do not allow such expressions to mar our feelings against those whom we call brethren, but attribute it to that weakness of judgment which we all manifest at times, yet they have their bearings and cause dark clouds to cross our pathway that might be avoided, if all would be a little more considerate.

But we have now determined to mind none of these things, but exert our whole energy in the great work of promulgating to the world a pure and primitive Christianity, and that we may be enabled to accomplish so good a work, we solicit every reader who has a desire to stand by the truth and defend the "ancient landmarks," to aid us by contributing for our columns.

GOOD WORDS AND PRAYERS

Our patrons in renewing their subscriptions are giving us many words of encouragement, such as "I wish you success," "may God help you," &c., and we can assure you they are highly appreciated. They encourage us much and strengthen us for the performance of our duties. Please do not withhold your words of encouragement, for we need them, and when you have an opportunity to speak a word in favor of our work please do so, as "words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver," and may do much to present our labors in a favorable light. There is one thing we especially desire on the part of our patrons. We earnestly entreat you to remember us in in your prayers. We have great confidence in the prayers of our brethren and sisters. It is said that the prayers of the righteous availeth much, and when we think of the many family altars where, each day, is expressed orally emotions of gratitude to the Giver of all good in behalf of the cross-bearing children everywhere, what consolation it would be to us to know that we are remembered there; that God is entreated, by you to bless our labors so far as is consistent with his holy will, Brethren and sisters please remember us at your family alars, remember us in your secret devotions, for we need your prayers. In God alone we trust, and with the hope that He will be with us, and leaning on His almighty arm, we come to you again in this new period of time, with renewed energy and a determined purpose.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, while we are receiving so many words of cheer from you, and while you have so heartily expressed your willingness to stand by us and aid us in our labors, we can now truly, and heartily wish you all A HAPPY NEW YEAR. J. B. B.

ELD JOHN KNISLY of Plymouth, Ind., informs us that he is now dwelling among his own people, and that he and his wife, lately sister Rebecca Enyeart from our congregation, James Creek, are living alone—that his wife is very well pleased with her new home, she likes the country, the neighbors and the members, and is well satisfied with her late change in life. We feel to compliment both in their lucky choice, and hope they may live long to enjoy each others society.

After giving some personal information, he gives the following, which we insert as being of more general interest.

"The health of our country is very good. We have much rain and but little snow as yet. It is raining today, (Dec. 13), and is very warm. There is plenty of everything for man and beast so that there is no need to complain. We think of having a series of meetings in our arm of the church before the holidays, if the Lord will, and we wish you were here. We have not yet appointed the time, but next Saturday is our church meeting and then we will set the time.

Oh! how we would like to be with you and converse on heavenly things. Dear members, let us all set our affections on things above as we go along, and if we do so God will bless us for He has said so, and what God has promised he will do, and we need not doubt. If we make God the delight of our hearts He will give us our desires. While in this world, we want but little, nor shall we want that little long, but while we need it God will give it. If we take God for our leader we will be sure to have Him for our provider. We must take care to have the law of God in our hearts. Whatever we desire and God withholds, we may rest assured that it would do us no good could we obtain it, or the goodness of God would compel Him to give it. No father loves his child any the less for withholding what he knows would indulge it, neither does our Heavenly Father evince a want of love to His children by suffering them to cry loud and long, and after all refuse to give what he well knows would harm them. But of this we may rest assured, the desire of the righteous shall be granted in some way or other, and in that way too, which will be most to their advantage, for when the Lord does not remove the burden from the back, he never fails to fit the back for the burden It matters but little where we are, if Christ be with us His presence will dispel our gloom and turn a prison into a palace"

Our best respects to you all. From your well wishing brother and sister.

CHURCH FESTIVALS, ETC.

Among the curious items of history on this subject, the following is worthy of mention:

"The young ladies and gentlemen connected with Grace (Episcopal) Church were entertained last night at the residence of D. E. Taylor, on Benton street. Theatricals and dancing were the main features."

"Theatricals and dancing," the "main features" of an entertainment by the young people of a Christain Church for the laudable purpose of "raising money for the Lord!" Truly these are "perilous times." —Advent Times.

THE WEATHER for the past few weeks has been unusually mild and seems to be a fulfillment of the declaration that God will temper the wind for the shorn flocks. Thousands of the poor have been shorn of their garments through the effects of the late panic, and had it been followed by a tight and severe winter, the condition of many would have been unfortunate indeed, but God is the ruler of the universe and will do right.

—The Chinese government has formed the plan of educating 150 Chinese youths in this country. Sixty have already arrived, and are pursueing their studies in Massachusetts and Connecticut, and the remainder will be sent over at the rate of thirty annully. They are picked, young, and between the ages of twelve and fourteen years, and come here accompanied by English speaking Chinese guardians and tutors.

AGENTS wanted. We would be pleased to employ several hundred more agents to solicit subscribers for the PILGRIM. We intend to make it just the paper the Church and the world needs, free from wrangling discussions and full of living Christianity. Every brother, sister or friend that thinks they could gather us a few names, should send for our Almanac and prospectus.

The Pilgrim Almanac for 1874 is of more than ordinary interest gotten up in the best of style and should be in every home in the Brotherhood. It will be sent FREE to every subscriber for the PILGRIM for 1874.

ELD. D. P. SAYLOR, in addition to his present labors, takes charge of the Middletown Valley Church, Frederick Co., Md.

PUBLISHER'S ITEMS.

No. 2., may be a little after the time on account of fixing up and getting our new office in working condition. This No. will be printed in the old office, but folded and mailed at Huntingdon and will be sent out as early as possible so as to reach some of our readers by the 1st. of January, 1874, and give our agents and friends an opportunity of seeing the PILGRIM in its enlarged form, hoping that it will give such general satisfaction as to induce all to put forth renewed efforts to increase our list. Now is the time to work, and our terms are so fair and liberal that anybody can succeed in gathering us a few names if the effort is made. We will accept the names of all such as are honest and will pay during the year. This is as liberal as can be desired.

A brother says: "Next to the Bible I consider the PILGRIM contains the best reading to put before my family."

THE POOR. — There are a large number of this class have made demands upon our liberality. For them we are willing to do all that our circumstances will allow, and have not refused a single case. All we ask of such is, pay us all you can from the regular price down to 50 cents or even less, but there are few indeed but what can do that much where there is a will. In some cases our agents give all their percentage towards paying for such, but we think it would be much better if each Church, or members, would all throw in a mite and thus furnish their poor with the PILGRIM. Brethren and sisters, think of these things.

If you want to place good instructive reading matter before your children subscribe for the PILGRIM. Only $1.50.

CORRECTION.—A small part of this edition was run off before the address at the head of the first page was changed. Please notice that our address is changed. Henceforth you will please mail all matter &c., to H. B. Brumbaugh, Box 172, Huntingdon Pa.

GOOD NEWS.—It would be a real pleasure for us to give extracts from the many encouraging letters we are now receiving, but as we have so much other interesting reading for this No. we will forbear for the present by saying, God bless you dear brethren sisters and friends for your words of cheer and encouragement. They make our soul glad.

IF you want to do your brother or friend a lasting favor, persuade him to subscribe for the PILGRIM. $1.50 pays for a years subscription, and an interesting and useful Almanac is given FREE.

CROWDED OUT.—On account of a more than usual amount of correspondence &c., Youth's Department is again crowded out. This may occur occasionally during the winter but we intend to keep up this department, and give it more attention in a few weeks.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

After an elapse of six years, I left my home in Altoona, Iowa, and took the train for Chicago Ill., where I arrived on the 11th of November and remained until the 12th. It is wonderful to see the progress in building up that part of the city that was recently burnt out. Arrived at Indianapolis on the 12th, visited my cousin Conrad Baker, Ex Governor of that State. Had a pleasant time renewing our former friendship with him and family. From here went to Cambridge City, then to Hagerstown, where I formerly spent sixteen years of my mortal career. Visited friends and brethren, and preached some ten or twelve sermons at different places in the Brethren's meeting houses, but in consequence of bad roads, and inclement weather, the meetings were not very well attended, but had the best of order and attention to the word preached. I found the members and friends well with a few exceptions. Sister Susan Hardman, wife of Eld. David Hardman deceased, was very sick with dropsy. I had the pleasure, though mingled with deep sorrow, of being one of the Elders that were called to attend to the holy anointing with oil in the name of the Lord. I also found my aged motherinlaw and sister in Christ, Christina Shults, in very delicate health. Bro. Abram Teeter was also sick, but with these exceptions I found all well and doing well temporally and spiritually. The ministers of this part of the Church of Christ have energy, fidelity and zeal that is truly commendable. May God abundantly bless their labors of love.

By the kind providence of God I was again permitted to return to my home on the 15th of December. Found all well for which I try to feel truly thankful. But to my susprise I found my son George W., and son-in-law, Reiman, through the instrumentality of Eld. Flory, greatly excited and strongly in the notion to go to Colorado with their dry goods store. Bro. Flory gives a good report of that goodly land.

Now dear brethren, I feel that I should enter upon my labors of love with fresh determination, and by the help of God to accomplish at least some good, which I will try to do.

CHURCH NEWS.

We have not much church news to send at this time. We generally have two communions each year, but last spring we were deprived of the blessed privilege of having one, on account of some trouble, but thanks be to the great and good Father, we succeeded in getting the matter adjusted, so that we could, and did have one this fall. On the 4th and 5th of October, we went to the Rush Creek Church, to attend a Communion meeting there. The weather was very unfavorable, and therefore, the congregation was small. We had an excellent meeting. Good order prevailed, and an excellent spirit seemed to pervade the hearts of all present. Two dear souls were received by baptism into the fold. Brother David Workman of Ashland, Eli Stoner and the writer were the speakers present from other congregations.

On the 11th of Oct., we had our Communion meeting. It rained on Saturday, and therefore we had a small congregation, but the best of order and good attention. On the Lord's day preaching again, large attendance, good order and attention. We were disappointed in getting help, and therefore the labors fell upon us at home, nevertheless we had a good meeting.

On Friday the 17th, we took the cars for the Danville Church, in Knox county, Ohio. At Newark I met Bro. Frank H. Bradley, formerly of Va. At Mt. Vernon the cars did not make connection, and we had to stop over night. Staid with sister Sarah Earnest, was very well entertained having stopped with her many times in former years. We felt quite at home. Saturday morning we again took the train for Danville, where we arrived in safety at 9 a. m. Here we met Bro. Isaac Ross, one of the speakers in that church. We went with him a short distance to his house, and took dinner with him and the kind sister. It was then raining. Bro. Jacob Ross—father of Isaac,—conveyed us to the place of meeting, 6 miles distant, where we preached at 3 p. m., communion at night, and the best order I ever saw at a communion meeting. The speakers present were Brethren Eld. Morgan Workman, David M. Workman, his son, Samuel Muntis, Bro. Kelly, David Brubaker, and the writer, besides their own speakers. On the Lord's day had two sermons preached. In the forenoon Bro. David M. Workman preached a good sermon, had good attention and a good feeling prevailed. In the afternoon, I again preached, went home with brother Elisha Ross, staid all night there and had a pleasant time. On Monday, Bro. Ross took us to brother Jacob Ross's, rained on us all the way, dined with them, and then departed from the brethren there, and took the train for home, where we arrived safely between 5 and 6 o'clock, p. m. Found all well. Thank the Lord. Many thanks to the dear brethren for their kindness, and to brother Bradley for his company, which we enjoyed so much. May the good Lord bless us all, is our prayer. Amen.

Dear Editors:—It is a sorrowful, and to me not a satisfactory reflection, to know that my communications, written for the PILGRIM, are calculated to offend. I say written expressly for the PILGRIM, because I am well assured that the editors of no other periodical work now printed, would have the liberality or the firmness, to insert them; for it is an almost universal rule among the conductors of periodical works and journals in this day, to keep back the truth if it is likely to give offence, and seek to please rather than to be useful. I am far from wishing to offend, but I write from a sense of duty, and therefore am not permitted to temporize or support error.

With regard to what I have stated concerning our missionary undertakings, I here observe, I would be sorry to discourage anything calculated to do good, or to promote the happiness of mankind, and did the missionaries go forth in the spirit of love and support the cause of Christ by example as well as precept, I should consider it among the greatest of crimes to speak against them. But this is far from being the case, and as it is proper that the subject should be represented in its true light, I shall continue to forward to you such as may be presented to me. I am aware it is a prevalent opinion that this is an age of great light, that the Gospel is making progressive advances in the world, and in every part of Christendom the people are submitting to the yoke of Christ; that the subjects of Paganism are ready in large numbers to bow to the sceptre of Immanuel. I am disposed wholly, to call in question the correctness of these views. The present age may, in comparison with those that preceded it, in some sense, be considered an age of increased light. The human mind has been studied with more attention, the natural and civil rights are better understood, and more clearly defined, governments have been established on more enlarged and equitable principles, and even Christianity, by opposing the rational proofs of its truth and divinity against the flimsy and poisoned shafts of infidelity, has recommended itself to more general acceptance. But it is not a base admission of the truths of Christianity, that can make us Christians indeed, or entitle us to the kingdom of heaven. As they were not all Israel that were of Israel, so they are not all Christians that are of Christendom. It is true, there is in the world much show of religion and piety, and to a superficial view this may be identified with the substance. But I believe the sincere and discriminating observer will readily perceive that all that glitters is not gold, that a great part of what occasionally passes for Christian devotion and evangelical piety is falsely so called. It is but the production of the active disposition of the human mind unrenewed by the sanctifying influences of divine love, and what in apostolic language is emphatically styled will worship. The time is coming, and how soon it will arrive, is known only to God, when the foundation of each of us will be tried, when we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and any other covering than that of his spirit will be of no avail.

It is then of incalculable importance to us that we know on what foundation we are building our hopes of eternal life. Let us cultivate an ingenious spirit and be willing to try ourselves. Try yourselves says the apostle, prove yourselves, know ye not your ownselves that Jesus Christ is in you, except you are reprobates? Why should we deceive ourselves or permit others to deceive us? The day will declare our work of what kind it is, and we must be individually accountable to God. If we are deceived the loss will be our own. Let us be careful then to judge for ourselves in these important matters relating to salvation, and not be mislead by an implicit attachment to others or their opinions, however high or sacred may be their character, lest the blind leading the blind both fall into the ditch.

If we possess an ingenious spirit, we shall judge with impartiality of what is said or written with a view to benefit mankind, however opposed it may be to the particular systems in which we are involved, or however it may be at variance with the sentiments we have previously entertained.

Dear brother Editor: —In looking over the PILGRIM I see that you solicit church news, and as I have never seen any correspondence from this arm of the church, I will try, in my weakness, to give a little sketch of the church here in Kansas, known as the Grasshopper Valley Church. This church was organized in the year 1863 with eight or ten members, by brother John Bowers of Douglass Co., and Wm. Gish, the latter being chosen our Elder. We now number 75 or 100, with six speakers and six deacons. We are situated in Jefferson Co., 35 miles west of Leavenworth City, and 35 miles east of Topeka, the capital of the State, and 5 miles east of Rock Creek Station, which is on the Atchison, Topeka and Santefee railroad.

We now make an appeal to the brethren that are traveling through the different States to make this one of their stopping places. Our brethren are still laboring for the good cause wherein they have been called, and when I hear them pleading so hard for sinners to turn from their wickedness and join in with the people of God, and still they give no heed, I sometimes think it would be no wonder if our brethren would become discouraged. But then if they do their duty as watchmen, it is all that is required of them. Brethren and sisters, we should be engaged in offering up our prayers to God in behalf of our brethren, that they may be able to declare the whole truth to a sinful and a dying world. Brethren and sisters, we should let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glority our Father which is in Heaven. I sometimes think that we are getting too cold. O, can we not have that love for one another that our Savior had for us? If so, we can then say in truth that we are the children of God.

Now brother Brumbaugh, I have been a reader of the PILGRIM for the last two years, and you can consider me a subscriber for 1874. Please continue sending it. I am trying to get subscribers and will send them in as soon as possible.

A. PEARSOLL.

Osawkee, Kansas.

Dear Editors: —As you are soliciting church news and as the brethren in the Panther Creek Church, Dallas Co., Iowa do not report, I will drop you a few items. The ark is stil rolling on, and the ranks are filling up slowly. Some 8 or 9 have yielded up their all, and manifested their faith in Jesus by drawing Christ all around them in the babtismal waters, besides a good many by letter, which has in four years time, increased our number to some 60 odd. There were but four members here prior to our organization. We have preaching every Sabbath, and every two weeks weeks at two places. A great interest is manifested and all the respect exhibited that cou'd be looked for. The calls in every direction are, come and preach for us. Our hoart some times burns with sympathy for those hungry souls who are wishing so eagerly to be fed upon the sincere milk of the word. But our labors are mostly confined around home, yet we hope the time is not for distant when those that are seeking after truth will be accommodated. But with sorrow we inform you that one from our ranks has bid adieu to all that is mortal. A sincere mother in Israel has departed.

Sister —. Nye departed this life, Dec. 6, 1873, aged 45 years, some months and some days. She was an affectionate mother, loved by all who associated with her. The family which consisted of a father, mother and an adopted daughter, moved here last spring from Ohio. But we are now bereft of one who gives life in the family circle. The funeral was attended by brethren C. Long and Robert Badger.

J. B. DIEHL.

Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh: —I am always anxious to read church news of the Brotherhood, and while reading the news of the progress of God's cause in the different parts of our beloved Brotherhood, I thought perhaps a few words from this part of God's moral vineyard might also be interesting to the brethren and sisters.

Seven months ago we numbered 4 members in this vicinity, since then there were 9 more added by baptism We belong to the Waterloo Congregation, but we live south-east and a good distance away from the main body of the congregation, yet we have regular preaching once every two weeks. The Waterloo Congregation extends over a large territory, which makes it rather hard for the ministering brethren, in our congregation, because they have so many places to preach. But the brethren in the adjoining, (South Waterloo Congregation) assist the the ministers in our s, by filling some of the appointments.

I wish that some of the many brethren who are moving West from the Eastern States, would settle in our neighborhood, so that we would have some help. There are some hard cases here. Two weeks ago one of the oldest men of our neighborhood, came to our meeting and was so badly intoxicated that he could hardly walk, and in time of prayer he was talking, laughing, cursing and swearing, but the same man has been at our meetings a number of times before, and behaved himself very well. When liquor is in, wit is out. I suppose we must take the bitter with the sweet, and be thankful to God that it is no worse than it is. Many of the young folks behave badly, but perhaps they may change their evil ways some day. D. B. TEETER.

Enterprise, Iowa.

Dear Bro. Brumbaugh: —I hereby invite the PILGRIM to our secloded home in Kansas, the coming year, for secluded as we are from the Brotherhood, I would rather do without one meal a day, than do with out the PILGRIM. There are none of the brethren nearer than twelve miles of us, and we have heard them preach but three times in eight months.

We have taken the PILGRIM for two years, and the good things that it contains, is as manna to our hungry souls. Sometimes its visits are not as prompt as we would like them to be, sometimes they miss one week, then we get two at once. When they start promptly on their journey we get them the same week they are printed. Please be prompt for you know not the souls that you make glad by so doing.

If I thought that I could swell your list of subscription, I would willingly make an effort, but times are hard and no brethren in our neighborhood. I have tried a little, but none seem willing to subscribe for a religious paper. Yours in Christ.

W. M. WISE.

Lyndon, Osage Co., Kansas.

BUFFALO, Col., Dec., 10 '73.

—Bro. H.B. I will inform our numerous friends through the PILGRIM that we have left Greely and moved to this place a few days ago. This place was first called Beaver, but for good reasons it has been changed to that of Buffalo. It is immediatly on the rail road running from Julesburg, a point on the Union Pacific R. R., up the South Platt Valley to Denver and the mountains. This is a beautiful valley with large bodies of rich bottom land, much of which is yet open for preemption or homestead. The weather for a few days past, has been decidedly winterish, a few inches of snow on the ground. It is singular to see thousands of cattle ranging on the plains, same as in summer, and seem to be doing finely. Stock men do not feed any thing to their cattle during the severest weather.

We are all well, and well pleased with Colorado.

Our address is still Greely, Weld Co,, Colorado. We expect to have an office here as soon as the R. R. is in runnig order which we are assured will be in the early spring if not sooner. Truly yours in Christian love. J. S. FLORY.

Dear Pilgrim: — There are thirteen common free schools in Shirley township, taught by five male and eight female teachers. But two weeks ago they were taught by four male and nine female teachers. Why the change? One of them a young lady about twenty years of age died.

Two weeks ago her prospects for long life and happiness and usefolness in the world were better than mine in all candid human judgement, but now her earthly career is ended. She has gone to receive her eternal reward. Her body has been consigned to the earth whence it came.

It may be said of her by men, that she was bad, good, or indifferent, but she has gone before the only just judge of all the earth, and all that men, angels or demons can say or do for or against her, will avail nothing to change His purpose. Wherever or whenever she meekly, gently and silently bore evil spoken against her falsly for Christ's sake, a great reward was assigned to her in Heaven.

Our Heavenly Father is so conscious and observant of verything, that not even a sparrow falleth to the ground without His notice. Therefore no one need fear that this young lady will not be justly dealt with where she is now. J. B. GARVER.

Mt. Union, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:—I here drop a little Church news. Our Communion Meeting in Brush Creek Branch, Highland Co., Ohio, according to previous arrangements, commenced on Friday previous to the fourth Sunday of October, and closed on Tuesday following. Had a very good meeting on Tuesday. Two came out on the Lord's side, and were received into the Church by Christian baptism, and went on their way rejoicing. The good work seems to be moving onward and upward. A number have been added to the Church during the past Summer. Dear brethren let this be our watchword, onward and upward.

J. H. GARMAN.

The Spring Run Congregation has appointed a series of meetings to open on Saturday evening Jan. 24, in the Spring Run Meeting-house 2½ miles from McVeytown Station, Mifflin Co., Pa.

A general invitation is extended to ministers and all who wish to attend. No special invitation will be given by letter. By order of the Church,

S.W. BOLLINGER

Dear Brethren: —Will some one give an explanation of the 10th chap. and 16th verses of John. "And other sheep I have which are not of the fold; them also, I must bring, and they shall hear my voice."

D. B. TENLY.

NOTICE —There will be a series of meetings held in the Maple Grove Meeting-house, Ashland Co., Ohio, commencing January 3, '74, and perhaps will close on the evening of the 11th. A general invitation is extended to ministering brethren and others to be with us. By order of the church. WM. SADLER.

DIED.

SPITZER.— In the Jonathan's Creek branch of the Church, Perry Co., Ohio, Sept. 6, 1873, of spinal affection, Thomas William, son of friends Samuel and Sarah A, Spitzger, aged 8 mos. and 9 days. Funeral service by the writer.

SNIDER.—Also in the same place, Sept. 8, 1873, of same disease, Samuel Perly, son of Bro. Noah and sister Mary Snider, aged 4 mos. and 19 days. Funeral services by the writer.

BAKER.—Also in the same place, and on the same day, of consumption, Bro. Levi Baker, formerly of Shenandoah Co., Va., aged 59 years, 1 month and 8 days. Leaves behind him a loving wife, (a sister,) 2 sons and 3 daughters. He was sick with consumption for nearly two years. Funeral services by the writer.

FRIESNOR.—Also in the Bush Creek Congregation, Fairfield Co., O., Oct. 24, 1873, John Friesnor, aged 35 years and 24 days.

He leaves a wife and four small children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and parent, and many friends, a good neighbor and friend. Thus in the midst of life we are in death. Funeral services by the writer.

WM. ARNOLD.

SHELLER.—In the Falling Spring Congregation, on Dec. 10, 1873, sister Elizabeth Sheller, aged 82 yrs., 6 mos. and 4 days Funeral services by Bro. J. A. Stover and Jos Gipe. J. Z.

KURTZ.—In the Maple Grove Congregation, Ashland Co., Ohio, Dorabell, daughter of brother and sister John Kurtz, aged 7 years, 3 months and 9 days. Funeral services by the writer and others from 1st Thess. 4 : 13.

Little Dora, although very young, manifested a love for Heaven, and during her illness would frequently sing the well known hymn, "My heavenly home is bright and fair," and shortly ere she fell asleep she expressed a desire that her dear mother might go with her. Thus, how often would the dark valley seem brighter, could we be led by the hand of some dear friend. But Jesus has promised to go with us, then why should we fear?

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

ORANGE JUDD & COMPANY, 245 Broadway, New York publishes two of the most valuable rural periodicals in this or any other country. The American Agriculturist, monthly, and Hearth and Home weekly. We do not see how any farmer or any person having even a garden to cultivate can afford to do without it. The Agriculturist was established in 1842. It is a periodical of 44 quarto pages monthly filled with the most reliable matter and gives hundreds of beautiful and instructive engravings in the year. Every subscriber for 1874 will receive a chromo, "Up for Repairs," which will be sent mounted and varnished for 25 cents in addition to the subscription price, which is $1.50 single, or $1.00 to clubs of 20. Hearth and Home his a weekly Journal containing original articles from the most eminent writers. The household department is a most valuable feature. With this, the publishers give a beautiful chromo entitled "The Strawberry Girl," sent postage paid for 20 cents extra, or mounted and varnished for 50 cents in addition to the subscription price, which is only $3.00 per year. Both periodicals $4.00

SCRIBNERS will issue immediately, "Diamonds and Precious Stones" from the French—3 illustrations.

THE publishers of Scribners Monthly promise a series of illustrated papers on dairy farming, &c., in Europe.

PROF. AGASSIZ article in the Atlantic for January defines his position in opposition to the Darwinian Theory, He denies that it has any scientific foundation, but treats Darwin and his disciples with the greatest respect, and thereby secures for himself, a consideration and respect before the scientific world, which many other opponents of the theory do not enjoy. This article is to be followed up by a series of articles upon the same interesting subject in future numbers of the Atlantic.

The Atlantic Monthly so long associated with the honored firm of Jas. R. Osgood & Co. of Boston, has now with "Every Saturday, passed into the hands Hurd & Houghton of Cambridge, Mass., who will preserve the characteristic features of both and continue the same editors—W. D. Howells for the Atlantic and F. B Aldrich for Every Saturday. The Atlantic for January is a splendid number and begins the thirty third volume. The present publishers will spare no pains to keep it the Leading American Magazine and it will contain the fresh writings of Longfellow, Whittier, Holme, Agassiz, Howells, Bayard Taylor; Aldrich, Warner, Wills, Parton, Owen, Eggleston with able criticisms upon current literature, art and scence.

TERMS. Single or specimen numbers,35 cents. Yearly subscription, $4.00. The Atlantic and Every Saturday ($5.00) sent to one address for $8.00. Published by H. O. Houghton & Co., Boston, and Hurd & Houghton, New York.

THE NURSERY TREASURY is a beautiful new book for children by Miss Harriet B. McKeever. It is bound in cloth, elegantly stamped in black and gold, and has 9 handsome plates. The book is pretty enough to gladden the mind of any child. The author enjoys quite a reputation as a writer for children and she has a faculty for adducing for the funny pictures lessons of obedience and love. (Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia.) For sale by J. C. Blair, Huntingdon, Pa.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS, for Boys and Girls, published by James R. Osgood and Co., has been merged in ST. NICHOLAS, Scribner's new monthly. The combined Magazine will be issued by Scribner and Co., and will continue to be one of the leading Magazine for youths of both sexes in the world. The January number has arrived in its enlarged form and exceeds our expectations, with its array of excellent articles, and about 40 beautiful engravings, "Fast Friends," by J. T. Trowbridge is commenced in this number. In every family where there are children or young people, St. Nicholas should be a regular visitor, All new subscribers for 1874 will receive the two back numbers free, making 14 numbers for a year's subscription, $3.00.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, nor asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year, A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

Trine Immersion

TRACED

TO THE APOSTLES.

The Second Edition is now ready for delivery. The work has been carefully revised, corrected and enlarged.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, post-paid, from this office on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00; 25 copies, $4.50; 50 copies, $8.50; 100 copies, $16.00.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post-paid. Address

POETRY.

THE LAST GOOD NIGHT.

Close her eyelids, press them gently
O'er the dim and leaden eyes,
For the soul that made them lovely
Hath returned in to the skies;
Wipe the death drops from her forehead,
Sever one dear golden tress,
Fold her icy hands all meekly,
Smooth the snowy little dress;
Scatter flowers o'er her pillow—
Gentle flowers, so pure and white—
Lay this bud upon her bosom;
There—now softly say, Good night!

Though our tears flow fast and faster,
Yet we would not call her back,
We are glad her feet no longer
Tread life's rough and stormy track;
We are glad our Heavenly Father
Took her while her heart was pure,
We are glad he did not leave her
All life's trials to endure;
We are glad—and yet the tear drop
Falleth; for, alas! we know
That our fireside will be lonely,
We shall miss our darling so.

While the twilight shadows gather
We shall wait in vain to feel
Little arms all white and dimpled,
Round our necks so softly steal,
Our wet cheeks will miss the pressure
Of sweet lips as warm and red,
And our bosoms sadly, sadly
Miss that darling little head,
Which was wont to rest there sweetly,
And those gentle eyes so bright,
We shall miss their loving glanceas,
We shall miss their soft Good night.

When the morrow's sun is shining,
They will take this cherished form,
They will bear it to the church-yard,
And consign it to the worm;
Well—what matter? It is only
The clay dress our darling wore;
God hath robed her as an angel,
She had need of this no more;
Fold her hands, and o'er her pillow
Scatter flowers, all pure and white,
Kiss that marble brow and whisper,
Once again, a last Good night.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

LETTER VS SPIRIT.

Who hath made us able ministers of the New Testament, not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.—2 Cor. 3: 6.

I freely agree with brother Jacob Steel and all others, that the above is one of the most, if not the very most important subject that can be discussed, not only in our periodicals, but also in everything else that essays to make known the truth. The cause of the great importance attached to the subject is, the great stubborn tendency of professors of religion to lay hold upon the letter and cling rigorously and tenaciously to it until it kills them so dead that they are never quickened or made alive by the spirit.

It is the office of the letter, as an instrument in the hands of God, of His Son, and of His ministers, to kill, and in like manner it is the office of the spirit to make alive. The letter killed the Jews, but the spirit made them alive. By a superstitious and rigorous adherence to the outward dry formulas of the Mosaical law, an adherence that was destitute of the spirit,—by an adherence to God's law, which gave rise to the gulf which the word letter in the subject spans, evasions and hypocrisies, found an avenue into the Sanhedrin.

On the outside, the Jews were very strict observers of the law, but inside they were shrewdly outwitting, of course to their own destruction. Many of the things which the Jews would by no means suffer themselves to do, they will have done by Gentile servants, inasmuch as they were not under the law. I am aware that Jesus was careful of the religious prejudices of His time, and to be His followers we should be so too.

His object was to pierce through the outward forms to the central principle of Mosaism.

Of the Christian religion, Mosaism was the gem, the literal or formal commandments of both dispensations are the blossoms and the spirit of th fruit.

Christ did not come to destroy the Law or the Prophets, but to fulfill them. Through this genuine fulfillment many of the former customs dropped off like shells from delicious kernels.

All the transactions of Christ upon earth tended to manifest, through outward, visible, tangible things, the inward, invisible things of the spirit. The beatitudes in the sermon on the Mount, and everything else in it tends to evolve to a contending struggling, dying world, the one "all in all" spirit of God.

The lesson taught through the low outcast woman at Jacob's well, as well as that taught through the eminently moral Nicodemus, centralizes in the one grand mission of manifesting the things of the spirit.

The restoration of health to the man at the pool of Bethesda, and the command to him to take up his bed and walk, a formal violation of the Sabbath, as well as his obedience and the result as he walked—all serves as a key to unlock the spiritual mystery of the Gospel of Christ.

Likewise "plucking the ears" on the "Sabbath day" restoring the "withered hand" on the "Sabbath day," when He looked around upon the Jews "with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts," because they were unconscious and destitute of the spirit underlying the formulas—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The healing of the woman with the "issue" on the Sabbath day, and indeed everything which Jesus did, tends directly toward the ministration of the spirit which giveth life.

Again for example He says, "Now do ye pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and platter, but your inward parts is full of ravening and wickedness. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also? But rather give alms of such things as ye have, and behold all things are clean unto you. But woe unto you pharisees, for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." The whole Bible tends toward an able ministry of the spirit of Christ. J. B. GARVER.

Mt. Union, Pa.

In making our arrangements to live, we should never forget that we have also to die.

NEW YEAR.

Another year has just set its sun; and while we are just stepping on the threshold of a new year, I would suggest that we halt and look around us. First, let us take a glance over the year that has just closed. When we look back, we see so many changes that have taken place. Many homes have been visited with sorrow, affliction and death. Most of us entered this last new year with more or less hope and expectation of life and its enjoyments, and we have, no doubt, enjoyed our full allotted share. We also met many disappointments and sorrows. Many of our friends have been called to the other shore. Death, that unmerciful destroyer, has visited many peaceful homes, and, throughout this last year, he has, it appears, especially drawn his sword over our ministering brethren in the East as well as in the west. Four of our old ministering brethren, Elders, with whom I was well acquainted, in eastern Pennsylvania, have laid their armor down in the year that has just closed.

Yet it has also had its seasons of sunshine and joy. Especially do we remember the happy seasons where we have met together as one family to worship, sing, pray, and keep the commandments of our Lord and Master. Also were we made to rejoice much when we heard of souls becoming willing to forsake sin and cast in their lot with God's people.

But now what do we propose to make our object for the new year? Have we made new plans whereby to lay up more treasure on earth? We hope not, but if so, let it be abandoned immediately; for this night if our soul be required of us, whose should all this be? But let us set our minds to work to contrive what we may do whereby we may lay up treasure in Heaven, that when we arrive there, a treasure may await us. So I suggest to myself, and all who love the Lord, that we make new efforts to love and serve our Master, by doing as much as lieth in our power—his whole will, continuing in watching and prayer, and in all holiness and humility, giving our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable in the sight of God; and follow peace with all men and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.

I yet desire to add a few words to the contributors of the PILGRIM. I have been a steady reader for nearly three years, and am fully convinced it is intended for good. Although I have no personal acquaintance with the editors, yet I am fully confident that they are sincere in their labors, and think the PILGRIM is worthy of the prayers and support of every sincere pilgrim traveler to a better land, and I intend, the Lord willing to do more for its support than heretofore. But let all contributions be well seasoned with grace and love as it is read over a large part of the United States, by all classes of people—and then laid by for future generations to read and refer to, to see the sentiment of the brethren of the present day. Brethren think of these things when you write for the PILGRIM. Let the blessed Gospel be the foundation upon which we write, build, hope and trust, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

I have in possession several of old Christopher Saur's Almanacs, published over a century ago. They contain plain, simple, and sound truths. They are carefully preserved, and so, no doubt, will the PILGRIM be preserved that future generations may learn from it. May God's spirit direct its editors and contributors, and bless the readers, that fruits of everlasting life may grow out of it unto the honor and glory of God. Amen.

A REMARKABLE LETTER.

The following is a part of a letter from a most distinguished personage of the first century of the Christian era. He was personally acquainted with the most eminent defenders of the Christian religion of his day, and if history is correct, he was Bishop of the church at Jerusalem. As many Christian professors may not have read or studied said letter, we quote from it and especially recommend an examination of it to the "Evangelical Alliance" assembled in the city of New York, and all others who preach or believe in the popular error of "salvation by faith alone." The following are his views upon the subject named above.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Even so faith if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, thou hast faith and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God, thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works and by works was faith made perfect. And the Scripture was fulfilled which saith Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God. Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works when she had received the messengers and had sent them out another way? For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

"Eloi, Eloi, lama Sabachthani,"–Mark. 15: 34.

I. Introduction.

This language is expressive of Jesus's great sensitiveness of His true condition at the time of His expiration. Those of you my readers who have been reading my preceding articles will doubtless notice that we present the language heading this article as being the fourth expression of Jesus whilst hanging upon the cross. He made no complaint about himself until he had willed and provided for others. He first thought of those for whom He was then and there suffering. He first thought of those He came to seek and to save, the lost were the objects of his compassion. And how beautifully He lived out on the cross that sentiment He uttered to His disciples saying, "But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful." Luke 6: 35, 36.

The apostle Paul's language corroborates also with this idea, when he says, "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not Himself; but as it is written, the reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me."—Rom. 15: 2, 3.

To the Corinthians he further says of himself, "Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking my own profit, but the profit of many that they may be saved."—1 Cor. 10: 33.

II. Jesus's Emotions.

1. Of Pity.–By Jesus's emotions are meant those faculties or powers of the mind, that are capable of being aroused and excited to action by some inward susceptibility or feeling. Pity is the soul's action with reference to the condition of others. It is a great theme indeed, to contemplate the movings of that comprehensive mind of Jesus. Who indeed hath known the mind of the Lord. But how does the mind of Jesus move? Not first with reference to His own condition, but the condition of others. Here is charity—true and perfect, unfolded to the observation and admiration of the whole world. "Charity must first begin at home," is a falsehood that has been too long practiced by Christian professors. It is an expression that should be so completely buried by considering Jesus on the cross, as never to be capable of a resurrection again. That which assists at home is not charity. Charity goes abroad to do its work, making glad the hearts of the unfortunate.

Kind reader if you have not embraced the yoke of Jesus, you are unfortunate, and will continue to grow more so by straying away from your Father's House, as such Jesus pities you. His pitying eye wanders after you day by day, as He endeavors to get you, loves sweet lessons to obey. Truly this tender emotion of Jesus stands exemplified to all the world, as many as are afar off even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

Poor and downcast saint, Jesus pities you. If you are lashed by the tail of the angry serpent, who is tempting you to fall down and worship him, or thrown among wolves in sheep's clothing, who are eagerly watching for a favorable opportunity to devour you, be of good cheer, Jesus pities you. He pitied the downcast and forsaken disciples whilst on the cross, which stands as an emblem of love and sympathy to all the scattered sheep of Israel. Remember He has said I will never leave nor forsake thee. It is He that will make intercession to the Father, such as will prevail and bring you out more than conqueror through Him who has loved and pitied you.

2. Of Despair.–After Jesus had cast his pitying eye over that vast multitude that had surrounded him at the time of His crucifixion, and had so favorably expressed Himself, as an evidence that He desired their welfare, He suddenly contemplates His own situation. The heavens begin to frown with darkness. Until now the Lamb of God was calm and composed, but now His soul begins to move vehemently. Oh contemplate the scene, "Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour."—Matt. 27: 45. The agitation the soul of Jesus experienced those three long, dark hours, must remain indescribable by finite minds. As the great curtain of darkness begins to be drawn over the land, I imagine I see those horrified and guilty Jews and Romans cease their shameful derisions, and tremble at the approaching scene. Their loud and boastful mockery is turned to whisperings of fear. Ah what a sudden change often seizes hold of the ungodly.

As the ninth hour begins to approach the soul of Jesus moves, being agitated now to such a degree, that He burts forth in emotion of despair, crying "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me."

To be forsaken by friends, neighbors, brethren and all creation, He was able to bear without a murmur, but to be forsaken by God, the eternal Father, caused him to break forth in lamentations. Well might the earth quake and tremble, and the sun refuse to shine, upon witnessing a scene like this.

No doubt this bewailing lamentation of Jesus was brought forth by the separation of divinity and humanity. Jesus must needs die, and to accomplish this the Father must withdraw His divine power. Hence it was only Jesus in His humanity, that was made to exclaim, "Eloi, Eloi, lama Sabachthani."

Reader, in conclusion let me again appeal to you, upon this all important subject. God has darkened the sun once, he is going to darken it again. God has shaken the earth once, He is going to shake it again, and let me ask you are you prepared for the event? If you are, well; if not, and you continue in your sinful condition, you surely will experience a more terrible darkness in your soul than was ever witnessed on earth, when God the Everlasting Father will withdraw his supporting hand from you, and cast you into outer darkness.

Then will God mock when your fear cometh, and laugh at your calamity, whilst you may be raising your wail of woe, and despairingly crying, "My God, My God why hast thou forsaken me." Remember God has said "draw near unto me and I will draw near unto thee." He is drawing by the great chord of his love and good will, and has said whosoever will come let him come to the waters of life, and take freely, without money and without price, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Oh! come and behold Jesus on the cross. Draw near all ye ends of the earth and be saved.

A VISIT TO WOODFORD CO. ILLINOIS.

Dec. 17. Left home early in the morning, and after a walk of a few miles found myself in Urbana, where I took the train for Bloomington about 9: 30 A. M. But first stopped at the post office, and received quite a bunch of letters, containing orders for books and charts, but cannot fill the orders till we return home in a few days. Also received the American Christian Review, a paper published by Franklin and Rice, in Cincinnati, Ohio. I opened the paper, and the first article that struck my eyes was "Reynold's Debate." Franklin's first address.

1 Proposition.—"Remission of sins, as set forth in the Gospel, is offered to the unconverted, or alien sinners, on conditions in which they exercise free-will, and have power to perform." It does not seem that any man who ever read the Bible, could be found to take the negative of this question, but in these times some men will teach almost anything but the ancient Gospel, even some, in order to get rid of the absurdity of dipping backwards, now begin to advance the idea of dipping sideways, as though the door into the Church were so very small that they cannot enter only in this side way of doing the work that they use to do backward. But to the story—Mr. Thompson takes issue with Franklin, and as soon as I am seated in the cars must read this opening speech.

10 A. M. Now on the train reading the debate. Find it capital. Franklin's logic is good. But then this is just the way it goes, give these Campbellites the right side of the question, and they beat the world, but if you want to see them back down just ask them to affirm that "backward single immersion is Christian baptism." This is too much for their skill, though they practice it in full faith. Or let them affirm that the Lord's Supper should be taken about noon," and here is something else that is not in the Bible. They should certainly cease to condemn others till they return to the primitive system of religion. In about one hour I found myself in Bloomington, where I waited till late in the afternoon before I could obtain a train for the north. Seeing that I could not make my way through in the daytime, I stopped at Hudson, and very unexpectedly to the family, put up at Bro. Lyon's, where I partook of their excellent hospitality. I always enjoy conversation with brother Lyon. He gives attention to reading, teaching and exhortation, and is therefore well versed in his discipline—the Bible. I also learn that this church is prospering, having baptized some during the season. We concluded not to preach in Hudson then, as it was very muddy and rather too late to get word to the members out of town. Bedtime near eleven closed our talk for the evening. Brother Lyon is well acquainted with the boyhood days of brother Quinter, and related to us some very interesting accounts of him, one of which I may give in a future paper.

18th 8: 30 A. M. Took a seat in a freight caboose and soon found myself in El Paso, with two hours to wait for the train passing west. In order to employ the time to advantage I visited the El Paso house to see a model of Ancient Jerusalem then on exhibition at that place. I was just too late, the gentleman had packed up to move to Bloomington, however I enjoyed the pleasure of a conversation with the exhibitor, who first of all things desired to know my calling, and to what people I belonged. No sooner was this made known when he stated I was just the man he wanted to see. He had heard much of us as a people, but knew little of our practice. After giving him our doctrine in full, in Bible language too at that, he remarked that we were nearer right than any class of people he had ever met. When he wished to know if we were like the Campbellites, I soon gave him to understand that we do not sanction their backward immersion which was invented in the 16th century, and the single immersion which found its origin after the middle of the 4th, but still cling to the general practice of all antiquity, which consists in dipping the body three times face forward into the water. I then handed him a copy of my Trine Immersion, which he commenced examining with perfect delight. I always keep some of these in my pocket for the especial benefit of preachers who oppose our practice. Soon 11 o'clock came, and on the train we were bound for Secor, where I arrived 11: 30. As I was on business, and not on a preaching tour, I had not given notice of my coming, so I had to foot it some four miles out to my uncle's—Isaac Moore. Found all well, uncle not at home, though he came that night. Spent the evening reading a Mormon history. It makes one's blood run high when he reads of the wicked transactions of Joe Smith and others to propagate their absurd theories, decoying loving wives and affectionate mothers away from their husbands and little children.

19th. Called on brother Rufus Gish, who is the Elder of this church. Found him with gun in hand out hunting rabbits. He enjoys it, as he learned it when a boy, and some men in this world never get done being boys when a snow comes up deep enough to track a rabbit. Spent the day with brother Gish—or perhaps I would better say with his books. He has quite a good selection, the contents of which he frequently uses in defense of primitive Christianity, a piece of work that is in much demand here.

Some 23 years ago my father and mother, who are now in the State of Mo., were two of the first three members in this county. The church was at first very small, but now it has grown to be one of the leading churches in Southern Illinois. The brethren here have been for years under the absolute necessity of defending their doctrine against the repeated assaults of a well disciplined force, and so far have not only held their own, but are steadily gaining ground. It may be worthy of note that the Campbellites have a college not far from here where preachers are trained to order, and it is with these that the brethren have been contending. Last Spring they had quite a stir about a public debate. The brethren wisely refused anything of the kind unless the whole thing should be published and go before the world in book form. This was finally agreed to when the brethren consented to be at all the expense. But when it came to arranging the propositions there was but little show of a debate upon the part of the Campbellites. They would not agree to defend their own practice at all. The propositions were ordered as fair as any set of men ought to demand, but the trouble is they have been for years practicing human inventions ie the room of divine commandments, and none but the brethren have dared to question these things, and when called upon to defend their practice in full will not consent. I hope the time is not far distant when these things will be more fully developed. In the evening meeting at the Brethren's Meeting-house. Roads very bad, congregation small; but attention remarkably good. I never care how small the number, if they only give good attention. Subject, "The books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life." Went home with my uncle Philip Moore, who lives in the house with his father-in-law, J. S. Robison.

20. The weather cold. Among the first things on docket, was to visit Roanoke, a small town not yet one year old. Its situation is excellent—on a railroad the name of which I have forgotten. The country around is nice and rolling, and not only this but it is settled by as industrious a set a people as can be found in the State of Illinois. A vote has been taken respecting the removal of the county seat from Metamoria to this place, and resulted in favor of Roanoak. Took dinnner in town with friend Price. Returned to uncle Philip's and spent the remainder of the day in religious conversation. Being that I have two ears, and two eyes, it is proper that I use them for both hearing and seeing by the wayside, and report what I think proper. Several here are taking the PILGRIM, and the only objection I heard against it is that it fails to come regular, one brother stating that he had not got his for nearly six months, I told him that in case of that kind they should inform the editor immediately, and learn just where the fault is.

Preaching in the evening at the Meeting-house. Subject, "Backward Immersion." Attention good. Congregation small, the roads being so rough that most of the people had to walk. Lodged with uncle Isaac Moore, uncle Philip and wife being in company.

21st. This being the appointed time to close the Brethren's Sunday School at the Meeting-house, it was agreed to have no meeting. Their school has been quite an interesting exercise for the members in general. I saw old gray-headed sisters here committing verses to memory as though they were little girls. The Bible is their text book. During the school about 14000 verses were committed to memory. Dined with uncle Isaac. Preaching in the evening, subject, "The perfect plan of salvation, or safe ground in religion." Congregation good, and attention excellent. Lodged with uncle Joseph Moore.

22. Was conveyed by uncle to Secor, took the train at noon, and arrived home about midnight the same day, found all well, but did not feel to go to bed till all the letters were read which had been received while gone. A number of orders for charts and books, I will have to delay filling them at least one week, a change in some business matters necessitates it.

NOTES OF TRAVEL AND PREAOHING.

The last of October I went to Bro. and sister Hartman's, near Woodland, Yolo county, Cal., and preached seven discourses in a church-house built by a Mr. Huntly, a very neat, well furnished and well finished house to worship in. Mr. Huntley and his wife belong to the United Brethren, are very friendly to the Brethren and have given us the social privilege to the house, it is so signified in the will. During the meetings there was the best of attention paid to the story of the Nazarine. It had such an effect on their minds that four asked for baptism in the Lord's method of baptizing. Three were baptized and the fourth one will be as soon as some one can visit that place again, If there could be regular preaching there much good might be done. Brother and sister Hartman and the four new members have a prominent standing in the vicinity that argues strong in favor of the teachings of Jesus. This Woodland county, has a rich soil, very pleasant and convenient place to live, good water, good oak timber, and water ditches for wrighting porposes, 25 miles west of Sacramento by rail.

After staying at Brother Hartman's a week, brother Hartman and his two daughters with their team conveyed me to Suisum, or rather Cordelia, 4 miles west of Suisum, a distance of 40 miles in the county. Sister Kate Gambel and Carrie Foster lives here, we had a feast of fat things, while we tried to plead the Master's cause in four discourses. Mr. Gambel, Mr. Foster and the two sisters their wives, have an influence in the community, worthy of imitation by brethren. The Episcopalian church was opened to us, and was crowded during every discourse with people who had an intense desire to hear. Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, Adventists, Episcopalians and outsiders, composed the audience. After 11 o'clock preaching on Sunday, a Christian brother came to me and said this was no new method of teaching to him. I said to him, where did you hear the Scriptures taught in this way? "Oh!" said he, "fifteen years ago I heard Eld. D. P. Sayler often in the State of Maryland." A Methodist lady, who got very happy during the meeting, said to me: "I have not heard the like since I heard the Brethren in Pennsylvania." So you see brethren, the Gospel sound is the same on the Pacific coast as it is on the Atlantic, or on the sea of Galilee.

Among the hearers at this meeting was a German, intelligent, and highly educated. The different denominations desired that he would attach himself to them, but the German would not yield to their solicitations, from the fact that he is a firm believer in the trine method of Baptism, and feet-washing, as the Savior gave the example and command. There is one item of faith in his mind that troubles him much. That is, the Seventh day of the week, or Jewish Sabbath, is the true day for Christians to keep and is essential to our salvation.

In conclusion, will some brother through the PILGRIM tell us whether the Seventh day spoken of in Genesis, the day the Lord finished his work, rested and hallowed it, was it a day of twenty-four hours, or a sacred number? If a sacred number, where is its application in the New Testament? ELD. GEO. WOLFE.

REPORT FROM YELLOW CREEK.

Dear Brother Henry:—Inasmuch as you solicit Church news and reports, I will try and make use of some of my leisure moments in writing out a brief report of meetings held in our vicinity. On Christmas at 10 o'clock a. m., according to previous appointment, the brethren, sisters and friends in general, convened for public worship in the Snowberger M. H. There was a pretty good attendance. After the opening exercises, the second chapter of Luke's Gospel was selected and as the old order of the Brethren is, in this particular not lost sight of with us yet—one of the deacons was selected to read the above named chapter. As this day, by the great mass of people is regarded as an anniversary of the birth of Christ, our ministering brethren thought it prudent to take the birth of Christ for their subject, which was made use of we think, to the benefit of the congregation. Also on the same day and at the same place, evening meeting. Bro. John Hanawalt of Spring Run, spoke from Mark 1: 15 subject the same as above. The 26th, evening meeting at the Koontz's M. H. I was not there and do not know the text. Saturday the 27th, meeting at the same place; brothers Kelso and Keim from Dale City were the speakers. The former addressed the small but interesting congregation from Acts 17: 30—31, followed by the latter. The discourse we think was very interesting and we hope also beneficial. The last named brethren on a mission of love, to Snake Spring Valley congregation, came to the last point and held two meetings, and returned to the Valley again, where they held several more meetings.

On the evening of the 27th, meeting at Waterside M. H. In consequence of a snow falling on said day and inclement weather, there were but few in attendance. The small but attentive congregation was profitably entertained by Bro. Joseph Snowberger, from the words, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Ex 32: 26. Bro. S. was on his return from a visit to Eld. Andrew Snowberger his father, who, we are sorry to say, is very ill. He stayed all night with us and was followed by brother Geo. Hanawalt, of Spring Run. Also on Sunday the 28, meeting at the same place at 10 a. m. Brothers John and Geo. Hanawalt were the chief speakers. The entire 12 chapter of Romans was read according to order. The first and second verses of the chap. read was taken for a basis of their remarks.

May the labors of our dear brethren not be in vain in the Lord, if not effective immediately, may it be as bread cast upon the water, that it may be found many days hence. May the Lord reward their labors of love in this time and much in the world to come and we all be prepared to meet on the banks of a final deliverance is prayer of your unworthy cousin and brother in the Lord.

A LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Brother Brumbaugh:—The snow shows very plainly on the Sierra Nevada Mountains and the trains are now behind time on account of landslides and snow in the mountains. We are at a loss to know why our winter should set in on us so cold and stormy, as well as the Signal corps of the United States is to know why the November wave should have originated on the Pacific slope, so far north-west of its usual place of origin. It does seem the atmospheric wave has swooped down on us on the Pacific coast with a vengeance. The 3d day of this month (Dec.) we had a regular Illinois snow storm, which lasted all day. Mercury ranged at 36 all day which is very uncommon for California. The snow fell two inches deep through the day and melted away during the night. It has been threatening to rain and snow since the storm up to this date, Dec. 10th. If things continue as they now indicate, until the first of January, 1874, in all probability we will have a lively time for water. About New Year we get the heaviest rains Farmers are very busy now seeding their land on the sand plains. Here where we live, the more rain we get the better we like it

Up to this date I have not received a Prospectus or Almanac, for 1874. This is the worst trouble we have, not getting our mail. Some of the subscribers are often perplexed by the PILGRIM not coming. As a general thing, all like the PILGRIM and say it is a good little paper. We think it has done well to steer as straight a Gospel course as it has for the last four years. It is true we should have been glad if the Sunday School question had been let alone, both for and against it, Nevertheless we are not like some, that think our editors ought to be perfect, and steer free from all trouble. Now in conclusion we say as did the tribes of the children of Israel, to King David, after Absalom's disastrous battle, PILGRIM come back to us on the Pacific coast, this coming year, and counsel and comfort us as you did in the past 4 years. We do not claim ten shares in you, yet we do feel as though we have some interest in you.

ELD. GEO. WOLFE.

ATTENTION!

It will be remembered by the churches of the Middle District of Pa., that a resolution was passed at our District Conference in favor of building a Meeting House in Altoona, and in pursuance of this resolution I was appointed to receive the different reports from the different churches, of the amounts contribututed for the above purposes, with instructions to report to the investigating committee which was done and a proper statement given to them who, since have met at the place, and, in their deliberations appointed a building committee, who have now called on me for the money reported; whereupon I will be obliged to call upon the churches for it, hoping that they will not only send in the full amount, but as much more as they can get, and to those churches which have not contributed, I am requested to say that the brethren and friends at Altoona earnestly appeal to them for their aid and co-operation in this work believing it to be neccessary for the proper promulgation of the Gospel and the advancement of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

All money must be sent to me either by postal orders payable at Huntingdon, or drafts payable to my order. GEO. BRUMBAUGH, CHUROH NEWS.

We had a meeting that commenced on Christmas day. Brother Jacob Berky preached for us three days, then Bro's. David Hostetter, David M. Truly and Henry Gephart continued the meeting until New Year's night, when we closed our meeting. We had a large turn out, good order, and a good feeling with all the people, and some were almost persuaded to become Christians. May the spirit of the Lord continue to move upon the people that our labors may not be in vain.

OUR NEW HOME.

Those who have changed locations a number of times can appreciate the desirableness of having a permanent place of abode, and the trouble and vexation connected with moving. In our starting out in publishing the Pilgrim, location was a serious matter, and to meet the exigency of the time we concluded to make a temporary location at James Creek, which place we found to possess more advantages than we, at first expected. In many respects it was a desirable place to live, but as pertains to our business, there were a few important things that were decidedly against us. Under the circumstances, it became apparent to us, that, in order to make our enterprise a success, and do ourselves and patrons justice, we would be obliged to make a change. In doing this we were governed by several important considerations.

First, on account of church relations. In the precincts of this congregation (James Creek) we were born and brought up. Here it was that we enjoyed the care and prayers of kind parents, who ever were, and are still deeply concerned in our present and future welfare.

Their wishes were that we should not go beyond the limits of our congregation, and it is certainly no small affair to ignore the wishes of parents when they are just and reasonable, especially if they do not interfere with our great work of life. Here it was, that we first experinced the power of redeeming grace and entered the fold of Jesus, and, here too, we were called to the important work of the ministry. It is true, our field of labor is the world, but we were called especially to labor in this congregation, and it therefore has claims upon us that we do not feel to deny. The fact is, our attachment to our brethren, sisters, relatives and friends, have become so strong, that we do not feel to have them severed until we feel it our duty to do so. With one of old, "we are content to dwell among our own people."

A second consideration was to get a location that would benefit our patrons and our enterprise. Good mail facilities is a most important feature in our business, one that will be highly appreciated by our readers, as all desire to receive their papers as promptly as possible. Huntingdon, being situated on the great through route of the United States, possesses advantages in this respect that cannot well be excelled, as we have through mails North, South, East and West, so that our subscribers in California and Oregon can expect the Pilgrim in a few days after the date of publication. Therefore, if post masters do their duty, our patrons may expect the Pilgrim to be a prompt visitor during the present year.

A third consideration was our own personal interests. It is expected that when men invest money they do it to the best possible advantage, and surely editors should be no exception, providing it is done honest and honorable There is no place that we know of, where money can be invested in property, with a greater degree of safety and with better prospects of a reasonable profit than in Huntingdon.

After duly considering all these things, we made a purchase, and, during last summer, built a house especially adapted for our business, and on last Tuesday, Dec. 23d., moved our family, office and everything pertaining to our business, into it, and this is our first editorial written in the new Sanctum. Our removal was a dread on our minds and worried us considerably; but, as ever, good luck seemed to be on our side, as when the time came the weather was unusually pleasant for the time of year, and our brethren and friends came promptly to our assistance, so that the burden of moving was greatly lightened and everything passed pleasantly indeed. On our arrival our building was not in as completed a condition as could have been desired, but we are now rapidly getting things into shape and ready for work. It may be some time before we get everything properly adjusted and therefore ask the indulgence of our readers if there should be some mistakes made, and some delay in attending to letters, sending out books &c. Our readers will please notice our change of location and henceforth address us at Huntingdon, Pa., where we will be happy to receive calls from our brethren, sisters and friends who may stop or pass this way.

Those coming by railroad can take the 'buss,' (cost 10 cents) which meets all trains, and call for No. 1400, Washington street, where you will find us and receive such accommodations as our circumstances will afford. We feel to tender our grateful thanks to our brethren, sisters and friends for your promptness in renewing your subscriptions for 1874 and the many words of cheer and encouragement given us. May God bless your basket and store and especially your souls with the richness of his love.

TO BUSINESS MEN.

On the first floor of the Pilgrim office we have made a very excellent store room which we wish to have occupied as soon as we can get a suitable occupant. It is a first class room 18x46 with a twelve foot story. The location for building up a good trade is promising, as the neighborhood greatly needs a general variety and provision store.

This part of the town is rapidly building up and in a short time, a thriving business may be done. If any of our brethren wish to enter the mercantile business and wish a good location, we would be pleased to have them call and examine the inducements here offered. We have made this our home and will be much pleased to have our brethren move in among us and thus help us to build up a church in this place.

Those who may have money to invest in either buildings or lots, cannot find greater inducements anywhere than in West Huntingdon. Tradesmen of all kind who have a disposition to labor and get along, cannot find a better location. If any wish to examine our advantages and call to see us, we will do all for them that we possibly can.

Within the last year, over a hundred new houses have been built, and the indications are that the number of the present year will be even greater than the last.

Hoping that some of our brethren will be induced to cast their lot with us we will hold out no further inducements for the present. We have now a membership of nine or ten, but as yet no place for worship.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

The Savior tells us if we would be His disciples we must take up our cross and follow Him. In what does the cross consist, and how shall we take it up? The cross consists in the performance of duty, and to take it up, means merely to perform our duty when it is contrary to our carnal inclinations. Jonah was commanded to go and preach to the Ninevites, but as it was not in harmony with his inclinations, he did not take up the cross. The result is known to every Bible reader. We are to be obedient unto the commandments. One of these is, that we resist not evil. Of olden times, it was an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, but Jesus says, "Resist not evil." Again we are to love our enemies, and do good to those who despitefully use and abuse us. All this is far from being in consonance with our inclinations. We are inclined to return evil for evil, and speak reproachfully of those who despitefully use us. This, however, is not the spirit of Christianity, and those who follow their inclinations in this respect, have either not taken up the cross at all, or left it drop.

Jesus also says, "Be not conformed to the world." This is also not in unison with our inclinations. We are inclined to talk like the world, act like the world, and appear like the world, all of which is foreign to the cross of Christ. We are to come out from among them and be a separate people; that is, there is to be an observable difference between our general deportment and that of a fashion-loving, sin-loving world. It may be a heavy cross at times to do this, but God has given us the power to perform all He requires of us, and we must do it, or forfeit the blessing which will follow the doing it.

We are also commanded to "pray without ceasing." It may be a cross to do this. We sometimes become so engrossed in the pursuits of this life that we forget, or do not take time to pray. But it is a duty and may, and ought to be done. In short, the cross of Christ is simply the performance of our duty regardless of our feelings; the possession of a meek and submissive spirit which at all times says, "Thy will be done."

"Take up thy cross the Savior said,
If thou would'st my disciple be;
Take up thy cross with willing heart,
And humbly follow after me."

NOW IS THE TIME.

Now is the time to work, and no matter how good or worthy our paper may be, much of our success depends upon the efforts of our agents. If you all go to work with a will, our circulation can be greatly enlarged, especially if our liberal offers are fairly presented. It is true, the panic has crippled our financial affairs to some extent, but that is now about over, and by Spring it will be a thing of the past. Some of our brethren become unduly alarmed about such things and make it a pretext for not taking the Pilgrim. This is a wrong policy, as there are hundreds of other things that might be dispensed with before the children's bread should be taken away. Our religious advantages should be the last thing to sacrifice, and we feel assured that those who put their trust in the Lord and do right by aiding His cause and also aid the work of grace in their own souls, will not suffer loss, as all we have, cometh from the Lord, and when we spend it in a good cause, we only give back to Him that which He has lent us. These are things we wish understood by our brethren, and would have our agents make use of them. We believe that it is right not only to ask people to subscribe but to persuade them, because we believe that reading the Pilgrim may do them good and be a means of greatly assisting them in the divine life. There are thousands who would be benefitted by reading the Pilgrim, and would do it had they an opportunity of subscribing. Will not our agents give this opportunity? Prospectus, Almanacs and sample copies will be sent on application. There are places that there are no agents. Will not some one volunteer and go to work for us. Send in the names at once, and the money when you can get a sufficient amount together. All subscribers will be supplied with a Pilgrim Almanac free. We have given our whole energy to the work in promulgating the truth as it is in Jesus, and shall leave nothing undone to make the Pilgrim for 1874 worthy of the sympathy and support of the whole Brotherhood.

THE PILGRIM AND THE POOR.

From the beginning the PILGRIM has been the acknowledged friend of the poor, as we have never refused a single invitation to visit their homes, and indeed, we do not as yet feel that we have lost anything by it as there are but few who have failed to pay us, at least a part, if it was a year after date. To accommodate such, we have established the rule of accepting all who can and will pay during the year. This gives ample time for all to pay that have a desire or will to do so, as there certainly are but few but what can raise so small an amount during the year. We make the same offer for 1874, and hope our agents, brethren and sisters will appreciate our liberality by making continued efforts to increase our list. There is not a single brother in the Church should be deprived of reading the PILGRIM on account of poverty. If there are any who desire to read it and have not the means, the Church should supply the means, if not all, in part, as we cannot afford to supply all free of charge, neither will the liberality of the brethren ask it. Whatever is right and reasonable, we will do. Those of our brethren and sisters who paid in advance have our thanks for their promptness, as by so doing they enabled us to meet our present needs. Those who pay us during the early part of the year will no less oblige us as our business is a constant drain on our funds. Those who pay us during the year will oblige us by paying as soon as they can, so that we may be obliged all the time, and thus keep our ever emptying purse replenished.

CORRECTIONS FOR PILGRIM ALMANAC.

Nall Joseph should be Naff Joseph.

NOT IN THE LIST.

Saml. Riner and G. W. Crouse of Oak Hill, Fayette Co., W. Va.

These are errors that were unavoidable on our part and we give them so that those interested can make the proper correction. These corrections can readily be made with a lead pencil.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

ELD. MARTIN NEHER's address is changed from Cerro Gorda, to La-Place, Piatt Co., Ill.,

BRO. ELIHU MOORE wishes us to inform our readers that his address is changed from Green, Iowa, to Monegaw, St.Clair Co., Mo., and says, " If any brethren pass through this way, I hope they will stop and give us a call as there is no preaching close here and we feel very lonesome."

Eld. J. S. Flory's address is changed from Greely to Buffalo, Weld county Colorado.

BOOKS.

Of late, we have had a number of orders for books, tracts, &c., but on account of moving and the rush of subscribers, we have not, as yet, had time to attend to them, but they are all placed on our order book and will be attended to at the earliest possible date. Of the Helping Hand, we are out, but will have a supply in a few days.

PLEASE NOTICE.

Our address is now changed from James Creek to Huntingdon, Pa. Our patrons will be careful to notice this change and send all our mail matter &c. to H. B. Brumbaugh, Box 172, Huntingdon Pa.

ELD. D. P. SAYLER has furnished us with a large batch of copy, some fifty or sixty foolscap pages. We have not yet had time to examine it but our readers can feel assured that it will be in harmony with his usual instructive style of writing. We would be pleased to have many others improve the long winter evenings in a similar manner. The PILGRIM, in its enlarged form, takes over two long columns more to fill it each week, and therefore we will need considerable more copy. Please bear this in mind and keep us well supplied. Just now there was handed us another large batch of copy from J. H. Moore. Bro. Moore is a good writer and intends to do considerable of it. All who feel to help us along in the good cause are heartily welcome to our columns.

A REPORTER is desired from every Church to send us in all such items of news as may be of general interest, obituaries, marriages, reports, reports of travel, of good meetings, accessions to the Church, elections of ministers, &c. For the present No. we are supplied to overflowing, but in our enlarged space we can soon make room for all. If our readers will keep us well supplied with matter we will promise to make the PILGRIM for 1874, more interesting and useful than ever before. Then brethren, sisters and friends, let us have your aid your sympathies and your prayers.

DON'T FORGET IT.—Agents are wanted in every Church district of the brotherhood, to work for the PILGRIM. We offer such liberal inducements that a club can be raised almost anywhere if the proper effort is made. Do not confine yourselves to the membership alone, but invite your neighbors and friends—all such as have a desire to walk in the footsteps of the humble Nazarine of Galilee, who came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance.

ELD. J. S. FLORY now dwells in the land of buffaloes and persons wishing to supply themselves with good robes, &c., we think could buy of him cheaper than of any other person, especially if a bale of a dozen or more is ordered at one time. Terms &c., will be given by sending two 3 cent stamps to J. S. Flory, Buffalo, Weld Co., Col.

POETRY.—Many in sending obituaries accompany them with poetry, which we generally admit if at all poetical and not too lengthy, but on account of the great number we now have on hands, we were compelled to omit some. Please excuse as it was stern necessity.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Against my own natural inclination, I, at the earnest solicitation of the dear brethren and sisters of Perry and Juniata counties Pa., with whom I labored, prayed and wept on my recent visit of love among them, I make some extracts from my diary for publication, as they say, "for our second benefit."

November 29, 1873.

I was met by brother Barnhart Roth at Newville, on the line of the Cumberland Valley R. R; he took me in charge and conveyed me to his home in Perry county, a distance of 16 miles, over two very rugged and high mountains, which at the time were covered with snow. Deer and wild turkey tracks were to be seen in abundance. I arrived at Bro. Roth's after 5. p. m., chilled through with cold, and before I could get warm, had to eat supper shivering with cold, and go to meeting in the Manassa meeting house, built by five different denominations; the Brethren, being one of the five. I found the house full of people who had come to see and hear. Elder Peter Long was the only one I knew. I preached as best I could, from Psalm 23. I lodged with brother Roth.

Sunday 30. Meeting in the same place. I felt much impressed, and the house was filled with hearers; preached from Mat. 5: 13, 14. The object of these two sermons was to bring before the people the advantages of religion. Meeting at night in the same place, house was crowded, read Acts 8, preached from 5th and 12th verses. This introduced the practical part of religion.

Mon. December 1. Meeting at the same place. Well attended for a week day. Brother Christian Myers preached an appropriate sermon from Isaiah 1: 19, 20. Meeting at night, preached from Rev. 20: 11 Some concern manifested among the hearers.

Tues. 2. Lodged with Bro. Book, had no meeting until night. Elder J. D. Trostle who had been detained at home a few days, now joined us and preached a good sermon from Mat. 6: 33.

Wednes. 3. No meeting to-day, weather inclement, but very comfortable in the pleasant family and home of Bro. Edmond Book; meeting at night. I preached from 1 Cor. 1: 9. After meeting two men made application for baptism.

Thurs. 4. In charge of Elder Peter Long, visited some families. The father of one says he has been convinced of the duty he owes to God and himself for 25 years. Meeting at night. Bro. Trostle preached a stirring sermon from Rom. 16: 1.

Fri. 5. Spent the day in visiting the members, was brought to meeting by Bro. A. Trostle, at night, and preached from Ex. 8: 10. To-morrow, after meeting, another application for baptism.

Sat. 6. Meeting at 10 o'clock a. m. Bro. Trostle preached a sermon from Mat. 28: 19, 20; after meeting we repaired to where there was much water when he immersed three happy, believing souls. Meeting at night. Bro. Trostle again preached from Rom. 6.

Sun. 7. Meeting at 10 a. m. I preached from Psalm 119: 59–61. Tears began to flow freely. Meeting at 2:30 p. m., but as I was to preach again at night, I did not attend it. Bro. Trostle did. Sunday evening our house was a perfect jam. I preached from 2 Cor. 13: 5. It seemed as if the power of the Almighty had had come down to help us. But as the brethren always do, when their work is just begun, they go off and leave it; so here. This was my last meeting with the people. Bro. Trostle will remain a few days more, and will have a pleasant time bringing the Lord's wounded into camp. I lodged with Bro. E. Book, ready on to-morrow to depart. While talking with his daughter, an interesting maiden of 16, on the subject of salvation, I found that she was much concerned on that subject.

Mon. 8. The weather unpleasant, drizzling with sleet. In the morning exercises the daughter of Bro. Book, Annie, again manifested her deep concern for her salvation. Bro. Book took me in charge and conveyed me over another mountain to a new field of labor in East Waterford, Juniata county. On taking my leave, of Bro. Book's family, Annie said, "you must come again." What can I call you if I come back again? "A sister," was the prompt reply. God bless the dear child! She was buried with Christ in baptism during the week. In East Waterford I had my nights lodging with my cousin sister Sarah Stero and her kind husband Samuel. When I think how much this friend does for the Brethren, I give God thanks for his kindness and pray that he will yet be a brother in Christ. My labors were in a large house built for school and meeting purposes, the brethren having a share in it. I preached from St. John 3: 18.

Tues. 9. Visited friends and preached at night from Heb. 6: 9, last clause.

Wednes. 10. Visited friends and brethren and preached at night from Psalm 5: 3, 5.

Thurs. 11. Visited brethren and friends and at night preached from Heb. 12: 1, 2.

Fri. 12. Visited during the day and preached at night from Mark 10: 46—52.

Sat. 13. Visited at Abraham Rohrers', where we had a social meeting, preached at night from 1 Cor. 1: 9, house much crowded, two Presbyterian preachers present.

Sun. 14. In consequence of the Lutheran's regular appointment here at 2:30 p. m. and the Presbyterians (which is the prevailing religion here) having their sacramental meeting. This was the first meeting of the kind I ever attended. It is certainly to those who believe it, the easiest religion known to man. Salvation by predestination was the "Alpha and Omega" of the sermon. At 2:30 p. m. I preached at our usual place from Eccl. 12: 13, 14. At night I preached by invitation in the Presbyterian church to a very large congregation from Ps. 119: 59—61. This closed my labors here. Eight sermons in all, without any visible change of sentiment. The weather was rainy, the nights very dark, and the roads bad; yet notwithstanding all this, the house was full at every meeting of very attentive hearers.

Mon. 15. Elder Christian Myers took me in his charge to convey me to Johnstown, another new field of labor. I dined with him on the way, arrived at brother Benjamin Shallenberger's in time for supper, and preached at night in a fine, commodious school-house from Luke 10: 42.

Tues. 16. Passed the day at Bro. Shallenberger's, at night preached from St. John 1: 11—13.

Wednes. 17, visited some brethren, meeting at night, where Bro. Trostle again joined me. And here brother S. Yoder from Ill., on a visit among friends, met with us. He preached from 2 Tim. 4: 2.

Thurs. 18. Visited sister Bollinger an afflicted sister, confined to her bed over three months; had prayer with her, and now hope the Lord will make her bed in her affliction. From here we visited her parents, her father being in the 80th year of his age. He wished to be anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, which was done. His name is Jacob Stung. Meeting at night, where we met Eld. John Spanogle, and Isaac Myers of Ill. Bro. Trostle preached from Heb. 2: 1—3.

Fri. 19. Visited sister Maehappy, she being confined to her bed over three years. For her comfort we held a regular meeting and preached from Psalm 15: 69. Meeting at night, I preached from Jonah, 3d: 9.

Sat. 20. We were over night with brother Kauffman, and breakfasted on a very fine and well cooked wild turkey, which was the ninth his sons had captured this season. These mountains abound with these very savory birds. If I lived here perhaps I would spend too much of my time in pursuit of them. Meeting at 10 a. m. Bro. Trostle preached a telling sermon to the members from Mat. 5: 14—17. Dined with our friend Henry and his wife Annie Shallenberger. Henry and Lizzie, a young woman living with them, have been deeply impressed with the importance of salvation, and as the Lord has no pleasure in them that turn back, I pray that they never will turn back, and that Annie will go forward. Here we ate some fine venison which Henry had captured. Deer also abound in these mountains. Meeting at night, I preached from Psalm 138: 8, first clause. The power of the Almighty was felt to be present, one more was taken hold of and was overcome with weeping. He said next day: "I went out of the house in the midst of preaching, thinking I could refrain from weeping." Poor man! He did not know that the fountain of his heart was broken, and of course the stream would flow. It appears that he had a hard night of it; his wife, a sister, said to me, "If ever a sister tried to pray, I did." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." So it was in this case; early the next morning, Sunday 21st, he came to Bro. Shallenberger's where the brethren were, and where a kind husband and father, who had faithfully attended the meetings at East Waterford, had come for baptism. This brother stood in connection with the Baptist church for 25 years. Meeting at 10. a. m., Bro. Trostle preached a telling sermon from Acts 21: 30. After preaching the two believers were baptized by Elder Christian Myers. It being the regular time for the Methodists to hold meeting in the house we occupied, we had a social meeting at the house of Bro. Shallenberger, where a number of brethren and friends had assembled. The time for my return home had now come.

Mon. 22. I took my leave of the brethren and arrived safe at home on Tuesday 23, and found all well, for which I thank God. Elder Trostle and Spanogle remained on the field to gather in the Lord's wounded.

In conclusion I will say that the zeal of the membership was very commendable. Elder P. Long, notwithstanding his age and physical impairments, attended all the meetings while I was in Perry, but broke down after I left and came near dying. Isaac Eby and Edmond Book, ministers, missed no meetings; while Christian Myers crossed the two big mountains between his home and Perry, and attended six meetings, and in Juniata county he attended all. Bro. Isaac Book came over from Huntingdon county, and brethren and sisters from adjoining churches came to the place where the Lord met with his people. Such zeal inspires the zeal of the Lord's servants. For this, and for the unmerited love, friendship, and unbounded hospitality, I received at the hands of all with whom I associated, I thank God and take courage, but the good Lord will bless you all. D. P. Sayler.

Dear Pilgrim:—Though my fingers are almost numbed with much writing, I must not forget to give you a word.

On my arrival here yesterday, on business, I found in the office awaiting my attention, 36 letters, and last night's mail swelled the number. I do not allude to the matter to induce any one not to write to me and ask all necessary information. I court from those who contemplate coming west, and am ready "as much as lieth within me," to give all the information I can. Every day the prospects brighten, as to the probabilities of soon having a settlement of dear brethren in this part of God's heritage. Some of our letters bear the tidings that friends we left in the east have passed from earth; others upon whom the hand of affliction has been laid. Sad was I to learn such was the case of a dear young sister in Wayne county Ohio. In reading her letter, we could not help but inwardly exclaim: "Oh the consoling power of the religion of Jesus in times of affliction!" So resigned, so hopeful and joyous of spirit, looking forward to the great reward laid up for the meek. My dear sister K., you can say the Lord's will be done, for you have so trusted in Him that you know all he does is well done. Where such a strong arm of protection as that of our Father in Heaven, where a hand so soft as that felt by the sensitiveness of faith to be near and ready to wipe away every tear? And where an expression of love so sweet as that of a dying Saint? We answer; no where else in all this wide world can such consolation be found as a trust in Jesus' love; especially in times of affliction. Though billows run high, and the storm seems fierce, there is heard a sweet voice: "Be not afraid it is I." Oh vain and worldly-minded reader, how is it with thee when you feel the pains of disease? Ah! yes; you trouble and fear that it may be the stealthy steps of death, and to think of dying out of Christ—unprepared! Can you afford to risk so much for the pleasures of this world?

One more day and another year will have passed away. What changes come rushing to our remembrances! Kindred ties have been broken, family associations withsome have been severed. Death, as usual, has been reaping a harvest for the grave, dear ones have passed away who now have a place in our sad remembrance. But such is life here, and, from the many warnings around us we should learn wisdom. We look forward to the dawning of another year with anticipations of seeing its end; but how soon may our frail bark cease to stem the storm of life and we go down to the tomb. So it may be with you, dear reader. Let us then endeavor to be prepared for the momentous change.

We wish all of the readers of the Pilgrim "A happy new year," and may prosperity, especially in the "narrow way" crown you with her choicest blessings.

By the blessings of God, we are enjoying more than our usual good health. The weather now is pleasant after a few weeks of cold, dry weather. At the present time of writing we are sitting in a room without fire and are comfortable, notwithstanding a gentle wind is blowing in at the window from the snow clad mountains that loom up before our eyes and behind which the the decending sun will soon disappear.

Our western winds here are the warmest, and our south winds generally cold or chilly as they are burdened with more or less dampness.

In many respects the climate of this Territory is unlike that of the state east of this. In some respects it is better, in some not so good. It is claimed that the better part is much the largest, as to that we cannot yet say from personal experience.

Yours in love. J. S. Flory.

Dear brethren of the Pilgrim:—

The last number of the last volume is at hand with its full pages of wholesome instructions. The "Three Feasts' and the Birth of Christ, by D. P. Sayler, "Time Flies, O how swiftly!" by Leonard Furry. "There are two sides to the question," by J. H. Moore, and "Finish thy Work," by Laora H. Miller, are papers worthy of notice, and should be carefully considered by every brother and sister under whose notice they may happen to come to fall; while "Christ's Yoke," by J. B. B. is so truthful, humble and simple that it strikes me that it is truly worthy of the space it occupies, and observing this rich train of facts, and taking into consideration the correspondence, editorials and reports, marriages &c., I at first imagined that the last issue was of unusual interest, but after examining the whole volume (of which I have preserved all of the numbers, except one which was missed in the early part of the volume,) I find them interesting throughout, and can learn much by rereading, and considering the whole, I can truly say, that I have been richly paid for the $1.50 sent you at the beginning of this volume. I have read the Pilgrim from the beginning of the 3d volume, and have been well pleased with its contents. Sometimes there has been considerable controversy, with which we find no great fault, providing, the brethren do not fall out by the way for we are to earnestly contend for the faith &c., and in earnestly contending for the faith brethren should be careful not to offend one of these little ones. We all know the penalty annexed and cannot be too careful. Many good writers have caused many of their readers to frown on them for using insulting language which could easily have been avoided.

Brethren, we are living here in the west, in a new country, that has principally been settled since the war. Some of the first settlers, and some that came here with considerable means, are pretty favorably circumstanced, but there are others that are poor and it takes all their time and means to support their families. I have asked several to take the Pilgrim, they say they would like to read it but are not able to pay for it. Are there not some brethren that are so circumstanced in the older states that they could pay a part of their subscription, providing we would send a few names? We believe that the editors will do their part. I have been here a little over a year.

There has been six received into the Church by baptism since I have been here, two of them have changed time for eternity with the hope of a blessed immortality. There has been several received by letter since. The members here number about forty-five, with two ministers, brother A. C. Numer in the first degree, and the writer in the second degree of the ministry. Also three deacons, viz: J. B. Bollinger, David Bollinger and Jacob Dale. Now there are brethren traveling occasionaly and we hope they will remember us and give us a call. We will entertain you as well as we can. We know that brother H. R. give our Kansas cooks a bad name, which our sisters did not fail to notice and make some remarks in connection with it. We believe our sisters to be as tidy here as elsewhere, nor do we live in holes under the ground. Bro. H. must have got in the wrong pew. We desire some of the laboring brethren to come and labor for us as we believe there can be much good done here.

Your brother in the Lord.
John J. Hoover.

Brother Brumbaugh: I have been a reader of the Pilgrim for two years and love it very much and am very anxious for it to continue its welcome visits for 1874. We gave it an invitation the first of this month with other correspondence and are very anxious for it to come. I would not be without the Pilgrim by no means. I have been working all I could, or doing all I could to get subscribers for the good paper and will continue my efforts, for I do think every family ought to take some good religious paper, and especially those that are raising up children. Some say we have the Bible to read. Very good, and we should not neglect to read it, but if we are industrious and love good reading we can find time to read both, and how it makes my heart ache when I hear some say, "I have no money for the Pilgrim," and see them spend so much for unnecessary dress. But this does not hinder me from offering them the Pilgrim to read. I think we ought to let any one have our Pilgrim that will accept of it, as soon as we are done reading it ourselves. I would not say so much in favor of it if I did not believe it was doing good. I love to read the church news and the interesting correspondence of the sisters. Dear sisters, do write often for I think some of you are doing a great deal of good for the cause of Christ. If I could write as some of you can I would spend more time and money than I do, but I do not feel myself capable of writing for publication.

But dear sisters, I do feel sometimes that we could do more good than we do in writing and letting our light shine by setting good examples before others, that seeing our good works they may be constrained to glorify our Father which is in Heaven. Oh, dear sisters, let us strive for the starry crown. When we see so many walking the downward road to endless ruin, how we ought to pray for them and warn them of their danger, for death is abroad in our country taking them off on the right and on the left, prepared or unprepared, they must go. Dear reader do you think of this? How awful to meet death unprepared, and as it finds us so will judgment, then if you are unprepared to meet death, stop and think before you farther go. From your unworthy sister.

MADISON, GEORGIA, Dec, 3, 1873.

Brother Brumbaugh:—The PILGRIM has not been a visitor to my home, as by some means I never had an opportunity of examining it until a few days ago I received No. 50, Vol. 4. In it I see contributions from brethren with whom I have been permitted to enjoy happy seasons of social and religious intercourse. Isolated from the entire brotherhood, as I have been for a long time, I love to hear from those whose lots are cast in more favorable society. The cares and duties of life forbid extensive private correspondence. But when the cares and perplexities of business and labor cast a gloomy shadow o'er the pathway of life, and cause sadness to the burdened heart, 'tis a relief to trace words of hope, comfort and encouragement, over the signature of loved ones whose hearts beat in sympathy with weary ones, and whose thoughts tend to lead our minds away from the disappointments of life, to yonder bright and happy world, where we may hope to meet again and meet under far more favobable circumstances than we may ever hope for here. May God grant it. Fraternally yours,

E. HEYSER.

SWATARA CHURCH, BERKS Co, PA.

Dear Brother: As there has been no report from this Church, I will give a little, hoping it may be acceptable. Eld. David Mackey has gone to rest. He was a minister of this Church for about 40 years and for the last 10 or 12 years the Bishop. I cannot now give the exact age, but think it was up in 70.

Dear cousins and friends, let us always remember what grandfather so earnestly taught us. The wife of Jno. A. Garhard, daughter of Jos. E. Merky is no more. She was a member of the Church for about five years, and leaves a husband and four children to mourn their loss.

I give these items of news because there has not, as yet, been anything reported for the PILGRIM from this church. Uncle John Hertzler, why do you not give us some news through the PILGRIM? WM. MERKY.

We wonder too why it is—will be glad to hear from more of the eastern Churches.—ED.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

God willing, there will be a series of meetings in the Aughwick Congregation commencing in Germany Valley at the Brethren's Meeting-house, on Saturday evening Feb. 21, 1874. All who desire to be with us are hereby cordially invited to attend. By order of the church.

——In the Winamac District, Ind., Nov. 15, '73, our old and much beloved sister, (name not given Ed.) leaving a sorrowing husband and many children and relatives to mourn their loss. She was the wife of a deacon and will be very much missed in the Church. Her age, as near as can be ascertained, was about 63 yrs.

D. R. FREEMAN.

THOMPSON.—Aug. 2, '73, Emma, infant daughter of friend Samuel and Nancy Thompson, aged 1 year, 2 months and 15 days. Funeral discourse by the writer.

BROADWATER.—Near Preston, Fillmore Co., Minn., October 6 '73, Milton M., son of friend Benjamin and Amanda E. Broadwater, aged 11 months and 19 days. Funeral discourse by the writer, from 1 Peter 1 chapter and 24th vr.

Parents weep not for your little Milton, for the Savior says, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

W. H. RONEY.

DAVIS.—In the Mexico Church, Miami Co., Ind, Albert F., son of bro. Thomas and sister Elizabeth Davis, aged 3 years, 1 month and 3 days. Funeral service by brother Isaac Fisher and other.

Thus the Lord has plucked another bud from His garden below, to bloom in immortal beauty in the paradise above.

J. C. RICHER.

SHROCK.—In the Rock Run District, near Goshen, Ind., Oct. 30 '73, brother David Shrock, aged 76 years, 2 months and 6 days.

The subject of this notice was only sick a few days, and shortly before his departure he called for the Elders, who anointed him according to the instructions of the apostle James. Funeral services by brethren Jacob Berkey and Levi Weaver.

EFFIE OPIERMAN.

SOLLENBERGER.—In the Snake Spring Valley Church, Bedford Co., Pa., of Consumption, Sister Sarah, daughter of Bro. Samuel and sister Catharine Sollenberger, aged 23 years, 1 month and 23 days. Funeral discourse by Bro. Leonard Furry from John 14 three first verses.

The subject of this notice lived and died with her grandfather, Bro. Henry Snyder. She has always been a truthful, kind and respectable daughter, though like many others, neglected the one thing needful while in health. Five weeks before she died, she became alarmed about the salvation of her soul, when she called for the brethren and requested to be baptized. Though very weak, she was carried to the water and afterwards felt refreshed, and in a few weeks requested to be anointed in the name of the Lord. She bore her affliction with much patience and in her last days became entirely reconciled to the Lord's will, regretting her neglect in not serving Him sooner. She died in hope of immortal bliss We sorrow not as those who have no hope, and to her young companions we would say, take heed the Lord has called.

ELISA HERSHBERGER.

ALIFF.—In the Raleigh Church District, Caroline C., infant daughter of brother Thomas and sister Ann Aliff, aged 3 yrs. 3 months and 21 days. Funeral sermon by the writer from these words, "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

ALIFF.—In the same District, sister Sarah Aliff, aged 87 years, having been a faithful member of the church 37 years. Funeral services Dec. 14 '73, from Rev 20: 9, to a large congregation, half of them crowded out of the house, seated in the snow, the house being too small. Farewell sister till we meet again.

MAYNOR.—In the same District, on the 16th day of Dec. '73, Clarkson Maynor, aged about 45 years, leaving a wife and 5 small children to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse from Rev. 21: 45-46, to a large concourse of weeping friends and relatives WM. H. BAILY.

CARNEYHAM.—In Shipswaney district Lagrange county, Ind. daughter of Alexandria Carneyham.

CARONA was sick about 25 hours and her spirit took its flight to the spirit world while she was being laid on her cooling board.

CHARLEY, was seen to become sick and in 4 hours his spirit followed his sister's to that upper and better world, both on the same day, Nov. 17, 1873.

The scene was a very solemn one. Their bodies were laid side by side in one grave. Carona was 4 years 2 months and 1 day old. Charley was 4 months and 27 days old. Disease, spotted fever Funeral services from John 5: 25—30, by Samuel Lupold and Benjamin Leer.

SUMEY.—In Shipsewaney district, Lagrange Co, Ind., of epileptic of the brain, and heart, John Sumey, on Oct. 21, 1873. He was as well as usual and in two hours and twenty minutes he departed this life. He was a very fine man and much loved by all, but was not a member of any church.

In eight weeks his side companion followed him through the dark valley of the shadow of death. She was formerly a member of the "Winebrennarians." They formerly lived in Wayne county, Ohio, where they sold their possessions and came to the West to spend the remainder of their days with their children. They enjoyed themselves very well for a short time when they were called to try the realities of another world.

John Sumey's age 72 years, 11 months 21 days. Susannah Sumey's age 78 years 8 months and 14 days. Funeral services by David M. Truby, Henry Gephart and others.

ESHLEMAN.—In Jefferson Co., Iowa, Dec. 14 '73, Susannah, wife of Samuel Eshleman, aged 69 years and 25 days. She was a consistent member of the Mennonite Church for many years, much beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a kind husband, five children and numerous relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Three of her children belong to the Church of the Brethren. Her remains were committed to the earth on the 15th, witnessed by a large concourse of people. Occasion improved by brother Peter Lutz.

The subject of this notice was afflicted over 9 years. The doctors called her disease slow palsy. It came on her by degrees, like numbness, on her left hand and went all over her left side until it got entirely helpless, then it commenced on her right side the same way until she was entirely helpless and in that way she had to lay. In daytime they would set her in an arm chair. She could not walk nor even feed herself, and by spells suffered great pain. D. B. TEETER.

(Companion please copy.)

BOTTOMFIELD.—In the Clover Creek Church, near Williamsburg, Blair Co., Pa., October 31, 1873, our beloved brother John Bottomfiled, aged 66 years, 6 mos. and 27 days. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren.

Our brother some time the first of the month, took a trip to Indiana and Ohio on business, connected with his deceased brother's estate, in company with his brother Joseph, and on their arrival in Ohio, near Dayton, at his brother's home took sick, (disease kidney affection,) dispatched home to Pa., for his only son Samuel, but ere Samuel could reach his father he was numbered with the dead. Preparations were hastily made to bring him home, and he was met by his son about 2 miles on the way to Pa., and Oh, you may imagine the feelings of his son meeting his father a corpse on the hearse, not even having an idea that the case was a dangerous one. Our brother leaves a bereaved widow, a son and daughter, to mourn their loss .A. S. Beightel.

LITERATURE.

"NOTES, Exegetical, Practical and Devotional, on the book of Exodus; for the Pulpit, Family, and Sabbath School, by Alfred Nevin, D. D., L. L. D., with 7 illustrations." Published by Claxton, Remson, & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, Pa., for sale by J. C. Blair, Huntingdon, Pa.

Dr. Nevin's previous works, and especially his "Exposition of the Gospels and Acts" have gained for him such a reputation as a commentator that the announcement of a new book by him is a guarantee of its worth and bespeaks for him a cordial welcome. These notes are not only valuable as being full and satisfactory explanations of this book of the Old Testament Scriptures, but are extremely appropriate at this time, as the International series of Sabbath School Lessons takes up the Exodus of the Israelites, January 1st, 1874, and this cannot fail to be the very help needed by Ministers, Parents, Sabbath School Teachers and pupils in the study of those lessons, making them intelligible, interesting and practical. Price $1.50.

CHRISTMAS POEMS. By J. W. Welch. This is the second book of poems by this gifted rural poet—"The Bard of the Mountain"—issued from the press of J. R. Durborrow & Co., of this place. Mr. Welch manifests peculiar poetic ability—natural talent. His poems run quite smoothly, have considerable power, and contain some exceedingly fine passages. This little book comprises several poems.—The Night before Christmas; Address to Christmas; The Poets Dream; The Outcast, in two parts; and Farewell to Christmas. Price 25 cents. The Crowning Gift of Heaven by same author is now to be sold for 40 cents per copy.

MAGAZINES.—The January Magazines present rare attractions, and it seems as though the publishers were determined to redeem every promise given in their new prospectuses for 1874.

SCRIBNER'S seems to improve with every number. This number opens with a poem by H. H., entitled The Singer's Hills, followed by an article from that exciting book "From the Earth to the Moon, and A Journey Around the Moon." by Jules Verne. These are followed by a continuation of the serials of Earthen Pitchers, &c., a profusely illustrated chapter of "The Great South," showing Texan life perfectly. We do not know where so much useful and entertaining matter could be found at so little cost, as by taking Scribner for 1874.

SCIENCE OF HEALTH commences its fourth volume with the January number. This monthly is devoted to physical development and health reform. It is not a medical journal full of technical terms but is plain, practical and independent in its teachings, and should be read by every family. This number contains many valuable articles, opening with "How to Get Well and How to Keep Well." The Household Department is always made up of matter of great importance to every housekeeper.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL opens the year with a creditable number. Among the articles making up its table of contents we have Gerald Massey, the Poet Author with portrait; Real Success; Analagous Expression in Men and Animals, illustrated; the articulation school for the deaf and dumb; Hoosac Tunnel, illustrated; the currency of the future, &c., besides many other entertaining articles. Now is the time to subscribe. S. R. Wells, N. Y. $3.00 a year.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE for January, contains a lavish supply of first-rate articles. It is now in its fourteenth volume and every year has increased its popularity and added new friends to its large list of admirers. Though retaining its old name, it has not the slightest connection with its former proprietor, but has for many months been the exclusive property of Mr. S. E. Shutes, its present publisher. H. V. Osborne (Tenoroom) still continues as its editor and is the only person employed in that capacity—giving to the magazine not a careless supervision, but a direct personal attention in every department. The magazine is improving constantly, and is splendidly adapted to the members of the household. The present number contains three engravings and other good things in proportion.

Price of Magazine one dollar per year—with chromo YOSEMITE, one dollar and a half. Address

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE,
Newburgh, N. Y.

SANITARIAN for January opens with an illustrated article on the Cincinnati Hospital. This is followed by a continuation of Hospitals of New York: Defective House Drainage; Prevention of Disease; The Sewage Question, &c., &c. This is a valuable periodical, devoted entirely to Sanitary Science in its proper sense. $3.00 a year. A. S. Barnes & Co., Publishers.

THE CHILDREN'S PAPER published by H. J. Kurtz of Dayton, O., is a neat little monthly, finely illustrated, and is well adapted to the wants of our little ones. Price 30 cents, single, 25 cents in clubs of more to one address.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 130,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

POETRY.

"I AM WITH YOU ALWAY EVEN UNTO THE END OF THE WORLD."

BY WESLEY.

If thy heart be burdened, weary, worn and sad,
In the sombre garments of defection clad,
Hear the voice of Jesus from beyond the tomb.
Let His cheering promise drive away thy gloom.

O'er the surging waters dashing at thy feet,
Hear the soothing accents gently now repeat,
As the guardian angels to thy aid descend,
"I am with you alway even to the end."

Canst thou doubt the merit of the sacrifice?
Which for thy redemption from the cross did rise;
To appease stern justice he the burden bore,
Suffered for the guilty, blushed in crimson gore.

Oh! look up my brethren, thou hast naught to fear,
See, The Intercessor for thee doth appear!
Rivers of salvation far and wide extend,
He is with you alway, even to the end.

Why should fear or sadness overcast thy soul?
When from mercy's fountain living waters roll,
Though in gloom and darkness we may journey here,
This great consolation shall our spirits cheer.

Let us be encouraged though temptations rise;
Fight the battle nobly thou shalt win the prize,
Ill shall ne'er befall thee led by such a friend,
He is with thee "always even to the end."

Though the murky shadows of the land of death,
Settle o'er thy hearth-stone, steal thy loved one's breath,
Yield in meek submission to thy Master's will,
Soon the light of Heaven shall thy bosom fill.

Then when the light is waning and the gate appears,
Leading to the mansions where there are no tears;
Forms of brilliant beauty with thee shall ascend.
Jesus loves us "alway even to the end."

In that land of sunshine with the Holy King,
Where the mighty chorus o'er the plains shall ring,
And in adoration low the angels bend,
He will love us ever, our praises ne'er shall end.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A VIEW OF THE PAST AND PRESENT.

And it came to pass that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child, and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered not so, but he shall be called John.—Luke 1:59-60.

As our mind wandered back over the past, we were made to reflect on what occurred eighteen hundred and seventy-three years ago, when God remembered the condition of the human family, and saw they needed a Savior. How peculiar the circumstances were that brought about the wonderful event! In the first place a visit of the angel to Zacharias while officiating in his priestly office; he being of the course of Abia, whose duty it was to exercise in the duties of his office at stated times according to the command of God, his wife being of the daughters of Aaron, and they were both righteous before God walking in all the commandments of the Lord blameless. And it came to pass, that while he executed the priests office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord, and the entire multitude were without engaged in prayer at the time of incense. While engaged in that solemn work the angel appeared unto him and, delivered the wonderful and unlooked for message that his prayer was heard. Perhaps the most solemn and most glorious and joyful event of his life, to have an audible expression of approval from God. Think of this kind reader when we walk righteous before God, when an altar is erected in our house and the incense of our hearts are burning at the altar. An expression, if not audible, will bring joy and gladness which no man can take away. His prayer was not only heard but the announcement was made that his wife Elizabeth should bear him a son and his name should be called John, and many would rejoice at his birth for he would be great in the sight of the Lord, and many of the children of Israel he would turn to the Lord their God.

In the days of Abraham God established the covenant of circumcision and commanded him to circumcise himself and all his household, and ever after, all those born in his house and all bought with money were to undergo the rite; every male child born at eight days old must be circumcised, which made them a separate people, having favors above the rest of mankind, for thro' them must life and immortality be brought to light. Before the days of Abraham a Redeemer was promised to fallen man. Therefore a way must be made and through Abraham and the covenant of circumcision it was brought about. Now that the people might be prepared to receive the coming Redeemer, God, in His wisdom, thought it necessary to send one before to pave the way, or prepare the people to receive Him when He came. In glancing over his vast Israel we discover He selected persons that were righteous before Him walking in all His commandments, and ordinances blameless.

Now kind reader, here is a thought worthy of our attention. In looking over the plans of God's dealing with man, when anything wonderful, anything special, anything good was to be brought to man through the agency of man, the righteous were always selected, and if ever you receive an appointment, or ever expect to be sanctified for any good purpose before God, you must first become righteous and walk in the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, and not only so, but if you ever expect to stand the test at the bar of God, you must become righteous. Glad are we to know that we have the means at our command to become so, for God has revealed them to us.

And they came according to custom to circumcise the child on the eighth day, and when they had given him a name they were not a little surprised that the name was not accepted by the mother. Then by making signs to the father, they found they were of one mind concerning the name because the angel commanded the name of John to be given, which means the grace of God. From that time the mouth of Zacharias was opened, his tongue was loosed, and he spake and praised God so as to cause a great sensation throughout the hill country of Judea, and fear came upon them, wondering what manner of child this should be, and the hand of the Lord was with him, and the child grew and waxed strong in spirit and was in the desert till the day of his shewing unto Israel. Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberias Cesaar, the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness, and he responded to the call by coming into the country about Jordan preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, or in other words, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, which is the fulfillment of the prophet Esaias, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the ways of the Lord, make his paths straight, fill up the valleys, level down the mountains, make the crooked straight and the rough ways smooth, and all flesh shall see the salvation of God." O, the manifest token of God's grace now appearing to man in a milder form, not attended with such tedious labor, with so many ceremonial forms, with sacrificial offerings, which was considered by the prophet both crooked and rough. These were straightened and smoothed for the convenience of man with a John at the helm, saying, "Come and see the salvation of God." His father Zacharias said to the Holy Ghost, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people, and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us which is an emblem of power." Behold the multitude coming, vipers and all to his baptism, but He said, "Generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee the wrath to come? Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance and don't begin to say, we have Abraham to our father, for God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." And when the people ask him saying, "What shall we do?" then He answered and said, "He that hath two coats let him impart to him that hath none." Here are fruits worthy of imitation. He that hath meat do likewise, exact no more than is right and just, do violence to no one, do not make false accusations. What a model of righteousness is here laid down by the forerunner of Christ! Are we willing to accept it in its plain, positive terms? And as the people had some knowledge of the coming of the Messiah, they began to wonder whether he were not him. But he told them that he baptized them with water, but one would come after him who was more worthy than him, He would baptize the righteous with the Holy Ghost, and the wicked with fire; with fan in hand he would purge the floor, put the wheat in the garner, but burn the chaff. Eventually the Savior came and was also baptized. The heavens opened and God's approval manifested by the descent of the Holy Ghost in a bodily shape like a dove, with a voice declaring this is the Son of God.

Now I have set before you an open door which no man can shut. I now increase, but John must decrease. Christ through the Evangelist John says, "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way is a thief and a robber; but he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep: to him the porter openeth."—John 10: 1, 2. Here we have it all before the mind, when he says I am the door of the sheep. He is the shepherd, he entered by the door, the porter opened, which was John the baptist, the door is baptism. He, Christ, went before; we must enter in the same way, that is, by him. If any came before him to affect an entrance they were thieves and robbers. He says, "I am the door if any man enter in by me he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." The good shepherd gave his life for the sheep, by offering himself for the sins of the whole world, and opened up a new and a living way which is accessible to all. No one is debarred, no one slighted, but all invited to come, and whosoever will may take the water of life freely. When we take a general view of God's great mercy shown to man in all ages of the world, and the sinfulness of man, and how unwilling he is and was to accept the offers of salvation in the different ages of the world, we are made to wonder at the patience of God. It is said God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever would believe on him should not perish but have everlasting life. And again, "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed on us that we should be called the sons of God." Truly language fails us to express, and finite minds unable to conceive or comprehend the kind of love, or the amount of love, which has been lavished upon us; and yet the thousands who live devoid of peace with God, or live as though there was no God to love, no heaven to obtain, or no hell to shun! It is truly remarkable.

John the baptist when he had run his course, according to divine appointment, was cast into prison and finally beheaded because he dared to reprove wickedness in high places. Jesus was condemned and crucified as a malefactor because he done wonderful things, and supposed to be born a king, jealousy took hold of the people; those in high life became fearful they would be shorn of their power, although they professed to have in possession the oracles of God, and conducting God's affairs according to the plan laid down by Moses and the prophets.

Peter suffered martyrdom because he had courage to vindicate the cause of God. Paul was beheaded for preaching Jesus and the resurrection to a fallen race. You see persecution is hatched and cradled in high places, and was in all ages of the world. From whence justice and mercy ought to emanate we find persecution, rapine, and murder. If you wish to seek righteousness, mercy, and truth, go where the humble dwell, for satan is represented to be the prince and power of the air, and ruleth in the hearts of the disobedient. So then if we get down low, down at the feet of Jesus, satan will sail over us, and will not be able to reach us, for he cannot get as low as the feet of Jesus. Whenever we begin to sail high, we get into the element he soars around in, and we will be attacked, and likely overcome through his deception. But we are sorry to say, the general movement of the Church is upward, upward, ONWARD. Keep up with the times fast age, fast living, fast Christianity, and if we are not very careful we will altogether lose sight of the "Ancient Landmarks." If our old brethren that died fifty years ago, were here now they would hardly know the Brethren anywhere. Let the cry go up everywhere: "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate."

GEORGE WORST.

THE END OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end shall greatly increase.—Job 8:7.

This was the reasoning of Bildad the Shuhite. He wished to prove that Job could not possibly be an upright man, for if he were so, he here affirms that his prosperity would increase continually, or that if he fell into any trouble, God would awake for him and make the habitation of his righteousness prosperous; and though his family were now all destroyed and his wealth scattered to the winds, yet if he were an upright man God would surely appear for him, and his latter end would greatly increase.

Now the utterances of Bildad, and the other two men who came to comfort Job, but who made his life bitter and his wounds sorer, are not to be accepted as being inspired. They spake as men—as mere men. They reasoned no doubt, in their own esteem, logically, but the spirit of God was not with them in their speech, therefore in regard to any sentiment uttered by them, we must use our own judgment, and if it be not consistent with the Holy Scripture, it will be our bounden duty to reject it as being but the word of man,—of a wise and ancient man it is true, but still of a man only.

But in regard to the passage which I have selected as a text, it is true, altogether apart from its being said by Bildad, or even being found in the Bible at all, its truth the facts of the book of Job prove, for Job did greatly increase in his latter end. His beginning was small; he was brought to poverty, to the potsherd and the dunghill. He had many graves, but no children; he had many losses, and he had now nothing left to lose, and yet God did awake for him, his righteousness came out from the darkness which had eclipsed it, he shone in sevenfold prosperity. The words of Bildad were prophetic, tho' he knew it not and seemingly did not so intend it, and used language by which Job might know that he doubted his fidelity, yet God made it come true after all. We have here a principle, a great principle against which none can ever successfully contend, the beginning of the godly and the upright man may be very small, but his latter end shall greatly increase.

This text was suggested to my mind on my late circuit to the Love feasts which come off in the Spring and Fall season of each year in the churches around us, while listening to a brother minister giving an account of an intelligent lady he had conversed with, who had been a member of a fashionable church for several years, but now sees the errors among the people of her religious choice, in not observing all the commandments of the New Testament, and now believes and knows that in the Church of the Brethren all are believed and observed. She now feels she ought to unite herself with the Brethren where she can believe and obey all the commands of her Savior. And as may be readily inferred, such an one will be sorely tried in being ridded and delivered from the hand of strange children, whose mouths speak vanity, and whose right hand is the hand of falsehood, yet strange to say, of this the young woman fears no trouble; she feels that to forsake error is an act that God will honor, and unless we forsake all, we cannot be his disciples. Her trouble and fears lie in another direction. Her fears are that she will not enjoy the same amount of happiness she thinks the members of the church do enjoy. This is a strange temptation surely, but is nevertheless not at all uncommon, and while men continue to measure themselves by the appearance of others, there will be more or less of it. It is felt by different names and known by different names, but is one and the same spirit. With some it takes this form: My beginning in religion was so small that I cannot tell where it did begin, and therefore I sometimes think I cannot have been converted at all, but am still in the gall of bitterness. Another feels himself so weak that he thinks he can do nothing in the way of discharging the practical duties of Christianity, and because he cannot sing, read and pray with the family as some other one, he is tempted not to do it at all. Another doubts and fears whether his faith is strong enough to carry him through persecution should it arise. Others don't know but what they serve God more through fear than love &c. And now this dear seeker after truth is tempted to fear she will not enjoy as much happiness as she thinks the members do enjoy, and if so, she would be disappointed. All the above alluded to trials common to the Christian life, are the effect of the same spirit, while the devil is the author of it all. We in all our trials and temptations, should always look at his objective point, which is the destruction of the believer always; but his attacks are always at points most congenial to our natural feelings. So with the young lady in question, if he can establish a doubt in her mind, that she cannot enjoy the same amount of happiness in the Church others do, she will conclude she had as well remain where she is, that perfect happiness is no where enjoyed, and she had as well remain with the people of her first choice, which will be so congenial to her nature that he will at last lull her to sleep in the church in which she knows the Lord is not obeyed, and the ending will be evil. Evil things often seem to begin well, but they end badly. There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the end of it is death. Evil things begin like mountains; they end as mole-hills. Behold satan in the garden of Eden, wherein the temptation to sin is his promise, "Ye shall be as gods." How great is its beginning, but where, O where does it end? So will it be with us my friends, if we choose the path of evil. Evil goes downward; it has its great things first, and its terrible things last. Not so, however with good. With good the beginning is small, but its latter end doth greatly increase. They are like Jacob's ladder—they ascended round by round. We begin as men, we end as angels; we climb until the promise of satan is fulfilled in a sense in which he never understood or meant it, we become as Gods and are made partakers of the Divine. We shall see Him as He is, and we shall be like Him.

Now then let me talk but a moment with such as may be thus in trouble in order to calm your fears. Have you, my dear brother or sister, ever learned to distinguish between grace and gifts? For you must learn to know they are very dissimilar. A man may be saved who has not a grain of gifts, but none can be saved who has no grace. The brother who preaches and prays so well, and the sister who can talk so fluently, and can and do say so many nice things about religion, all these act so well because God has given them excellent gifts, and it may not be because of grace.

Another question will I put to you, my dear tempted brother. Have you ever learned to distinguish between grace that saves, and grace which develops itself afterwards? Remember there are some graces that are absolately necessary to the saving of the soul, while there are others that are only necessary to its comfort. Faith, for instance, is absolutely necessary for salvation, but assurance is not. Love is indispensible, but that high degree of love which influences the martyr's spirit, is not required of every one, even of those who are saved. The possession of grace in some degree is needful to salvation, but the possession of the highest degree, tho' it be extremely desirable, is not absolutely necessary for an entrance into Heaven. Then if I be the weakest lamb in Jesus' fold, I will be happy to think that I am in the flock. If I be the smallest babe in Jesus' family, I will bless His name to think that I have a portion among the sanctified. If I be the smallest jewel in the Savior's crown, I will glisten and shine as best I can, to the praise of Him who bought me with His blood. If then, fellow Christian, you have but little beginnings, quiet your fears, for these beginnings will save your soul, and in the end will greatly increase, and you may in this rejoice exceedingly.

A few words to the lady seeking truth, and has fears, and I am done. In what sense do you think the members of the church enjoy happiness that you have fears you cannot attain unto? You are well aware that we do not enjoy happiness in the sense in which a boisterous professing religion enjoy it; for we don't believe that there is anything acceptable to God in a boisterous screaming, stamping, shouting, crawling on all fours on the floor, or pounding on the back, with all the zeal of the false prophets of Baal, and hence we believe there is no Scriptural happiness in it. This spirit of delusion and anti-scripture however has tainted the minds of many who really think some rude manifestations are evidences of Christian happiness. But you will agree with me that anything not taught in the Scriptures does not belong to Christianity, and as nothing of this kind is found in the Scripture neither expressed nor implied, set it down as an idle delusion.

The happiness the Scripture Christian enjoys consists in doing the Lord's commandments. The apostles enjoyed happiness in this that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name.—Acts 1:41. Certainly none of these shouting professors will rejoice in suffering shame for His name, for they have none of His service to be ashamed of. Their antics and crawling are none of Jesus' commandments, and hence have nothing to be ashamed of for Christ. But we in washing one anothers' feet may be laughed at by such, and then we have something to endure for Christ, and certainly in the happiness such obedience affords, you need not have fears that any will enjoy more of than you. And as all true Christian happiness consists in the doing the commandments of the Lord, I don't see in what your fears rest. "Blessed are they that do his commandments," is the language of the spirit of God in the Revelations 22:14. And "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—St. John 13:17. The very thought that while living in disobedience and sin we do not do any of these humiliating commands of the Savior, and now doing and obeying from the heart that form of doctrine delivered us, we are made free from sin, and are made the servants of righteousness, we cannot feel otherwise than happy in the observance of them.

I shall never forget the first Communion season I engaged in. While sitting at the table with my brethren, I looked over the outside crowd where I used to occupy a place. I could now see the vanity and uselessness of such a life I lived when that was my society, but now being counted worthy of God and the brethren to have a part in the service of God as commanded by my Savior, my heart was full of joy. And I am just sure if you give your will to the Lord, and let him humble your heart to be righteous with God, by walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, your happiness will be excelled by none, for in the knowledge of doing all the commands of Jesus consists the only true happiness, and from this standpoint you can enojy your full share.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

Man is not, neither can he be, influenced by a more pure and holy element than that of undying brotherly love, for it is more than mortal; its birth-place is Heaven; it is a sweet emanation from God Himself. Perhaps there is nothing in creation's wide domain, with which man is so intimately connected, of such intrinsic value, that throws over his pathway, while he tarries here below, such brilliant and dazzling beams of celestial light, and wraps around him such glowing beauties of resplendant glories, as brotherly love. It towers in sublimity and native grandure far above the dark and frowning clouds of envy, hatred and malice, and the foul breath of malignant slander. It throws around the object of its kind affection and regard its mighty power and willing protection, using its shield to ward off the shafts of the wicked, and puts forth its giant arm and snatches from the very jaws of the ruthless enemy these of its warm love and tenderness. It is this bright trait in man's character that conduces so much and so highly to his happiness and refined enjoyment while passing through this imperfect state of existence, for by this we are distinguished and placed at a lofty distance in the scale of beings above the brute creation around us. We all know, by more or less experience, how bleak and desolate this earth would be, how despoiled of its joys and sweet communions, how stripped of its pleasures and robbed of its sunny smiles, how insupportable and overpowering its trials and disappointments, how cold and cheerless in aspect the human face divine, how would the Universe be converted into a black and frigid wilderness of wild despair, were all the finer feelings chilled, were brotherly love and all its warm gushing affections which cement heart to heart, binding them together as a chain of adamant, blotted out from the face of the earth forever.

Brotherly love is a mighty power that raises us far above the changing vicissitudes of this sometimes dark and gloomy world, and the pitiless peltings of the howling storms of bleak and sad adversity. When a world frowns with hateful malignancy upon us, and all we hold near and dear on earth, when it scorns and hates without a just cause, how exceedingly pleasant, how agreeable and delightful are the warm, generous and confiding smiles of those in whom we can place implicit confidence—on whom we can lean for support and succor. Such brotherly love dispels the dark musty clouds of wretched despair, and sheds a bright and cheering ray of sunshine, joy and gladness over our rough and uneven path. How important then, my dear brethren and sisters, that we have that lasting love upon whose fidelity and steadfast adherence we can rely with unshaken confidence in the dark hours of severe adversity, trials and temptations, sorrow and sadness—those who will not forsake or desert us, but will weep when we weep and rejoice when we rejoice.

Brotherly love does not by any means, require us to overlook the faults and imperfections of our brother; we are not to uphold him in anything but what is honorable, just and virtuous. The most glorious and most enduring manifestations of true brotherly love, is that affection which we watch over our brother with anxious solicitude the actions of another, pointing out to him, not to the wide world, his errors and shortcomings, and by the gentle influence of love divine, lead him back to the bright and joyous paths of peace and sunshine. It teaches us to endure, with kind and pure feelings, the waywardness and the little variations in his temper and character, whether he is elated with undue joy or depressed with sorrow and sadness, ever remembering that the best of us, those whose lives come the nearest to the divine standard, are very imperfect indeed, for those who stand as untoward circumstances, over which perhaps, they had not control, fall tomorrow.

"Deal meekly with the hope that guides
The lowliest brother straying from thy side—
If right, they bid thee tremble for thine own,
If wrong, the verdict is with God alone."

A SALUTATION BY THE WAY.

"Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—1 Thess. 4: 18.

Toil-worn pilgrim! Where away? Ah in your brow I read, "bound for the haven of rest," but ere you shall view your Sovereign in that eminence where your eye is so fixed—where you raise your toil-stricken hands when you "ask," yea ere He come to receive you, you may fall beneath the clod. But if He fell who had His glory with the Eternal Father before the world was, and who is exalted at His Father's right hand again, why should we fear to fall? Or, if it should be our lot to remain, we shall not be prevented by those who sleep. And hath He decreed for us a few more "light afflictions?" Amen. They shall work out "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" If another sheaf can be gathered ere He come, be the glory God's and ours the joys of our Lord. If we are spared, surely it was decreed in the council-chambers of Heaven, and if we answer the design He will receive us up when He shall call,—those rise who sleep, though unprofitable servants we be, yet that very day shall we at last ourselves see Abraham, enjoy the mutual society of Isaac in the immediate presence of Jacob. That day shall Noah be present with us, and Daniel and all the holy prophets will be in our midst. Imaginations of the personage of Peter and James and all the holy apostles will that day be forgotten on account of their real presence there, and that lovely one, Jesus, yes, Jesus, and He will say, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Then dear pilgrim, let us go on and toil. Let us not "be weary in well doing," it has not yet entered into our hearts what more "God has prepared for those that love Him."

But now as "many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able," it becometh us to "strive lawfully." Christ is our legislator and the Gospel is His law, and on that same day when He bids us "Come up higher," He shall appear to come "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." And now seeing that our days are but few, and we shall have done, or must forever leave undone, let us strive to redeem the time, and let us not neglect "the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is," and let us bring up our children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," so that where we, be in glory, they may be also. Let us teach them to "mind not high things, but condescend to men of pleasta te," and show them our examlow in so doing. We must also "let patience have her perfect work," and "follow peace with all," and speak every man the truth to his neighbor, and be our speech of all manner of holy conversation,—suffer with Him, that we may say "Abba Father."—"Come Lord Jesus." TO PARENTS.

Parents be careful, very careful, of the trust committed to your keeping. Immortal, never-dying souls, are placed in your arms to be trained up in the paths of righteousness and fitted for a higher and holier, state of existence. God will hold you responsible for the manner in which your duty is performed. To you, is entrusted the moulding of their characters, upon the fair open page stamp the bright impress of truth, innocence, and virtue, and the result of your untiring exertions, will be a fair and beautiful mind, endowed with high aims and lofty purposes.

Fathers, if when weary with the toils and cares of life, a little lisping prattling one should chance to ask some simple question, do not turn pettishly or impatiently from it, but answer it kindly, speak gently, to it, and then turn its little thoughts and feelings, into a channel of usefulness.

But mothers to you more especially belongs the great work of educating aright the young mind. From the earliest dawn of infancy your task commences and your influence may be exerted for good. The first smile which plays upon a child's face is only of recognition for its mother. It will imbibe your thoughts and sentiments and nothing in after years will be able to blot out the memory of child hood's sunny hours. Then mothers, although wearied with watchings, cares and anxieties, still toil on and in years to come, when gentle confiding spirits and loving manly hearts are gathered about you, and you hear them speak with love and reverence of the happy, joyous hours of earlier years, and of a mother's deep, unchanging love, you will have your reward, and emotions of gratitude and praise will swell your bosoms that you were enabled to persevere in your labor of love. Your counsels and admonitons may remain unheeded for a long time, but falter not in the discharge of your duty. Continue to sow in hope the precious grain, and eventually it will spring up and bear rich, abundant fruit. Your prayers will not have been offered up in vain; you may not live to see the answer to them, but your perseverance in the path of duty will be one more star in your crown of rejoicing. Then parents, cast thy bread upon the waters and thou shalt find it after many days.

LED BY THE SPIRIT.

I believe in the influence of the Holy Spirit, but wonder sometimes that I am so unwilling to recognize its still small voice. I would like to know if others who pray for the Spirit's guidance, often doubt and hesitate to obey the call which says, Go here, or go there. At times I seem called to do something which I should have thought entirely out of my sphere, and then I remember these words, "My ways are not as your ways, nor my thoughts as your thoughts." At times I am about to say, here am I, Lord send me, when another power, even Satan's, I believe, whispers words in my heart, which make me hesitate. I pause and review my life, I am reminded that my light does not shine brightly at home where are hearts not bound to Jesus and who need to see its ways. I decide that I must live better in the family circle before undertaking new work in paths where daily duties do not lead me, and alas, thus I ponder until the opportunity is no longer offered, and then I mourn that I have grieved the spirit, and sigh for its return. At other times, not doubting, I obey the summons, and having done a work for the Savior. I leave the results with him, and after many days, so various unexpected ways, I have been permitted to hear good tidings of great joy.

I have learned that what I had done for Jesus' sake has yielded a rich blessing, and such results have filled my heart with thankfulness, increased my faith, helped me in my daily life, and brought me, I trust, nearer to my God. TOBIAS M. KAUFFMAN.

I COUNSEL THEE.

Who counsels me? I want to know who gives me advice before I take it. Christ says, "I counsel thee." Ah! I know he is infinitely wise and good. What dost thou advise me to do? I counsel thee to buy of me gold. Buy gold of Christ? Does he sell gold? Yes. He advises me to buy gold of him, and I shall be rich. Ah, Lord, how can I buy gold? What have I to buy with? Listen, soul of mine, to the spirit voice telling thee what to bring to buy this gold with,—thy poverty! The reason many do not buy this gold is, they are not poor enough. O, let us make haste to be poor, that we may buy, for this gold will pass current in another world. This is gold for eternity! And raiment is spoken of. Can I buy raiment of Christ? Yes. White robes are waiting for me to wear now, and the terms are the same, poverty, miserableness, blindness, nakedness; truly he might well say, "Not as the world giveth, give I unto thee!" The world never gives on these terms. How often have we had occasion to say, "I would buy but I cannot afford it." Spiritually, there is no reason why any one should be poor. We may be rich, the shame of our nakedness need not appear, for raiment is provided. We may have good spiritual eyesight, for eyesalve is offered us. Now who will be rich? Who will be clothed? Who will be anointed?

"We walk not with the jewelled great,
Where love's dear name is sold;
Yet have we wealth we would not give
For all their world of gold!
We revel not in corn and wine,
Yet have we from above
Manna divine, and we'll not pine,
While we may live and love."

SMILES AND FROWNS.—One smile of a Savior's love can lift a penitent soul to heaven—while all the smiles of an approving world cannot save a hero from condemnation. One frown from an angry God can send the thunderbolt of destruction upon nations, while all the frowns of a single world cannot harm the humblest of God's children.—J. S. Flory.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINODON, PA., Jan 20, 1874.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

The Campanion office, Dale City, Pa., sends us a copy of the Brethren's Almanac. It, like the Pilgrim Almanac, contains a ministerial list and also much valuable reading. Price 10 cents.

Clubbing.—A number of our readers are taking advantage of our club terms but some do not seem to know that such subscription should be accompanied with the cash, as we must pay the cash to all papers with which we club.

The Publishers of the Herald of Truth have published a very handsome Family Almanac, both in English and German. It contains much valuable reading and is richly worth the price asked for it. Price 10 cents. Address J. F. Funk & Bro., Elkhart Ind.

Registered Letters. It is much cheaper to send money in this way now than formerly, as the fee has been reduced from 15 to 8 cents. So far, we have found it to be a safe way of sending money and hope our agents will take advantage of the late reduction. Postal orders or checks are also a very safe way of sending money. All large sums should be registered or sent in postal orders and checks.

The large banking house of Henry Clews & Co., New York, have resumed business again, as well as many others of equal importance. The late panic is rapidly passing away and by spring its effects will, to a very great extent, be wiped away. The large manufacturing establishments are commencing to operate again, and soon the cry for employment will be heard no more.

Agents will please continue to work for the Pilgrim. New subscribers are always gladly received. Much of our success depends upon the effort you make. Some have done very well without losing but very little time. Not only do we solicit the efforts of agents but we will be glad to have every reader speak a good word for us by introducing the Pilgrim to his neighbor. There is no telling what might be done if all would get to work and solicit subscribers. The probability is that our list might be doubled in a very short time.

The Poor.—The saying is, "A good rule works both ways," but we have found one that only works one way, and that way is seriously out of pocket to us. The poor list is increasing daily and as yet we have not received a single cent towards paying for them. Last year our poor list was reasonably large, but to meet it, a number of liberal hearted brethren and sisters helped us largely to pay pay for it. Are there none who feel to lend a little to the Lord for 1874? Brethren and sisters help us, the burden will become oppressive and yet we cannot think of refusing any who desire to read the Pilgrim. Whatever may be donated for this purpose will be gratefully received.

OUR WORK.

In this life we all have a work to perform and upon the manner in which it is done, depends our future weal or woe. Although there are certain duties set before each of us, yet they differ perhaps as widely as we differ in character and development. But because we differ in character and development makes us no less responsible to God for that which is given us. Hence it is important that we consider well what is our special duty and work. This, with us, has been a serious consideration since our boyhood, and even before we enlisted as a soldier of Jesus. We are not of those who can give a long history of profligate days, as we were early impressed with the advantages of devoting our time and influence in favor of our own good and God's glory, hence we took up the cross while young and determined that our work should be for the Lord, and to-day, when we look back, we cannot remember of a single instance that we ever regretted the resolution then made, but we can remember of many seasons of peace and joy it afforded us which a thousand times compensated for all the cost.

Ever since we entered the Kingdom we have had but one continual and determined purpose, and that was to become proficient in the divine life, and labor for the good and final salvation of others. First, in the capacity of a private member, afterwards in the ministry, and now in the two-fold calling of minister and editor. The ministry is a great work, a high calling, and oft-times have we felt the heavy responsibilities weighing upon us. But as great as were our responsibilities then, they are still greater now and if there are any who can justly say, "Brethren, pray for us," they are those who edit a religious paper.

Since we have taken upon us the great work, it seems as if God has blessed our every step which gives us great encouragement in our arduous labors. To suppose that all the blessings conferred was on account of merit in us, would be preposterous indeed, but we do believe in the fervent and effectual prayer of the righteous, and we also believe that the prayers of such have availed for us, and we hope will still avail.

That our work is a great one, we are assured. Our congregations are numbered by thousands every week, and what we put forth is doing its work and will tell in the great day of accounts. Some of our labor may be ineffective and not worthy of one in so responsible position, but if so, it is not our work, not our purpose. It may be the weakness of the flesh—the vain desire to please or tickle the fancy of some itching ear, but our spirit-work is to labor for the advancement of Christianity in the world, in the Church and in the soul—to warn the unconcerned, to awaken the sleepy, feed the hungry, give sight to the blind, unstop the ears of the dumb and make the lame to walk. Think of it brethren and sisters, is there not a great work before us? Can we remain quiet and unconcerned while countless thousands are plunging into the gulf of despair before our eyes? That we, by the blessing of God, have accomplished a great work during the year that is past, is evident from the general tenor of those who have expressed themselves in regard to our labors. Many have been prevailed upon to study their best interests and cast their lot with the people of God, others have been provoked to good works, while still others have been richly fed from the crumbs that fell from our brethren's and sister's tables.

We talk of the past just now because our memory has been refreshed to-day by a number of letters from isolated brethren and sisters who have been giving their experience. One says, "I am poor and thought I could not get the Pilgrim for the coming year, but when I think of the many good lessons it brought me during 1873 it seems as if I cannot do without it, send it along and if I cannot raise the money any other way, I will go out and wash until I earn that amount." No wonder it is said, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Some of such not only pay for their own, but really pay for others. When we hear how some love to read the Pilgrim and the high estimate they put upon it, we are reminded of the poor widow who was heard returning thanks for a crust of bread. It ran thus: "All this and Jesus too, all this and Jesus too." Could we but all realize this fullness in Jesus and feel within our souls that He is the "Bread of Life," then would our life's work be, "to do thy will, O God." We might fill page after page with the outpourings of grateful hearts, but as some might think it inexpedient, we forbear, but would say, God bless you dear brethren and sisters for your many words of cheer and the prayers made in our behalf. We feel encouraged and refreshed, and by the grace of God we hope to make the Pilgrim, more than ever, a welcome and instructive visitor to your homes. May God in His fullness, richly bless us all, and thus enable us to press forward in the great work of Christainizing and saving the world. Let our work be what the Lord would have us do, feeling assured that our labor shall not be in vain for it is declared that we shall reap if we faint not.

OUR ENLARGEMENT.

There are several of our readers cannot see that the Pilgrim is enlarged. To determine this please measure a number of 1873 and one of 1874, and you will find it just as much larger as we promised to make it. Our former sheet was 22x31 and the present 22x33, giving an additional reading surface of 76 square inches on each side, or 152 in all. If that is not a sufficient increase without advancing the price, we despair of pleasing. Those who wish a large paper should be willing to pay for it. Give us $2.00 or $2.50 and we will give as much reading, or even more than any other paper of an ordinary circulation. We get a large number of the religious periodicals and ours compares very favorably with them, the fact is, we give more reading for the amount of money, than any paper that comes to our office. If we were allowed to use one-third or one-half of our space for advertisements and paying notices, we could sail a much larger sheet than we do, even at the small price asked for it. Our reading surface at present is really larger than any publisher can afford to give for the small consideration of $1.50, and we hope that henceforth instead of complaining about the size there will be an extra effort made to fill our present space to advantage, and just as soon as the Church is prepared to support a large paper, it shall have it, but it must be at a corresponding price.

SAD INTELLIGENCE.

We have just received the sad news of the departure of Eld. Henry Kurtz. He died very suddenly. On Sunday the 11th, he was as well as usual, attended meeting and took an active part in the services, and on the morning of the 12th, at 9 o'clock he was found dead in his rocking-chair. Eld. Kurtz was extensively known throughout the Brotherhood as the originator of the Gospel Visitor, the pioneer paper of the Brotherhood. As we have the promise of a more extended notice, we will say no more at present, hoping that at an early date we may be enabled to give our readers a full biography of our old cross bearer.

Youth's Department.

Dear young readers:—For a long time I have remained silent, not because I cared less for you, but on account of the Pilgrim having so many other things to talk about, much of which I trust has been as interesting to you as if it had been written expressly for you and placed under your special department. But we now have the promise of a little room and therefore presume to have a little talk with you.

Since we last met Christmas has passed by and the New Year has commenced, and may I not hope you all had a good time, although I fear some of you have since felt some of the bitter that follows such sweet seasons. The eating of candies, &c., like many other short pleasures, generally is followed by unpleasant results. I often wish I could introduce, for the enjoyment of the young, a more harmless mode of having a good time, one that would give enjoyment without being followed with pain, and it occurs to me it could be done with perhaps less expense. If your papa's would spend several dollars in getting you pretty books, or several papers printed especially for the young, it would not only afford you pleasure and amusement, but might do you a permanent good and leave you no aches and pains as do such things which only gratify the taste. I would like you to understand that this life is intended for more than to eat and drink. These things are intended only to keep us alive and in a healthy condition, so that we may be enabled to attend to those things which will afford us lasting pleasures when our work is done.

It is really shocking how things are changed from the use which God intended them. Just to give you an idea, tobacco was, with thousands of other plants, intended for some medical purpose, the fact is, I do not know what it was made for, but now people have taken to chewing and smoking it, and even little boys may be seen in our streets, smoking segars, pipes, and squirting tobacco juice just as if they were paid for it, but this my young friends, is the result of bad example. If grown persons were never seen at such ugly practices, little boys would never think of doing a thing that is sure to make them awful sick. Again, wheat, rye and corn was made to eat, but now some of it is taken to the distilleries and brewed into strong drink, which makes drunken fathers and hungry and ragged children. No doubt you think this very wrong, to change things into such bad uses, but do you suppose these are the only things that are changed? No indeed, there are many other things that were made for a good purpose that are now used for bad ones, and I was just thinking that little boys and girls are sometimes changed as much as tobacco, wheat, rye and corn. You are made for a good purpose, to be good and do good, but how many grow up to be bad and do bad. Little hands that were made to help father and mother and to take care of little brothers and sisters, learn to strike, fight and scratch, and even some learn to steal. Little tongues that were made to talk pleasant and kind words, learn to say cross words, tell lies and swear. Little feet that were made to walk in the way that leads to peace, joy and happiness, learn to walk in the way of the ungodly, which ends in pain and misery. Are not these very bad changes? They are even worse than all the others put together and yet I fear that some of you have, and are about making them. If you are, I ask you for a moment, to think and consider where it will lead you to. Those changes are all wrong and will lead you away from your home, away from right and away from God. This would be unfortunate indeed, and I hope that not one of you will allow such changes to be made, and if some of you have done so there will never be a better time to change back again than just now. The New Year has just come in and with it, every boy and girl should make a resolution to do better, or commence some good work, and what could you do that would be better than to determine to leave off all bad habits and learn to do good ones in their place? Hoping that you all have had a happy Christmas and New Year, and that you all may be permitted to read the PILGRIM for 1874, I bid you an affectionate farewell until we meet again.

UNCLE HENRY.

OBEYING MOTHER PLEASANT.

Little Harry had seen some older boys fly their kites from the tops of houses, and he thought it would be nice fun if he could do so too—so he came to his aunt and said:

"Aunt Mary, may I go up to the top of the house and fly my kite?"

His aunt wished to do everything that was proper to please him; but she thought this was very unsafe, so she said:

"No, Harry, my boy, I think that is a very dangerous sort of play. I'd rather you wouldn't go."

"All right. Then I'll go out on the bridge," said Harry. His aunt smiled, and said she hoped he would always be as obedient as that.

"Harry, what are you doing?" said his mother on one occasion.

"Spinning my new top mother."

"Can't you take the baby out to ride? Get out the carriage and I'll bring him down."

"All right," shouted the boy, as he put the top away in his pocket, and hastened to obey his mother.

"Uncle William, may I go over to your store, this morning?" said Harry one day at breakfast. "I want to see those baskets again, that I was looking at yesterday."

"Oh, yes, Harry," said his uncle, "I shall be very glad to have you."

"But I can not spare you to-day, Harry," said his mother, "I want you to go out with me; you shall go to the store another time."

"All right," said Harry; and went on with his breakfast.

No matter what Harry was asked to do, or what refusal he met with when asking for anything, his constant answer was, "All right." He never asked "Why can't I?" or, "Why musn't I?" Harry not only learned to obey, but he learned to obey in good humor.—Youth's Companion,

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany such communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

A VISIT—FIRST MEETING.

Being deprived of a comfort or a blessing we once enjoyed, we then more fully appreciate the good of such a comfort. Such was our experience a few days ago on our return to our humble roof to meet with two of the deacons of the same faith who had come from the State of Illinois to pay us a visit and look at Colorado. I allude to the visit of brother Leonard Wolfe and brother John F. Nehr, of Salem, Marrion county, Ill. They had heard much of Colorado and concluded to come and see it for themselves. Notwithstanding the rigors of winter was upon us they seemed favorably impressed with the country in general. Inasmuch as vacant claims were scarce here along the side of the river where the rail road runs, it was decided that we go farther down to where we might find a suitable location for a settlement of brethren all close together, an idea we had in view ever since we have moved here, seeing clearly that such could not be the case here as the claims were taken up much sooner than we anticipated. After going about ten miles we came to a place called "Sterling Colony," and a beautiful section it is, and the bottom quite extensive. It is astonishing that such a settlement should spring up, since the 10th day of last July, we found vacant claims very scarce in that section, embracing as it does, a tract of level bottom land ten miles long by four to five or more wide. We crossed Cedar Creek and passed down probably four or five miles farther where we found another beautiful bottom which we were told was all vacant yet. We at once decided that was "the place." The brethren above mentioned picked the first claims, then others were taken up to the number of eight in all, and in a few weeks as many more will be taken, all by or for brethren that are coming in the Spring. The section is as fine as any we have seen in the South Platte Valley, better than we expected to find. The rail road will pass through about the middle of the bottom which is some miles wide, and as to its length we cannot say, as it seemed to extend as far as we could see. Now Brethren, you who contemplate coming this far west, here is a chance for you to make a settlement almost or quite entirely of Brethren, just what so many desire to do, but it will not do to tarry and continue to ask hundreds of questions. Prompt action is necessary as it is quite probable the whole Valley will be taken up in five or six months especially on the side of the river the R. R. runs. Already claims are taken up for one worthy brother who is in the ministry and two deacons, and I expect to take my homestead in the settlement.

A station and a large town on the railroad will be the result of a settlement. Bro. Wolfe and brother Nehr will doubtless give information, such as is desired, or if I am written to, I will try to respond, though I get hundreds of letters, my patience is unabated.

I presume that enough has been said in the PILGRIM and otherwise to give the inquiring mind some idea of this Territory, and the better way for those desiring to secure claims under the preemption or homestead law is to come as soon as possible, in person, and enter a claim when it will be secured for six months. Those who cannot come soon or do not want to spend their money in coming to look first, the best they can do is, to have some one here select a claim for them and have a small house put upon it at a cost of $40 or $45. When this course is pursued, as a general thing such claims are not molested for six months. A plank house 8x12 or 10 x12 will cost the above named amount. Brethren coming to see the country will please remember that "the latch string to my door is always hanging out." Buffalo is 80 miles down the river from Greely and 75 miles up the river from Julesburg.

Yesterday I preached my first sermon in the valley to a small congregation. The day was cold and other causes kept a number away that would otherwise have been present. Thus the work of preaching the Gospel in this section of country has begun and we hope soon to chronicle the fact that a church has been established and the sweet songs of Zion from many voices will float upon the breezes, and prayers of God's people ascend up as a 'sweet smelling savor' unto the most high God. There is work for missionaries. The Sabbath has been almost set aside here, infidels and scoffers stalk up and down, Goliah like, receiving strength and food every day from a false theology, and a Christianity unworthy the name of the "meek Man of sorrows." The walk and conduct of men claiming to be God's ministers has brought reproach upon the religion of Jesus and him crucified. There is power in the word of God—power in the name of Jesus, therefore we feel that if Davids can be found to come forth, and is there no cause to take pebbles from the river of life that flows from the throne of God, and cast them by the power of God's Almighty arm into the forehead of infidelity, the monster must fall as stubble before the devouring flames? Yea, God's words preached in demonstration of the spirit and with power shall awaken we trust, many a poor soul from the sleep of death to a life of action in the service of God. Brethren pray for us, pray for the success of God's people everywhere, until the name of Jesus shall be praised from shore to shore and every hill and valley shall echo forth the gladsome news of salvation through the Lamb of God.

A LETTER TO THE PILGRIM.

Dear Pilgrim:—I have been a reader of your columns for some time and feel as though I cannot do without you. You have been a weekly and welcome visitor to our hearth and home. Yes; how anxiously we await the call, and how eagerly we grasp for the contents of your columns, which makes us feel like giving you another invitation for 1874. Oh that your labor may not be in vain, but the means of drawing many precious and wandering souls to Christ. Yo have been of much pleasure to me in lonely hours. methinks I have derived much good, much encouragement in perusing your pages. So often we are afflicted and deprived of the privilege of going to the house of worship. Then how gladly we receive you and how eagerly we glance over your pages in search of some familiar name. Oh how glad we are to hear from the distant, and the much good that is being done in laboring in the good work. Yes, it encourages us to press onward in the cause of Christ.

Oh that we may all feel interested in the work of salvation, to prepare ourselves to tread life's narrow path with certainty, that our lights may shine so that our good works may be seen and our Father glorified. I am young in the service of my Master, but I have a strong desire to press on in the good work. Oh how deeply I was impressed with guilt for several years before I entered the fold, and I would often say within myself: "I will enlist under the banner of King Jesus," but the tempter would come again and draw me away. But thanks be to God, He has been my helper to enter the fold, and may I ever be faithful in my duties, for he that endureth unto the end shall be saved. I no more join the company I once did, but am traveling with another company far better, for Jesus is the captain. Oh could I hear my comrades say they will join our company and enlist under this same banner.

If we can have Jesus for our friend, there is none other so true. Yes, I have sorrow and joy yet to feel that Jesus has been my friend, yes we have had sad, sad bereavements, but 'tis God that hath bereft us. He has called from our midst our much loved mother. Oh! those kind advices and cheering words we heard are heard no more, her voice is still. O! those pleasant smiles and affectionate embraces, happy meetings and greetings are no more; her foot-steps too, are heard no more. All is silent. She no more joins our number, her chair is vacant in the family circle. In the Sanctuary too, she is missed, where she was much loved and esteemed as a faithful servant. We miss her everywhere, but we feel that our loss is her eternal gain. How true the adage that death loves a shining mark. What joy, what consolation to feel that we can have a hope to meet those sainted ones who have gone to the spirit land. Oh that we may all be so happy as to meet all these dear, departed loved ones.

Yes, that our vessels may be filled with oil and our lamps be burning, that we may be ready to meet the Bridegroom and that our robes may be pure and white, that we may be of the number that will receive a crown, for the promise is not at the beginning, nor in the middle, but at the end of our race. CAWKER CITY, Mitchell Co., Kan. }
Dec. 20, 1873. }

Editor of Pilgrim:—Enclosed find $1.50 for the PILGRIM for 1873, and I want you to send me your prospectus and Almanac for 1874, and I will try to get some new subscribers. Send the PILGRIM for I do not want to be without it. There are no members in this part of the country, but my own family and we think it so long to hear some of our preachers again, and I was glad the other day when I received a letter from Bro. J. H. Fishel, from Pattawattomie county, Kan., stating that he wanted me to rent a house for him for a few months as he intended to move up here where we live, and that he wanted to look around some before he located. Such news as that brethren, is what we like to hear, especially from speakers. I think if we have preaching in this part of the country regular, we will have an organized church here soon.

We have good land, good water, good building stone, the white magnesia lime stone, and plenty of timber along the streams. We can get fire wood for fifty cents a load, if we cut it ourselves, and they have found stone coal in the centre of Mitchell county lately, and I think there is coal here where we live and will be found soon. Cottonwood lumber is from twenty to twenty-five dollars a thousand; pine flooring, forty dollars per thousand; common pine lumber, from $30 to $35 per thousand; pine shingles, from $4 to $5 per thousand; work horses, from $75 to $150 dollars; fresh milk cows, from $30 to $40; wheat, 70 cents per bushel; oats 25 cents per bushel; corn, 28 cents per bushel; pork, net, $5 dollars per cwt.; native beef, $5 per cwt.; butter, 25 cents per lb; eggs, 20 cts. per doz.

The best land is mostly taken up, but there is some good claims to homestead yet. But there can be good claims bought here cheap. We have no rail road land here. A claim is 160 acres. I would like to see all the brethren who intend to change their location, before they locate, to come and see the Solomon Valley. We live 4 miles north west from Cawker city. We live on the edge of Osborne county, but Cawker City, Mitchell county, is our post-office. Claims can be bought for from $100 up to $2000, according to the improvements. This county is good for stock raising, and I think that sheep would do well here. Some are setting out fruit trees, but the land is new yet and it will not do to set out fruit trees until the sod is well rotted. On the 6th of Dec., we had a snow to the depth of about 8 inches, but have had nice weather ever since. There is some snow on the ground yet.

There are some that I hear of in print sometimes who do not speak very favorably of the Solomon Valley; but those who do this, never saw this country, or, if they did, perhaps they are of those who want to make a living without working for it.

DANIEL SHOOK.

SABBATH SCHOOL REPORT.

Report of the Brethren's Sabbath School held in the Dickey Meeting house, Ashland Co. O., during the Summer of 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—As S. S's. are yet in their infancy in many churches of the Brethren and others are entirely destitute of them, we submit the following concerning our school for the encouragement of what we deem a noble enterprise—one in which the Christian may find abundant room to labor for the Savior.

Although the proposition to organize a school had been carried without a dissenting voice, yet the prospect was not very flattering, as most of us were much limited in both theory and practice, however we have proven the old adage: "where's a will there's a way." The church had previously appointed Bro. D. S. Workman, Superintendent, and on June 29th, a goodly number met for organization. Nearly all manifested a deep interest in the work, which gave us fresh courage and led us to conclude that nothing short of a love for religious truth, and the solemn injunction to train up the young in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, prompted them to enlist in the S. S. cause. The necessary officers, were appointed, teachers selected, &c. and as we met Sabbath after Sabbath to learn the many beautiful lessons that gild the sacred page, and to mingle our voices in singing the sweet songs of praise, we felt well paid for all our labor. The Child's Paper published by the American Tract Society, and the Children's Paper edited by Bro. Kurtz came to us alternately every two weeks, and need I say that they were auxilaries in the great work?

The eagerness with which they were received and read by the children expressed the value and power of the moral lessons they contained better than I can with the pen. We regretted that they did not visit us weekly instead of semi-monthly. Will not our editors give us a weekly paper for our schools next year? Our children call for it, the cause demands it and we believe that the Church has the means and the talent to support it. Although there were three other schools near by we had as many as we could accommodate.

Average attendance of officers and teachers, Fourteen: scholars, Sixty-nine; Visitors, Twenty-three; Total, one-hundred and four. Notwithstanding we began late in the season and labored under the great disadvantage of inexperience, we think we can safely say the entire term was an interesting one. It certainly was, if the bright eyes and smiling countenances of the children in attendance were reliable tokens. Oh! how we loved to meet them in the sacred temple and listen to the ring of their merry voices and hear them repeat the golden texts gathered from the lives and teachings of the Saviour and Apostels. Whether the school will prove as profitable as it was interesting we know not, yet we live in hopes that the seed sown in youthful minds will become vigorous plants laden with fruit ripe for eternal glory on high. As some of our aged fathers and mothers in Israel fear that S. Ss. will not be conducive to the health and growth of the church, let me say that so far as we have tested its influence among us we see no cause of alarm, but are encouraged to go on feeling assured that we shall reap a golden harvest in due time if we faint not. Knowing that the young fall into error more readily than those who have already met the stern realities of life we are glad that our older brethren did not leave us alone, but encouraged us by their presence and faithful labor among us. Sabbath afternoon, Nov. 9, brought to us a mingled feeling of joy and sorrow. As we love to see parents and children, teachers and scholars together with friends and associates hymning God's praise, and instructing each other in things pertaining to the future welfare of our souls, we were pained to know that the pleasure and labor of that day, would close our school for the present year. We had spent but eighteen Sabbaths together, yet attachments had been formed that we were loath to break, and ere the time for reorganization would roll around, perhaps many of us would be summoned to cross the dark river of death leaving here and there a vacant seat. Oh, how sad the thoughts that thus forced their way into our minds! In addition to the usual exercises, each class had prepared a recitation of questions with biblical answers. These together with a brief lecture on temperance added much to the interest of the occasion. As some would like to know the nature of the recitations refered to we give one of them; Subject:

FAITH.

Ques. 1. What is faith?

Pupil No. 1, answers from Heb. 11: 1.

Ques. 2. What do we understand through faith in reference to the power of God?

Pupil No. 2 answers from Heb. 11. 3.

Ques. 3. Please enumerate some of the things accomplished by faith?

Pupil No 3. ans.' from Heb. 11: 7.
" " 4 " " " " 17.
" " 5 " " " " 24, 25, 26.
" " 6 " " " " 30.
" " 7 " " " " 8.
" " 8 " " " " 29.
" " 9 " " Luke, 17: 6.
" " 10 " " " " 11, 31, 32, 33, 34.

Ques. 4. Who hath everlasting life?

Pupil No. 11 answers from John 3: 36.

Ques. 5. Since salvation is by faith, are we to understand that faith alone will save us?

Pupil No. 12 answers from James 2, 23, 24. 19. 20.

Ques. 6. What then is the evidence of faith?

Pupil No. 13 answers from James 2: 18.

Ques. 7. As James teaches justification by faith and works, do we merit salvation by them?

Pupil No. 14 answers from Luke 17: 10.

In concluding this article we would give it as our opinion that scholars would more readily comprehend the various subjects treated of in the Bible if they had lessons for each Sabbath, modeled somewhat after the above plan, printed on slips of paper to guide them. If our publishers, after giving the matter some thought, think it would be advisable, we would be glad to see the plan carried into operation. I. D PARKER.

A GENERAL APPEAL.

A CIRCULAR.

Dear brethren and sisters:—The following appeal and explanation is prompted by circumstances which render them really necessary, The numerous letters received from various parts of the United States and Canada, require something of the kind. I have withheld these remarks longer than I ought to have done, hoping that before this period I would be able to issue a more favorable circular; but now I see just what I can do, and what I cannot do, hence this circular. Furthermore, I shall make these remarks answer about all the inquiries and requests in general that have been presented to me respecting my publications.

1. Since I published my work on "Trine Immersion, Traced to the Apostles"—a little over one year ago—I have sold nearly 3000 copies. They have found their way into nearly all the states and territories in the union, and have been extensively circulated in various parts of Canada. Of this work I still have on hand a few hundred copies, price by mail 25 cents, or ten copies, $2.00, and would wish to sell them out as soon as possible, as I desire to use the money in publishing other works.

2. My "Historical chart of baptism," considering the hard times, has been selling remarkably well. This production has cost me more labor and study in general, than any other work I ever undertook. I commenced it when I was collecting material for my pamphlet, merely and alone for my own benefit, as a guide to assist my memory in arranging matter for my pamphlet on "Trine Immersion;" nor never, in fact, thought of publishing it till one of our well informed ministers, called and staid over night with me, and on looking over my papers, &c., he saw this chronological "Chart of Baptism;" its plan and arrangement in general, struck him so forcibly that he urged me very strongly to prepare it for the press. Since that time until its publication, it has been the object of the most of my reading and literary attention. At first I thought to put it up in map form and insert it in my pamphlet, but the cost of publishing it was so great that I was compelled to abandon the project, and hence its appearance in a chart form.

This Chart I have been selling at retail for $1.00 per copy. But I have now reduced the price to mere cost, and it will hereafter be sent post paid to any part of the United States and Canada, for 50 cts. per copy. I have reduced the price for two reasons: 1. That they may become more exteosively circulated, and 2, I need money to publish other works, hence all who wish a copy of either of the above named works, will do well to order immediately, as I am needing money very badly. To publish these works I borrowed the money. I have never in my life been worth more than five-hundred dollars [my library exacted] and am now reduced to considerable less; so that what I have accomplished, so far in defense of primitive Christianity has been in the very face of poverty.

3. All parties who know themselves to be inebted to me for either books or charts, will confer a favor by sending the amount in as sooo as possible.

4. In answer to those who desire to know what other works I contemplate publishing, I herewith append a list of a part of them only:

1st. "Genuine Baptism." an infallible rule for finding the apostolic method of baptizing, accompanied by a "Diagram of Baptisms," exhibiting the origin of Sprinkling, Pouring and forward and backward, Single immersion.

2nd. Single Immersion not Christian Baptism," or the origin, history and validity of single immersion.

3rd. "The perfect plan of salvation," or safe ground, showing that the position occupied by the Brethren is infallibly safe.

4th. "One Baptism." Showing that trine immersion is the only true ground of union in baptism, that can be conscienciously occupied by all of the leading religious denominations of Christendom. These works which are intended for all classes of readers, I shall publish whenever I am able to command the means, and if the brethren and sisters and friends will do a good part by purchasing my works that are already published, they will help the good cause along rapidly. My means are too limited to travel and preach, and hence I have concluded to do the greater part of my preaching with my pen, my adaptation being much better suited to this kind of work.

5th. The only promise that I can now make as to when these works will be ready for delivery, is by simply stating, whenever I can spare the money they shall come. This is as much as any one ought to ask of me. I believe that what has already been stated will answer all that seems necessary to notice in this circular. I hope to hear from many of you now, send in your orders and help the good cause along.

All sums of $2.00 and under may be sent at my risk if properly enclosed and plainly addressed, but all all sums over this amount should be either registered or sent in post-office order.—Address, J. H. Moore. Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill.

Dear Editor: As it is your desire to hear from the brethren and sisters, I am glad that I can say that I am still in the faith of the Brethren, although far from any church. There are three of us in the family that are members, and I have met with two more since we came to this wild prairie country. But I hope we will some day have the good privilege of having a church here in this beautiful country. This is my greatest desire.

We have had a beautiful Fall and Winter so far. We have had but one snow yet, it laid a few days and then came warm weather again. People could plow all the time except about one week or perhaps a little over. There is considerable green grass here yet. We have a very good climate and a very healthy country. I hope the brethren will come and help to settle it, as they are needed very badly here. The country is settling up very rapidly, and there are some that say to me, are any of your ministers coming? I think I would like the Dunkard church very well, and if so I would join the church. Brethren I surely think this would be a good place to come and start a church, and I don't know whether you will do your duty or not if some of you do not come and preach for us, and also for the worldly people, when they all seem to feel the need of some one to come. We have received a letter from one preacher in Indiana. He talks of coming to see the country next fall, and we hope he will stay and labor for us. I hope he will, but I have a hope that if we have to be deprived of meeting with the brethren here on earth, that we can meet them in a far better world if we hold out faithful to the end. Oh, what a glorious consolation this is! When we can have that hope to "meet to part no more, and sing the everlasting song, with those who've gone before."

Mr. Editor:—Whilst reading the columns of your valuable paper, I saw the calls for help by some of our Christian friends, for the purpose of building churches. I ask your many readers, who have the pleasure of going to comfortable churches to worship God, do you think of your brethren, who have asked you the small sum of one dollar and under, to build a house that they too may worship God with comfort? "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—John 3: 17. This is something for those who are indifferent to the calls for help to think of. If we have the love of God within us, we will certainly be willing to help our brethren who are in need. If our brethren need houses to worship in it is certainly our duty to help them. Will you not do it?

Dear Brethren.—Having been absent for some time, and have not seen the last issues of the Pilgrim, I feel as though I have lost a friend and supposing all have sent who wish it, I will ask you to send me the Pilgrim and Almanac, as I wish to read our Church news. It is my chief delight to see and hear of the progress of our loved Church. The Lord has been with us during the past year and has blessed us with an addition of some fourteen. We are truly thankful. and feel encouraged that more made up their minds to come to Jesus.

The relatives of Brother Jacob Bailey who moved from our Church some years ago, are anxious to hear of his whereabouts. Any information your readers may be able to give of him will be gladly received by the family. Please give this through the Pilgrim. It will be a great relief to his relatives to hear of him. They suppose him to be in Iowa.

Your sister, Cath. Cronise.

TO THE BROTHERHOOD.

"Will this Annual Meeting purchase the tent under which she is now sitting?

The above query passed through the District Meeting, and will come up again at the next Annual Meeting, and brethren coming to the meeting should come prepared to answer the question. The Brethren of Southern Ill., are getting a tent made of good, durable material, the making and hire of which will cost them about $400. The tentmaker, after being thus paid for the making and hire of it, will offer it to the A. M. at panic prices, which will probably be less than eightshundred dollars. This will no doubt be a very favorable time for the Brotherhood to purchase a tent, provided it will suit the A. M. after examining and using it. Further information concerning the keeping of it from year to year, &c., will be given at the meeting.

Clear Spring, Jan. 6th, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim:—I this evening, inform you that we had quite a happy New Year. We had meeting on New Year's day and evening in our Holtzswamp meetinghouse, on Friday morning and evening at Bermudian meetinghouse. We had quite a refreshing time. Abram Pfoutz from Berks Co., and David Etter from Dauphin Co., and Bros. Andrew Miller and Adam Brown were with us. I hope the visit may not be in vain. I think some solemn impressions have been made. I wish some more brethren would come to us as we are weak in ministerial force, and our territory is very large and many appointments.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Brethren of the Black River Congregation have appointed a series of meetings to commence on the evening of the 24th of January, 1874, at their Meetinghouse in Chatham, Medina Co., Ohio. A general invitation is extended to all, especially ministering brethren.

Jos. Rittenhouse.

MARRIED.

HANAWALT—SHIVELY.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Inwood, Marshall Co., Ind., by Eld. Nathaniel Drake, Bro. Jos. M Hanawalt of McVeytown, Pa., to Miss Caroline Shively.

DIED.

LAYMAN.—In the Maple Grove Congregation, Jan. 11th, 1874, Lily Ieadora Layman, daughter of Bro. Jacob and sister Sophia Layman. Funeral services by the brethren from Luke 18: 15-17

Wm. Sadler.

MILLER.—In Aughwic Valley, Huntingdon Co., Pa., Nov. 15th, 1873. Adam Miller, aged 81 years, 10 mos. and 12 days. The deceased was a member of the M. E. Church, and a citizen of Shirley township, for nearly 60 years. Sent by request of his son-in-law, D. Boyer. Jos. Kough.

BOCK.—In the Dry Creek Congregation, Linn Co., Iowa, Dec. 10, 1873, George, son of Bro. Samuel and Sister Catharine Bock, aged 1 year, 4 mos. and 22 days. Funeral services by the brethren.

Jacob Bock.

MURRAY—In Lower Miama Church, Montgomery county, Ohio, on January 12, 1874, Josiah Murray, aged 19 years 10 months and 2 days. A son of Elder Jacob Murray.

The subject of this notice was nearly 100 miles from home teaching school, having a brother and a sister living in the neighborhood, he was kindly cared for during his illness of a few weeks. His remains were brought home on the train, which was truly a sorrowful time. He was a pious youth, always kind and loving, and beloved by all who knew him. On the 14th his body was conveyed to the silent tomb, followed by a large concourse of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were improved by the brethren and the writer from 1 Peter, 1:23, 24, 25. Daniel Bock.

SIMMONS.—In the Union district, Stark Co., Ind., on Jan. 9, 1874, Sister —— Simmons, wife of friend Jacob Simmons; aged 51 years, 5 months and 2 days.

She leaves a husband, and out of the church. May he remember the good examples of a christian wife, and the responsibility resting on him before he be called to account. There are 6 children, only one in the church. Oh may they prepare to meet their mother in a better world, as she was a worthy sister, a good mother and we believe a christian woman. Funeral occasion improved from Rev. 14: 13, by the writer and Wm. G. Cook.

McCRISTER.—Also in the same district on Jan. 13 1874, Sarah Ann, wife of John McCristy, formerly wife of Christian McCristy, aged about 41 years.

She died without making any preparation for death and without any profession. May we all remember that we have to die and then the judgement. Funeral attended by the brethren, M. A. Eisenhour, Wm. G. Cook and the writer.

SNYDER.—Also in the same district on Jan. 14, David Wilson, son of Bro. Daniel, and Sister —— Snyder; aged 10 mos. and 11 days.

He was a pleasant little child and leaves a little twin brother. This is the fourth child that they have buried. May they remember that of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. Funeral discourse by the writer.

Adam Appleman.

LITERATURE.

THE MORNING STAR; or Wayside Musings, and other Poems. By Wm. Newton. Published by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, Pa.

Of the many thousands of books that have been published and are still publishing there is, perhaps, not a single one that does not find its particular niche in the great public mind where it can nestle and exert its quiet influence, according as the spirit of the book may be, for good or for evil. Many books are short lived. Some die as soon as issued, and exert very little influence, still there are many issued that it were better that it could have been said of them—they died in their inception. No author has a right to afflict the reading public with a book written merely for his amusement, or to employ leisure hours, as the results of such employments are often worse than the mischief resulting from idleness. The book before us is a religious poem in blank verse comprised in 3 canto's—God's Great Design, The Unfolding, The Result. It is after the style of Bickersteth's "Yesterday To-Day and Forever," and is perhaps, little, if any, inferior to it in design, or conception. Some of the miscellaneous poems which comprise about one-third of the book are very beautiful and deserve to live. The book is beautifully printed on heavy tinted paper and handsomely bound in cloth.

A poem descriptive of several spots of romantic interest on the banks of the Schuylkill river, all dear to the memory of Philadelphians, but not wanting in interest to all who have or shall visit the delightful Park belonging to the Quaker City. The book, though not pretentious in size, is illustrated with views of Fairmount, Belmount and other places, to which there are attached many historical and poetical reminiscences.

One of the most interesting and readable periodicals coming to our office, and the one containing the most sprightly articles is Appleton's Journal. Its weekly visits are looked for with eagerness and the expectations of a pleasure to be enjoyed. This Journal with the Popular Science Monthly, also published by the APPLETON'S, would enable a person who would carefully read them, to keep pace with the progress of science and the advancements in literature of our age and time. The Journal may be had in weekly or monthly parts, and special inducements are offered to new subscribers for 1874. Popular Science Monthly for January, contains exceedingly interesting articles, the first on serpents, others on the Theory of Meteorites, The Emotional Language of the Future, Growth and Decay of Mind, Genesis, Geology and Evolution, &c. It is an exceedingly valuable number of a most valuable magazine.

——H. O. HOUGHTON & Co., the new publishers of the "Atlantic Monthly," with their January number present their compliments to the old friends and patrons of that excellent magazine, and express their determination of "purpose to keep it equal to its old reputation," We certainly think the present number one of the most attractive yet issued. It contains several papers of more than ordinary merit, besides poems by Whittier, Holmes, and Bayard Taylor. The editor of Every Saturday begins a serial story in the February number. The Atlantic has lost nothing by the change and we doubt not but that the present publishers will add to it a part of their well earned reputation as book publishers.

——To DAY, the paper of which Dr. Dio Lewis is "Editor in Chief," bears a motto which is quite appropriate to its spirit—

"Let the dead past bury its dead, Act! act in the living present."

Dr. Dio Lewis' book, "Our Digestion; or My Jolly Friends' Secret" has been a great success, and "To-Day," under his leadership can scarcely fail to be equally successful. Published weekly, by the To-Day Printing and Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa., at $2.50 per year, appropriately illustrated.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions, and neglect it. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price [illegible] month, or $[illegible] year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 30 per cent.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single Immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post-paid. Address

POETRY.

RESCUED.

BY WESLEY.

I've trodden the way of the faithless,
When earth's trivial follies did lure;
And caught a brief glimpse of the horrors
Which satan's adherents endure.

But yesterday, prone to hold faintly,
The power vouchsafed from on high;
I walked arm in arm with the tempter,
'Mid scenes that were fair to the eye.

He led me by paths lined with roses,
Through vistas of crimson and gold,
'Till my soul grew desirous to linger,
Such beauty for'er to behold.

I drank of the maddening nectar
Distilled in the bowls of despair;
Perfumed with the breath of lost angels,
Who practice deep subtlety there.

But, stayed by the wail of a mourner
I turned my infatuate eye;
And saw the fair form of my Savior,
Who breathed for the erring a sigh.

Ah! whither weak soul dost thou wander,
Beguiled by the smile of the foe;
Come back, erring mortal, come quickly,
Nor tread the dark pathway of woe.

The scenes that now gladden thy vision
Will fade as the dew of the morn;
And leave the fond seeker in anguish,
When hope from his bosom is torn.

Then, vanished the ravishing tinsel
From off the gay scene where I stood;
Its beauty had power no longer,
To whelm my poor soul as a flood.

And, yielding I sought the blest shelter,
Held forth to the children who stray;
Determined to cling to the Master,
Through all of life's intricate way.

Reclining on Jesus' bosom,
No earthly allurement can win
My soul from her peace-giving haven,
To walk in the valley of sin.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD.

"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Cor. 10: 31.

Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee. Mark 5: 19.

By examining the Scriptures of divine truth carefully we may learn that it is the privilege of the servants of Jesus to be constantly engaged in his service. The apostles' language at the heading of this article seems to cover the entire ground. "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do it all to the glory of God." There is nothing that affords more comfort to the Christ loving soul, than the fact that he may always be in the Lord's employ. If our service were confined to stated periods of worship, or certain kinds of worship, then perhaps there might be some excuse if we would grow cold and formal; for we might be so circumstanced that we would seldom have an opportunity to participate in those means of grace. Then indeed, might we with propriety expect more holiness and purity from those whose time and attention is almost wholly given to the reading and expounding of the Scriptures; we might well suppose them to be less exposed to temptation, and that they are the recipients of more of God's love.

But our heavenly Father has arranged everything in His family so as to give to each member equal privelege, and an equal opportunity to gain his favor and approval. We have heard it remarked that some kinds of service, is in itself more worthy of reward than other kinds, and that these servants are entitled to a higher place in the celestial city than is possibly attainable to other servants.

We have not so learned the word of God. Peter was at last convinced that God is no respecter of persons, although it required considerable training to convince him of this fact. And there are persons now, whom it would be harder to convince, perhaps than even Peter was, that all of God's people are equally dear to him, and that their work no matter what kind of labor it may be, it done in a proper spirit, is equally acceptable with him.

In our Master's vineyard there is much work, and a great variety of work. It should be the humble inquiry of each servant as he enters the vineyard: "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Then with unshaken confidence in his wisdom, and his goodness, and with a perfect surrender of our wills to His, we should cheerfully accept our work at his hands.

No matter how hard our task, or how obscure or humble our place of labor, we should remember that it doth not become a servant to chose his own work, but that he should be subject to the will of his master; and then our confidence in him should convince us that he knows best what kind of labor we are best calculated for, and also in what circumstances and through what labor we can the best work out our own salvation, and form for ourselves a character that is designed, when the veil of flesh shall be removed, to outshine the brightness of the sun, in the kingdom of our Father.

This humble confidence in our dear Lord lends to the most menial service a dignity and glory, and throws a halo of brightness around our daily pathway. We will cheerfully perform any kind of labor, no matter how degrading it may appear to the eyes of man, or submit to the most straitening circumstances, if this be necessary to procure the white robe and unfading crown which are in reservation for those who endure temptations. Jas. 1: 12.

The principles upon which our Lord's kingdom are based are wholly different from those of the world. In the latter kingdoms those who hold public offices are honored according to the importance of the office they hold.

When the ten had indignation against James and John, because they seemed to aspire to the chief posts of honor, our Lord took occasion to show them that those places in His church were not to be sought for, nor to be exercised as they are in the world. Said he, "Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever would be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever would be chief among you let him be your servant, even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many." Math 25: 28. Paul, who had fully imbibed the teachings of his Master, says: "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." Rom. 15: 1.

Those in the world who possess superior talents, wealth, or power, use them for their own pleasure or profit. But not so should it be in the kingdom of Christ; His servants, like the Lord, should not please themselves.

We are to love Him with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our mind. Math. 22: 37.

All that we possess, let it be wealth, talent, power or influence, let that all be little or much, must be laid upon the altar, and consecrated to his service. And our greatness in his sight depends not upon what we of ourselves possess, but upon the completeness of our consecration.

Our Savior upon one occasion, in speaking of his forerunner, uses the following remarkable language: "Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of Heaven is greater than he." Math. 11: 11. John possessed all the elements of greatness. His birth was foretold by an angel sent purposely to deliver this joyful message. It was also foretold by the same heavenly messenger, that he should be great in the sight of the Lord. He was great officially. He belonged to that favored, honorable class of men, the Jewish Prophets, and he seems to have been the greatest of these Prophets, yet our Savior says, "the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. That is the one who is least in his own estimation, the one who most realizes his own weakness and ignorance, and who feels his dependence upon God. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit and trembleth at my word. Isaiah 66: 2. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Psalm 51: 17. Therefore Paul, who was compelled because of the dissensions in the Corinthian church, to vindicate the dignity of his office and person, says that "if he must glory, he will glory in his infirmities.

This noble man, though he possessed mental powers that were almost superhuman, he will not glory in this, he will not glory in the priveleges which were his, in consequence of his being a Roman citizen, he will not glory because he is a son of Abraham; he will not glory because he had acquired a liberal education, he will not glory because he had been favored with such wonderful revelations No; but he will glory in his infirmities, because this is the sheet anchor by which he lays firm hold on Jesus; therefore he presents himself to his Corinthian brethren, not strong in his own strength, but strong in the strength of his divine Master.

The weaker he was in himself, the stronger he was in his Lord. He could do nothing of himself, but he could do all things through Christ who strengthened him. Oh how invincible is one thus equipped! The darts of Satan cannot penetrate such an armor, and the sorrow, afflictions and vicissitudes of this world can have no effect upon him whose life is hid with Christianity.

Our Savior in his commendation of the poor widow, who cast into the treasury of the temple two mites, plainly teaches that he sees not as man sees.

Though many that were rich cast in much, yet they did it out of their abundance, and at a small sacrifice; but this poor widow cast in all she had. It was the giving up of her all to the service of God, that made the gift so precious in the eyes of that glorious Being of whom Isaiah says that he shall be of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord, and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth, Isaiah 11: 3, 4.

Man would have looked upon such a meagre gift with contempt, and would have despised the dower. The amount was very small indeed. being not more than the thirteenth part of a penny, sterling. But God is not dependent upon human gifts, or human instrumentalities for the propagation of his cause. By reading the 50th Psalm, from the 7th verse to the 14th, we may learn how contemptable in themselves are the most magnificent gifts. If Jehovah were hungry or in want, would he tell us, or ask us to supply his wants? He who is the Creator of all things, and to whom all things belong? No; verily, no. Let us then, never think that when we give anything to His holy cause, or engage in His holy service, that He becomes indebted to us. We should esteem it our highest privilege to be permitted to co-labor with Jesus in any capacity whatever. Human distinctions are nothing in the sight of him who sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers. Isai. 40: 22. The only acceptable service is to present our bodies a living sacrifice holy and acceptable unto God which is our reasonable service." He requires that we give ourselves wholly up to Him, and the gift will be acceptable, not according to the greatness of the gift, but according to the completeness of the surrender. For instance, one talent wholly devoted to His service, is just as much, with Him as five talents are that are wholly devoted; provided that in both cases they be all that we have. "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required." Luke 12: 48.

"Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." Mark 5: 19 Having had the privilege of hearing a sermon preached from the above text, which caused us to examine and reflect much upon it, we will now try to present a few thoughts thereupon. The man to whom our Saviour addressed the above language, had been cured of a dreadful malady. No wonder that his heart overflows with love and gratitude towards that blessed Being who had done so much for him. Instead of being a raving maniac, dwelling among the tombs, crying and cutting himself with stones; he is now clothed and in his right mind. Ah! No wonder that when his great Deliverer is about to take His departure, he entreats Him that he may be with Him.

But the Divine Master sees best to refuse this petition, He has another field of labor marked for this servant, He wants him to go to his home, and there publish among his friends the great work that had been wrought upon him. His desire to be with Jesus was quite consonant with his feelings of love and gratitude. How we all love to be with those whom we highly esteem and venerate, and whose conversation is to us a constant source of instruction and comfort.

When the people of God are permitted to sit for a while together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus and to enjoy a rich feast of His love, they dread to descend from that mount of holiness, where they have beheld such a wonderful display of his glory and perfections. Their feelings recoil at the the thought of being again plunged into the cold atmosphere of the world; and from the very depths of exuberant feelings produced by obtaining a clearer view of the divine beauty and glory, they are ready to exclaim with Peter: "Lord it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us erect tabernacles here for thee and us, oh let us remain here! let us never again go down into the world.

What a poor erring creature is man at his best estate, while he is feasting upon the riches of God's grace, even then, he is prone to indulge feelings of selfishness, and forget the famishing world which is perishing for the bread of life. This is our militant state, our time for fighting and for labor; as this time is short it is necessary that we improve every moment, and that we spend not too much time in rest. With our divine Master, we should work while it is day, for the night of death will soon come, when no man can work.

The Revelator says, "the Spirit and the Bride say come."

These two agencies Christ sends into the world to prosecute His work, to battle with the powers of darkness, and induce the children of men to leave the ranks of Satan, and enlist under the banner of King Emanuel, Oh what a glorious work to take of the things of Christ and shew them unto men! A work that Angels might well delight to engage in.

Our Savior commands us, saying: "Let your light shine before men, that they may see your good work, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Math. 5: 16. The only way that we can let our light shine before the world, and thus glorify our Heavenly Father, is to mingle freely with the world as our Master did. But we do not of ourselves know where we can do the most good, or in what capacity; we should therefore, submit ourselves into the hands of God, asking him to direct and guide us. When we contemplate a change of location or employment, our prime object should be to glorify God. Our motive should not be to improve our temporal condition, but to enlarge the borders of Sion. Whatever we do should be done to the glory and honor of God. Having then submitted ourselves into his hands, we should cheerfully take the work that he allots unto us, and whatever our hands find to do, do it with our might. No matter what work falls to us, if it be the work that God has given us, in that work, and in that only, can we glorify His name. Let us then take courage. Let none think that they cannot work for Jesus. He has work enough for all. To each one he says: "Go work in my vineyard and I will give you your wages.

The husbandman when he tills the soil, or gathers in the golden grain, the mechanic with his tools, the miner when he digs into the bowels of the earth, the physician at his practice, the minister in the sacred desk, the woman pursuing her lonely and unobtrusive labor, whether in the kitchen baking, cooking, washing or or performing whatever service her position requires, and often amid sufferings untold; but with a patient resignation to the will of God, daily taking up her monotonous routine of labor, or with her little ones about her, trying to impart useful instruction to their unfolding minds. The servant in his lowly calling, or the invalid stricken down by disease, or in whatever position we may be placed; if our calling be honest and does not conflict with the laws of God, and if we have submitted ourselves into his hands, not desiring to please ourselves, but to honor him in all that we do, then we may feel assured that just the place where we are is the place for us; and only there can we serve him with acceptance. He has a work to do in each place, which none but they whom he has appointed to fill that place can do.

It is impossible for us to say which place is the most important. Eternity alone will reveal this, It is our business now to be subject to the will of God, and to do his bidding, then we can be co-workers together, and co-workers with Him.

The most humble position, is infinitely more honorable if we are trying to honor God in our calling, than the position of the proudest monarch if his heart is rebellious. Oh let our actions then be a model for the world; in whatever position we may be, let us so act that they may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus, and have learned of Him. Let us show by our conduct and conversation, as we mingle with the children of men, that we have higher hopes and higher aims than this poor world.

Christ wills that His servants shall manifest to the world in their daily lives, and in their daily conduct, the power of His love and grace. Therefore he employs the following emphatic words: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke 9: 23. Nothing will so powerfully convince the world of the reality of the religion of Jesus Christ as to see it exemplified in the lives of its professed followers. James tells us that "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this; to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world." Jas. 1: 27. The world may resist the most powerful and eloquent appeals from the pulpit. They may rebut them with arguments, but they can bring no arguments to bear against the pure and upright conduct of those humble servants who carry the principles of their holy religion into all their concerns of life. They are convinced that here is an inward power at work, to which they are strangers.

The conduct of Christians, under severe trials, and painful sufferings, has perhaps been the most powerful and effectual means that Christ has ever employed in the conversion of the world. Hence so many of the primitive Christians were called upon to endure the most frightful tortures, that the world might see by their firmness, and by the calmness and courage which they exhibited under such trials, a living manifestation of that inner life by which they were sustained. Many were led to embrace the religion of the martyrs after witnessing their torture and death.

Oh that each member felt and realized their individual responsibility, and that each would fill with acceptance the several spheres to which God has appointed them! Then what a power for good the Church would be. She would indeed look forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners" Cant. 6: 10.

MATTIE A. LEAR.

THE CAUSE WHY IT IS SO.

"Produce your cause saith the Lord: bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob."—Isa. 41: 21.

The words of the text were suggested to the writer some time ago at the close of a meeting where there had been very earnest and pointed preaching by the brethren; and in the closing prayer a brother made fervant appeals to God to add his blessing to the preached word, and a special blessing was prayed for in behalf of the young and rising part of the congregation, of which it was largely composed. The congregation being strange to me, and wishing to know what effect such a prayer had upon them, I looked over it, expecting to see them in tears and trembling as did the jailor when he asked, what must I do to be saved. But imagine my horror on seeing several squads of young persons, especially women, kneeling together and bowing their heads to each other, laughing and talking as merrily together as if they were at the picnic or ball. The text, "Produce your cause, and bring up your strong reasons" for such conduct presented itself to my mind, and I thought why is it that so many of our young people are so irreligious? We might reply, because they choose to be so, and the fault is with them; and with this answer dismiss the subject. But as the same prophet, chap. 40: 30, says, "Even the youth's shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall." I feel to examine the cause, or causes why it is so, a little farther before I dismiss the subject.

That we are creatures of habit and must learn everything, is a fact known to all. We learn to walk, to talk, to eat and drink; and we learn habits, customs, and manners, &c., and we learn all according to surrounding influences. The fact is we are imitative creatures, the child learns to speak, to think and act by imitation. And it is a question, how little he would know how to say and do if he had no example to imitate. Without regard to his nationality, he will acquire the language spoken around him, and the habits of the people, whether they be Christians, Jews, Pagans, or Mohammedans. So it necessarily follows that a child will acquire a pure, refined, or a vulgar and profane language, and will form moral and religious, or immoral and vicious habits, according to the character of the examples he may have to imitate.

In the face of these facts we must conclude that there once was a time in the period of their lives that the young people of the present generation, were in a condition in which they were susceptible and impressible, from which starting point they might have been trained to good morals, for God and religion if the proper influence had been thrown around them for imitation. The question arises, Who is at fault? And the answer is, the parents; for to them is the training of these children committed. "Father's provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," —Eph. 6: 4.

It is a fact to be grieved and lamented over, that there are very many parents who manifest no more concern for the civil or moral training of these children than if they had none to train. Boys from their cradle are left do as they please, using vulgar and profane language, slang phrases, &c., smoke and chew tobacco, with ill manners enough to blow their smoke even into old people's faces, while a religious word never falls from the lips of the father; he not being religious himself of course has no religious instruction to impart to his offspring. But sad to say, in many such families the mother is no better. Such parents not only fail to restrain their children, but even encourage them in vice; by their own ungodly examples they set them to imitate, and we see the sad result; a generation of irreligious and immoral young men and women who hold a power, and exert an influence in the cause of sin that is alarming to contemplate. A power and influence that if properly directed, would make good morality and religion a triumph in the land. I do not mean to say that there are no good parents who try to teach their children—try to bring up these children in the nurture and admonition of the religion of Jesus, for I know that there are such, and yet with all their care, their prayers and tears, some of their children have disappointed their expectations, and crushed their fondest hope. Among the most immoral we find those who had moral parents, but have forgotten their early training. And children of pious parents, children of many prayers, and many tears, who were consecrated to God by the benedictions of dying fathers and mothers, who took them in their arms, and with their dying breath said, O LORD GOD, keep and preserve my child. We see some of these among the vilest in the carnival of sin, rushing hellward with them.

While I recognize the fact that there are many good and pious parents who have tried to train their children properly, and they have turned out badly, I claim they are only exceptions to the rule, and do not change the fact that the prevailing religion of the young men and women is the result to a great extent of the failure on the part of parents, properly, to bring up their children in the love of the truth and fear of God. "Bring up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Had all the parents of our country, for the last fifty years professed and loved the religion of the New Testament Scriptures, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, and had trained their children in that religion, the rising generation to-day would be strong in God, and in the cause of truth. What a spectacle this would be to contemplate. While the failure is a very sad one, I do not say this merely to afflict the minds of those parents who neglected and failed to properly train their children and have done so much to produce this calamity, but also to arrest the attention of those parents, who have yet in their hands the training of the children of the present, and coming generation.

Parents, let us learn wisdom from the failures of the past, and their sad consequences, and let us remember that nothing less than a thorough religious training of our children in the religion of the New Testament Scriptures, will qualify them to act their parts in the future, or fill the measure of our responsibility. I wish to impress this fact, that example is stronger than precept; we must not only tell our children what they must do, but we must show them how to do it. But this is the more needful, because there are so many adverse influences thrown around the few children who have had a proper and correct Christian training. A few of these influences I will refer to, in order to enable us to counteract them if possible.

The fact that children generally learn the form of speech of their parents, and adopt their customs, manners, habits, as well as their estimate of morality and religion, &c., proves that the status of the present generation is the result of the irreligion at home; many parents professing a religion which sees no wrong, or harm in anything. The ball, the dance, the fair, the theatre, and the church are all right, if the heart only is right. This class of parents see as much pride in the heart of the humble follower of Christ in a dress becoming those professing godliness, as they themselves profess to have in their stage dress. Children of such parents imbibe the same principles and adopt the same faith and habits. Brethren these exert an influence over your children, that if they are not well fortified, will surely corrupt their good christian manners, but should they ever become your sons- and daughter-in-laws, the case will be deplorable indeed. These think it no sacrilege to talk and laugh on their knees while one of the old fogies pray.

That our youth's faint, and our young men utterly fall, must be ascribed to the practical infidelity of the times in which they live. A religion corrupted and made to suit every taste, is ready to receive all these within as they say, some branch of the Christian church, where they are taught to believe that they have the religion of the Bible, and all is well with them, saying "peace, peace, where there is no peace." This corrupted and perverted religion is approved by popular society, and fosters certain things which have a tendency to lead the youths to form immoral habits. Among these is the trashy literature of the day,—novels. Novels are piled on the center table in the fashionable religious parlors, and are highly relished by the young people, in whose estimation the Bible is a dry book in comparison. But says popular opinion, they must have them to encourage the habit of reading. So Novels crowd the counters of book stores, and are piled up on the street corners, and are literally thrust in your face in every car and steamboat. These novels are written in every style and every degree of immorality from that bordering near the religion and decency of the times, down to the most abominable and corrupt. They poison the mind, and corrupt the heart, and render it unfit for the humble religion of Christ. And while the law allows the sale of them, the corrupt, though popular Christianity sanctions it.

There is another reason why our youths faint, and our young men utterly fall, that I dare in this connection to refer to as an evil; knowing, however, that here I will not have the approbation of all my brethren, among whom may be our editors. As the Rev. I. W. Saugley has expressed my views on the subject, in a sermon on that subject, so fully, I beg to give his words as my own views.

"There is a disposition to educate the head at the expense of the heart, to improve the mind and neglect the heart, forgetting that education is worth little, where there is no solid moral and religious foundation, that education without moral principles may be a curse and not a blessing. The young man enters the ordeal of college life, and after a few years, comes out as Aaron's gold comes out of the fire, a calf, polished it may be, yet only a symbol of true manhood, but not a true man. The tendency of the times is to bring out fast young men. It is natural that we should desire that our sons should be smart, but there is danger of unseasonable smartness that is not healthy, and there is too much disposition to force the growth of young men. Why a young fellow in these days is expected to have the barber skim over his smooth face, and set his mustache before his beard has fairly begun to grow. He is expected to puff his cigar in the most approved style, sip the wine, and shuffle the cards for the social game, to attend the theatre and ball, and in a word, to deport himself as a fashionable man in fashionable society, before he is old enough to be cut loose from his mother's apron-strings. What is the result? Force out the boy under the impression that the highest duty of man is to act the fop on the stage of life, bring the social pressure to bear upon him, as you would turn the heat upon the plant in the hot-house, cram his head full of words and nonsense, and leave his heart as dry as a dried gourd,—force growth, and what kind of a specimen have you? A mere human vegetable."

These are some of the things that public sentiment approves, and a popular religion sustains, as not being morally wrong. But in this is the greater danger, for under the impression that they are not wrong, the youths correctly trained are the more easily lead into them, and their better principles will gradually but certainly be wrecked and corrupted, and lay the foundation of an immoral, and impious life.

These are some of the characteristics of the times in which we live. The apostle says there will be perilous times. Are not these perilous times which have come upon us? But who made them so? Not our children certainly, for the character of the times was fixed without them. It was fixed up by the parents of every community. They made the times irreligious, and the times made our children so. We see then where the responsibility falls, to wit, on the parents. Am I correct on this view of the subject? Let us see.

Take for instance all the people in this and other countries who have held to Roman Catholicism, and you will find that their children have almost universally adopted the path and observe the forms of the Catholic Church. The children have followed the example of the parents, and the result is, all the youth in their respective communities are Catholics. Now suppose that for the last forty years all the parents of this country had been Christians after the pattern laid down in the New Testament Scriptures, observing all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, is it not certain that their children would have followed their holy example, and the youth of this day would be religious, and none would laugh or talk while on their knees in time of prayer, public or private.

Notwithstanding all these admitted evils of our times, let me in conclusion ask one and all, parents and children individually, why are you irreligious? Produce your cause, bring up your strong reasons, why you are so. You may refer to the evils I have spoken of, but they cannot justify your irreligion. If you are the children of irreligious parents it will not justify you to be, or become irreligious parents yourselves. Have you been born in times of a corrupt Christianity and approved by popular sentiment, yet it will not justify you to approve it, nor to give it aid and comfort by you acquiescence. But many of you cannot plead the lack of moral and religious training, for you are the children of pious parents and of many prayers, and the subjects of correct religious instructions. It will not justify you to plead ignorance, for you live in a land of Christian liberty and freedom of speech, and an open Bible before you; while you have received an education to enable you to read it. It will not justify you to plead want of ability to obey the Divine precepts, for the Scriptures teach you that His commands are not grievious, but the yoke is easy and the burden light. If you but will, the powers of a corrupt religion and enmity of false professors combined, cannot hinder you to obey the truth. If you will, you can be a Gospel Christian in spite of the vices of society and of the corruptions and hostility of the age in which you live. May God help you. Amen.

D. P. SAYLOR.

GLORIFYING GOD.

It is right we should praise, extol and adore God's holy name. Paul recommends that we glorify God in our bodies and in our spirits. It is out of the question to suppose that we can, in an acceptable manner, glorify God with our souls or spirits while satan is holding a high festival in our body, or flesh. One of the most cunning devices of satan to lead men to sin, is that of varnishing his wares with would-be holy things. How often we are made sad to see and learn how God's name and the name of Jesus are used to advance and build up some deep laid scheme of satan. Some men would glorify by singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and turn around and dance the tune of "Yankee Doodle." Not long since I saw a man raise both hands high above his head and praise God for a work of deception he had been instrumental in bringing about.

How many good meaning people are led to church houses, and halls, through supposed motives of good, under the polished garb of religion, and there induced to engage in "pious" gambling, and that, too often for purposes to gratify the lust of the eye in adorning houses of worship! It is claimed by some that the building of richly adorned houses of worship is one way of glorifying God. The giving of a penny to the least of the Lord's disciples, through proper motives, will be more to the praise of God than millions devoted to the adorning of a temple for show.

Some good people claim they can glorify God in a Sunday-school picnic, gotten up after the fashion of a worldly minded worshiping people. Yes, they would glorify God in that which is under the generalship of the world—satan leading the van, and God receiving the praise! Away, away with such abominations—take not the name of the Lord in vain! Oh, let us beware of those who steal the livery of Heaven to serve the world in. God can only be glorified in an acceptable manner, by actions and motives emanating from a soul entirely consecrated to the service of Christ. The sound of a defective bell falls dead on the ear. In like manner a soul imbued in sin, pride, and a love for the world's ways and earth's pleasures, cannot glorify God to acceptance. Honesty of purpose outside of the requirements of the law hath no promise of good in the word of God. Oh! then, let us glorify God in our bodies and spirits, in that way that we may insure the great blessings of our heavenly Father. If we expect to glorify God in Heaven with all the redeemed, as children learning to lisp his name, we must learn to glorify Him here in deed and truth. J. S. FLORY.

ALL Scripture is given by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and therefore to refuse to obey any of the commandments in the New Testament, is simply to resist the Holy Spirit of God.—J. H Moore.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Jan 20, 1874.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

BEHIND TIME.

Although we are making every effort to gain time, we are still some few days behind and may be for a few weeks yet. Our late removal has given us more labor and takes more time to get things adjusted than we at first anticipated. However patience and perseverence will overcome all in a short time, when we hope to send out the Pilgrim on its mission regularly and hope it may reach its destination in due season. With this expectation, we kindly ask our patrons to bear with us a little as we are doing the very best we can.

MAIL IRREGULARITIES.

We are much vexed to hear complaints of the non-arrival of the Pilgrim. We have carefully examined our books and in almost every case the names were properly booked and the papers sent. Where the trouble can be we cannot imagine, but it is evident that they are detained somewhere. In a few cases it was an oversight. These have all been carefully set right. This we gladly do when informed of it and would just here say, if your paper fails to reach you do not delay notifying us too long as is sometimes the case, and then entertain hard feelings because you did not receive your paper. Our motto is, whatever is not right we will make right, but this, oftentimes cannot be done until we are apprised of it.

DON'T FORGET US.

Our easy terms may cause some to be more slack in remitting for the Pilgrim than circumstances would call for. This should not be as we have heavy liabilities and need all the money we can possibly get. Therefore we hope all will pay us as soon as they can. We wait on subscribers for their special accommodation, and therefore expect that as soon as they can they will return the compliment by accommodating us. We know that there are some who cannot pay now. On such we are willing to wait, but all such as have the money will much oblige us by sending it along as soon as possible, and will still oblige us more by sending along with it several new subscribers. Please think of this.

EXPLANATORY.

It has frequently been asked of me, why I do not write more for the Pilgrim, and indeed it may be properly a query in the minds of many, while my name stands in the relation it does with the work. My reasons seem sufficiently obvious to my own mind, yet this may not be the case with others. But to answer the inquiry, I will say in the first place, that my mind, as well as hands, have been very busily engaged since last Spring on account of a change then made in location, as well as in a business calling. I moved to New Pleasant Grove, or (Grafton) which is a village of some note on the line of the H. & B. T. R. R., seven miles south of Huntingdon, and 2½ miles north of the James Creek Meeting-house, where I have since been battling with the cares and duties of life, with as much patience and determination as I could command under the circumstances. I was necessitated to build during the Summer in order to conduct and carry on a supporting business; beside this, the care of the church, and duties of the ministry may altogether account for my non-appearance as a writer for the press. It may here be observed that I do not depend upon the Pilgrim for a support at present, therefore my pecuniary interests do not enter as largely into it as it might otherwise do, yet I do not wish to insinuate in this, that I am in the least indifferent to its work, but to the contrary, I have been really sorry that I have not been able to give it more attention, and devote more time in laboring for and through it, believing as I do, that it is, and may still be, rather an excellent auxillary in the promulgation of truth, and the advancement of our holy and blessed religion. I do hope ere long to give this noble work more of my attention, yet I am aware that those who are more directly concerned in it, are devoting their whole time and greatest energies to the promotion of their hopeful enterprise. Notwithstanding all this, it may be admitted that the work has not nearly reached that standard of perfection that may be hoped for it. That there is a demand for a better class of Christian literature, and a higher and purer grade of Gospel doctrine, making its way out through our church periodicals, is a fact that will not be denied. In view of the demorlized condition of the world, and the depravity of the human mind, its susceptibility of being deceived, and the danger of being engulfed in that deep flood of error that is constantly flowing out through the press of this day and time, every Christian heart should throb with fearful emotion, and bleed at the awful sight of the thousands of precious souls being carried away in this deep stream of falsehood. Every regenerate mind should arouse to the rescue, and as falsehood may be met, and conquered through the same medium by which it asserts and wields its power, we may also resort to the press as a successful means by which to engage in the contest. When we see the thousands of copies of periodicals teeming forth from the press bearing little else but falsehood and fiction upon their pages, and entering families of every grade and station in life, and the contents being devoured with an alarming relish, peculiar to the depravity of the human mind, should not we, as Christians, then awaken to a sense of our duty in this respect, and meet the boasting and defiant enemy on his own grounds, and equip our periodicals with an armor of truth gathered from the pure streams and brooks of the blessed Gospel? Though they may appear as a sling in the hand of little David, yet by the divine power, they may bring down the proud and boasting Goliah, and like the host of conquered Philistines, falsehood must retreat and vanish away, and truth bear off the victory with joy and rejoicing. Then brethren and sisters, to the rescue! While much has already been done, much more can be done in this way. While all cannot write for the Pilgrim, some can work for its wider circulation, and give encouragement to those who equip and conduct the work. May God bless and sanctify the same to His own honor and glory.

NOT WHERE TO LAY HIS HEAD.

Circumstances in life are very different indeed and many seem to have their cups filled to overflowing with the ills of this life, but after all there are but few, when the day toil is over, but what has a soft spot on which to lay his weary head, and to think that there should be any so unfortunate as to be deprived of this last blessing, is to grasp sorrow in its deepest woes.

No matter what our labors, or how full the cup of misery, the soft pillow invites the gentle goddess of sleep, and the weary rest; even Jonah in his high-handed rebellion, found the coveted spot and snored his guilt away.

Is it possible that there ever was was or ever should be one in the world deprived of this crowning, earthly gift? Yes, possible. There was one. The Father's Son. To save us he came into the world, but there seemed to be but a few lost. He came to His own but they received Him not—cast out, rejected, without home or without friends, we hear the plaintive lamentation: "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head!" In undertaking a work our first object is to elicit the sympathies of others, especially if they should, in any way, be concerned in that which we expect to perform. If in this we are disappointed, we frequently become discouraged and perhaps abandon our purpose. If such is human, and we all admit it is, what must have been the feeling of Him who came to redeem a lost and condemned world, when he found not only discouragements but all the frowns and abuses that an ungodly and sinful world could heap upon Him. Dear reader, have you ever given this idea a solemn sober, thought? Have you ever thought what would be your feelings under similar circumstances, and whether you could ever be pursuaded to treat a friend so ill? You may. Yes, you may have tried to feel that sorrow but you felt it not. Such love is heaven born and is not contained in earthly vessels contaminated with sin.

There are noble characters in the world, some that seem to be promnted by a love that is, at least akin to that that endured all things, but how sacredly few? We noticed a circumtance in an exchange the other day that struck us as being nearly in harmony with the spirit of Christ as we generally meet, and for the benefit of our readers we will relate it as nearly as we can rememberer. There was a man of large worldly possesions, which he had earned and laid away by hard labor and great economy. Thinking that he had labored long enough and that he had a sufficiency for his after support, he concluded to retire. He built himself a splendid mansion, regardless of cost, leaving nothing undone that might add to his comfort and happiness. After having it completed and furnished he moved into it with the assurance that he had left nothing undone.

After entering his splendidly furnished home, a stranger came in, and after admiring the completeness of the house, asked him whether he would sell it?

"No; with a great deal of care and anxiety have I had this house built expressly for my own use and therefore expect to occupy it during life."

After having eaten supper from a table richly laden with the good things of life, before retiring, and he took the Bible and opened on the chapter wherein is contained that most touching part of Christ's history: "The foxes have holes and the air have nests but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." Not where to lay his head! Is it possible that I have all this, and the Lord of life and glory had not where to lay His head?

He went to his well furnished bed room and there beheld his spring bed and soft pillows—but Jesus had not where to lay His head. During the night, sleep forsook him, but the head without a pillow was ever present until he made the resolve to divide with Him of his substance. In the morning he sought the stranger and offered him his mansion, a bargain was made—the house was sold and with a portion of it he purchased a much humbler one, and the remainder was devoted to buying pillows for God's poor.

Dear reader, how many of us should go and do likewise! That precious head is still unpillowed—still waiting for a favored spot--why withhold? Have we not got our pleasant homes, our ladened tables and easy couches, while Jesus, in the person of a poor Lazarus, is seeking a place upon which to lay his head. Brethren and sisters, let us throw open our hearts and doors to God's poor and thus realize the promise: "Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these you have done it unto Me."

TO OUR PATRONS.

We have now reached the fourth number of present volume, and the prospects for an increased circulation at present, are far better than at any other time since we commenced the publication of the PILGRIM. Whether our prospects will be realized or not, will depend largely upon our patrons. We can do no more than perform our part of the work, and entreat you to help us. This we can do with a free conscience, for we feel that our work is a good one, and should call forth the sympathies and prayers of every Christian heart. From the many letters we are receiving containing words of encouragement, we believe we have as a general thing, the hearty cooperation of our brethren and sisters; you wish us success; you would love to see our work prosper, yet we are inclined to think that many do not look at it with that degree of importance that they should. Especially does this appear to be so among the wealthiest portions of our Brotherhood.

In one among the wealthiest congregations in Pa., we had a fair circulation last year. This year the prospectus came in with about five names on it, accompanied with an apology something like the followiog: "Times awful tight, and others are in favor of consolidation." Are not these brethren aware that we are obliged to spend thousands of dollars right in these days of financial panic in order to carry on our business, and how do you, who are worth thousands, expect that we are to get thro' if you withhold from us the small sum of $1.50 for subscription which we earn by harder labor than any of you would be willing to do? You sit at home in your riehly furnished houses, and your tables almost crushed beneath the weight of the richest and most expensive food; you have your fast horses and splendid carriages, and your large rich farms, and yet not willing to give us the price of a hard earned subscription, so as to meet our indebtedness, and labor successfully for the promotion of Christianity. This is something for our patrons to thiuk of; we need your support at this time more especially, and whatever our shortcomings may have heen in the past, we know it is our purpose to do only that which is right, and therefore feel to urge our claims upon you. We should have a largely increased circulation, and there is no reason why we should not have it. Our lists in places have largely increased, while in some few places they have grown less, and it is a fact that where this decrease has occurred, as a general thing, it is in the wealthy congregations. Why is this? We are to judge the tree by its fruits, and if the love of money is not a little too prominent, then the order of things must be reversed, and good vines are now bringing forth sour grapes. When we look at the effects that riches are producing in the church it is really alarming, and our hope for the support of any good cause must after all largely depend upon the poor, or those in moderate circumstances. We do not mean that all those who have large possessions are not good. Many of these are quite charitable and are willing to help any laudable enterprise, and are in a position to do much for the Master's cause. But we do say that the rich cannot be good, that is, those who are indifferent to the calls for money that is intended as an auxillary for the advancement of religion, and whose highest object is to add to their earthly possessions. Christ says it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for such to enter the Kingdom. This of course makes it impossible. Then dear patrons, those of you who may be entangled with the riches of this world, beware; see that you love Jesus and his cause best, for where the heart is there is your treasure also. If you are most concerned about accumulating riches in this life, and neglect the things pertaining to your eternal interest, there is a time coming in which you will be miserably poor.

In conclusion we would say to our patrons, strive to overcome this growing evil among us. Fight it down for it is doing more harm than anything else in the Church. Pride is said to be growing amongst us but our convictions are that it is not doing near as much to destroy vital piety as riches. Do not let riches stand so much in the way of our periodicals. It is really the love of riches that is hindering them from becoming what they should be, and meeting the ideal for which they are intended. If it were possible for all our periodicals to be merged into one and published at a starvation price it would perhaps suit some, but whether it would be better for the Church and the world at large is an other question. If we thought it would be for the better we surely would make an effort to have but one paper, but as this is not so apparent to us, and the church in general, we shall continue to labor as we now do.

Ever since we commenced the publication of the PILGRIM we have been very badly in need of a suitable building in which to publish. We have now erected one that is suitable for our business, and as this has cost us a large sum, we kindly entreat our patrons to come to our aid. When we have this building paid for we will not by any means be rich; we will only be prepared to pursue our calling, and then we will be just as rich as we want to be. When we see the effect of riches we sometimes feel glad that we do not have much of this world's goods. Then brethren and sisters, come to our aid. We hope none of our agents will cease making efforts to obtain subscribers during the year; we will be glad to receive them at any time, and if all will make the proper effort we believe our circulation can easily be doubled, and by this means our increased expenses may be met at the proper time.

A TEMPERANOE TOWN.

The experiment of building up a town and community, where King Alcohol should have no license or favor was made in the building up of the Union Colony and town of Greeley in Weld Co., Colorado. An article in the Constitution of the colony was engrafted at the first, that all the members of the colony were restrieted in this one particular,—a forfeiture of title to their possessions if they should engage in the sale or in anywise vend spirituous or malt liquors within the limits of the colony, and it was expressly declared and understood that this provision should be respected. The experiment we are happy to announce has been a success, so decided and laudable that none need be ashamed of. 'Tis true, as in every act tending to reform, the experiment was evil spoken of and earnest efforts were made by the enemies of temperance to break down that provision; and even some good meaning men thought it would be best for the prosperity of the town to not be too strenuous in the policy of temperance. The strict temperance policy was carried out, the sale of all intoxicating liquors, beer, &c., was strictly forbidden. The result is the town of Greeley, like many western towns has grown up almost like magic, not yet 4 years old and containing about two thousand inhabitants, with many fine residences and capacious business houses, such as would be a credit to many eastern towns or cities. A place of business and trade second to none of its size in the Territory. But in some respects it is behind other towns, or I might say, so far ahead, that certain trades and influences are left out of sight. And that is in the sale of intoxicating beverages, or open houses for billiard saloons, or any of the demoralizing agencies that are run by King Alcohol. We don't find them here, neither do we find the bloated drunkard, the suspicious loafer, or "gentleman" gambler, who lives at somebody else's expense. As a fish cannot live out of water, neither can the scum of immorality exist in an element void of the smell of whiskey! The rising generation of this town numbers hundreds; influences to lead them to ruin through the doors of saloons do not exist here. It was my privilege to spend a week during the holidays in this town, and I did not see a man under the influence of ardent spirits, saw or heard of on street brawl or anything of the kind. And now we are bold to give vent to our convictions, and say what has been done here can be done anywhere. And if every town, city and community in the Union would "go and do likewise"—turn the demon out, and show no favor to the great destroyer, what a blessed country we would have! 'Tis true that to accomplish a purpose of such magnitude, it will take men of determination, and women too, for in this "good work" who shall deny them a right to battle with that foe that is continually striking at their dearest interests. We would by no means advocate coercion at the point of the bayonet, but let the friends of temperance, and lovers of the divine principles of the Christian religion, use every lawful means to discourage the use of Alcoholic beverages, and encourage that standard of morals that would be above dram drinking and all its evil accompaniments. Let our children be taught from their early infancy, that the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is an abomination, and Satan's highway that leads to destruction. Implant in the mind of the young an abhorrence of that great evil, that leads its millions to shame and disgrace in this life, and eternal death in the life to come.

It was said in my hearing not long since, that "Greely would prosper faster if the people were not so moral," meaning if they would have whiskey saloons, billiard tables, &c., more money would contentrate there to go into the town coffers. I thought, and said, "yes but there would be a great sacrifice for the gain." What! sacrifice principles of right for a few dollars. Sacrifice and throw away the safeguard of morality to let in mammon. Yes some would have the good people of this town throw away the bright glory of the goddess Temperance, and hug to their bosom the red dragon! And that too, in order that a greater prosperity might follow in the funeral train. Prosperity at such a sacrifice, I am sure the people of Greeley will now consent to.

In nothing should we be more vigilant than in maintaining our principles of right that are calculated to make us and our children happy on earth and in heaven.

J. S. FLORY.

Greeley, Col.

TO ELD. GEO. WOLF OF CALIFORNIA.

Our conviction is that the day spoken of in Genesis in which the Lord rested from His labors and hallowed it, was a period of time the length of which we cannot accurately determine. We know that "one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day," and in the account we have of the creation we find that the "lights made in the firmament of the Heavens to divide the day from the night and to be for signs and seasons and days and years," were not made until the fourth day. The terms evening and morning are rather indefinite, and we see no change in the language used by God at the conclusion of each day's work, either before or after the labor of the fourth day. We can see no particular application in this to anything in the New Testament except that God demands the seventh part of our time to be set apart especially for His service and worship; and as on the first day of the week our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ rose from the dead and accomplished the victory over Death and the Grave, and thus fully completed the work of Redemption, we think we do well to remember it as our Sabbath, resting from the toils and cares incident to our calling in this world, and employing as best we can the time to the glory and honor of God and the advancement of our souls in the "hidden life" which it is our blessed privilege to enjoy. Yours in love,

GEO. S. MYERS.

CHURCHVILLE, Neb., Dec. 14, '73.

Dear Editors: I have read the PILGRIM of 1873 and want it for 1874. As none of the brethren live near here we have not the pleasure of hearing them expound the Gospel truth, and for this reason we want the PILGRIM again. I do not expect to remain in this part of the country. I want to go to Osbone Co., Kansas as soon as I can dispose of my property in Indiana. This money panic has thrown it out of the question. There is preaching in this section of country but it is not according t. Christs' doctrine. I heard a preacher saying that the fashions comes from the devil. The thought struck me how can any person serve Christ under the cloak of the devil? The people in this country chiefly believe as a person thinks so he should do, for all that the preachers say they should not trust their own conscience and then turn right around and say it makes no difference, as they think, so they should do, only believe and get up in church and tell your experience you are all right. Such doctrine is preached here. There are all kinds of religious papers to be had here but they don't suit me, and for this reason I want the PILGRIM. Last Spring I moved in the house with another family and when I sent for the PILGRIM the woman of the house said she was glad I sent for a religious paper, she likes to read them. She is a professor, but it did not suit her, it seemed to be an idle tale to her. If there was anything said about pride she said it was not so particular, if the heart is right all is right. JOSEPH STOVER.

Dear Pilgrim: —Since my last letter to you last Fall, the churches of our District have been moving on "the even tenor of their way" except the Roanoak congregation. It has suffered a considerable falling away, the particulars of which I will write you shortly.

As far as I have been informed, all of our congregations hold the Love-feast, and as a general thing, with less disorder than usual. There seems to be a great indifference manifested by the masses on the subject of personal religion. Our meetings are very well attended, and the attention to the service is good, but the seed seems to fall on unfavorable ground. We do not see much fruit. However this should not discourage us. We need not expect to convert the world. It was commanded that "this Gospel be preached among all nations for a testimony against them." So let us continue to testify against every species of error. The present times are especially significant and ominous.

You are probably advised of the proceedings of the "Biennial Conference of Friends" which met in Lynn, Mass. lately. The question of music, dress, doctrine, language, &c., were discussed and decided "by the inexorable logic of events."

I will give you a few extracts from a report in the Messenger of Peace of Dec. 1873.

"The Biennial Conference of Friends which closed its session in our city last week presented features too suggestive to pass without comment.

"A few years ago there were those among us who believed that the Friends' mission was ended and their days numbered Their membership, if not actually diminishing, shows no increase proportionate to that of other sects, many of them of much more recent date.

Their simple form of worship had few attractions for the young, while their rigid adherence to ancient fashions, and the ban placed upon music and innocent amusements, served still more to deprive it of this essential element of life and growth.

But this state of things could not last; new conditions involved new duties, and the alternative was presented of death or progress. Thoughtful men saw the situation and succumbing to the inevitable, prepared for a new departure. Bible schools were established, and music and song began to be looked upon as not absolutely heinous. Tailors were not always solemnly warned to observe the time-honored cut, and the brim gradually narrowed unable to resist longer the transforming influences of the nineteenth century.

That the path which the Friends will henceforth tread will diverge widely from that hitherto followed, is apparent to the most superficial observer, and the problem whether the more demonstrative forms of worship which in some of their meetings seems to have been inaugurated—whether a nearer approach in doctrine, dress and language to that prevailing among us will witness a declension from that simplicity of character and legality to conscience that have made their name illustrious, time alone can solve. But whatever may be its future "the past at least is secure."

Also, from the Central Presbyterian, a paper published in Richmond Va., under date of January 7, 1874, and from numerous other sources, we see what effect the "tran-forming influences of the nineteenth century" are doing for the "offensive dogma of close communion."

Thus the. Quaker barters his claim to be the peculiar people, and refuses to bear testimony for his Lord against the great evils of fashion and pride, for the small consideration of popular favor. His children will not have his religion with its peculiarities, and to preserve it, he purges it to suit the spirit of the times. This is decidedly un-Quakerish. It was hardly to be expected that the children and grandchildren of those sturdy Englishmen who chose to writhe before the whipping post are not in English prisons rather than to take off their hats in a court of justice, would thus dishonor their illustrious ancestry by catering to the corrupt tastes of a licentious age.

The poor Baptists too are yielding to the unremitting fire of their antagonists. Immersion, sprinkling, pouring, spiritual baptism, imaginary baptism, and every other form of administering the sacred rite will soon meet around one common sacramental board, and that ideal church, one and indivisible, will be supposed to be introduced. The anthem of peace will resound throughout the earth and woe to the dissenter who will not bow the knee to Baal, and toss his hat in the air when they hear the sound thereof.

But are the Brethren ready for this? Are they yielding to the inexorable logic of events? Are the "transforming forces of the nineteenth century" so irresistible that we must bow the suppliant knee? Are the social and religious influences surrounding us so powerful that we cannot transmit the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel as a precious heirloom to our posterity? Are the seducing charms of prosperity undermining our devotion to principle? Shall we break down the walls that guard the "narrow way" to admit the gay, the proud, the indifferent? &c. I think not. It is true that the influences that are at work are more unfavorable to the inculcation of a pure Christianity now than formerly, but the means to bring up our youth in the nurture and admonition of the Lord are as ample and effective as ever. The necessity to preach a pure Christianity, not a conglomeration of abstractions such as the so-called Evangelical Alliance would seek to establish, is as imperitive as it was when Paul "withstood Peter to the face." We have the same Lord to serve who said, "His Kingdom is not of this world."

Of one thing however we may be assured. If we encourage or even conceive at the indulgence of every superfluity and enormity of fashion in our household's, and rear our youth in the daily association of the thoughtless, the irreligious devotee of this inexorable tyrant, we need not be surprised if they laugh to scorn the lowly pretensions of our church.

Let our daughters read Peterson's Magazine, Godey's Lady Book, and send them to a boarding school for a few terms, and the work of transformation is perfected. Let our sons measure calico and weigh coffee behind the counter a few years, and grow up under the tuition of the daily counting room company, and if they do not develop a decided repugnance to the non-conformity of the Scriptures, there is no truth in the maxim "as the twig is bent so the tree is inclined."

There is but one hope for us and that is we must make no compromises. The demand for concessions is nothing but the cry of leaches daughter "Give, Give." One concession paves the way for another. If the price of admission into society is conformity, we must not give it. It is too great. Besides we have as much right to dictate the terms as they, and if they cannot accede to them, let us take the right hand and they take the left. We can well afford to suffer the deprivations of the pleasures of sin for a season, out of our respect for the recompense of reward.

My letter has grown much longer than I intended and lest it should merit the title of Bro. Voluminous, I will close "after making a few remarks" about your (i e our) paper. It has commenced its visits for '74, and by its physical beauty, and its spiritual purity, and its near approach to perfection in every respect, it commends itself to the church as imminently worthy of an extensive patronage. I have not succeeded in getting as large a list of subscribers as formerly, but I take every available opportunity to forward its interests. Coffee and tobacco are high and money is scarce. Oh, brethren throw away those old bones; you have gnawed them long enough and read the PILGRIM for 1874, and if you are not better for the change let me know what amount of money represents the difference and I will pay it, provided the contract for refunding is reciprocal. I will send the item I promised on the Baptismal controversy in the future. Your Bro.

D. C. MOOMAW.

Blacksburg, Va.

Dear Editors:—Since you solicit church news, and as yet have no correspondent from this congregation that I know of, I will try to give you a few items.

Ours is the Chippewa congregation, Wayne county, Ohio, and will be recognized as the location of the A. M. of 1872.

As an item of "historical interest," (almanac compilers and antiquarians take notice) I will inform you that the old brick edifice, where, according to the version of some, the first ecumenical council of the Brethren was held, is now a thing of the past. Not one stone is left upon another to mark the spot of its former existence. Whatever of insignificance may be attached to this fact, I wish to have it understood that the demolition of the old edifice was not the result of any feelings of disgust or contempt at the supposed innovation. The building had become so dilapidated that it was thought advisable to erect a new one in its stead. The result is, that a commodious new building has now taken its place, and instead of being owned by 13 denominations as the old was, it is owned exclusively by the Brethren and "River Brethren," although others contributed freely and took an active interest in its erection. It was dedicated on the 21st of Dec. and promises to be a good meeting point for the "Brethren." The neighborhood being peopled by a plain, orderly class of people, who love to hear the gospel preached in its primative simplicity, and I trust that many will be induced to obey it, not only in its primitive simplicity but in its primitive purity also.

The past year has been a fruitful one, with us in the Lord's vineyard, and while we rejoice that a full score have come out on the Lord's side we still continue to hope and pray that scores of others may seek and gain a ready admittance into the goodly fold by the living door.

Bro. Stephen Yoder from Iowa, a former resident of this place, paid us a visit recently, and whilst with us gave practical evidence that his zeal for the Master's cause was still active, and although the weather was unfavorable to large congregations, we trust that his labors have not been in vain in the Lord.

While we notice the prosperity among us, we must also, as impartial chroniclers of passing events, notice things that are not pleasant.

While many have enlisted under Jesus, others have deserted His ranks. This is truly a cause for sorrow. Oh that our sorrow might be turned to joy by witnessing their return to their first love!

Many—yea quite a large number—have been called away from time to eternity during the past year. Family ties have been broken, parents have been made to mourn the loss of dear children, husbands have had their wives taken from their sides, and widows and orphans have been multiplied. The sympathies and prayers of the Church have for some time been directed in a special manner towards our aged sister Kurtz, widow of our late Jacob Kurts. She has been on a bed of affliction since last harvest.

This notice would be incomplete, without giving at least a passing notice to the many afflictions that have been visiting the family of Bro. Geo. Irvin, one of the elders of this congregation. Within the past year he has followed to their graves, a daughter, a daughter-in-law and a son-in-law. In each case little children have been left behind. Other members of his family have been sick, unto death. Let us hope his cup of sorrow may be tempered by the conversion of souls more precious in his estimation than the apple of his eye.

Our Church papers are pretty extensively circulated here yet there are still many heads of families who are not yet able to appreciate the importance of supplying their children with wholesome reading matter, such as is furnished by our leading Church papers. Such powerful auxilaries to the dissemination of gospel truth should not be overlooked by any who have the least regard for the salvation of ther souls. E. L. YODER

THE SABBATH DAY—THE CHANGE.

QUERY.

J. H. Moore.—Dear brother: Where, when and by what authority was the Sabbath changed from Saturday to Sunday? A speedy answer is desired. J. P. Horning.

Remarks. The above subject is a proper one, and deserves a positive answer. As I have given the subject considerable thought of late, especially in some of my sermons, I will endeavor to give an answer that none can fail to comprehend.

1. There has never been a change of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday since the world began. The Sabbath has always been on Saturday or the seventh day of the week, but never once on Sunday or the first day of the week; no mention of the kind can be found either in the Old or New Testament. As well try to put Monday on Tuesday as to change the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Then there has never been any change made at all respecting this matter. If the reader will reflect a moment this will be as clear to him as the noon-day sun-beam. As for a change, there has been none. The Sabbath mentioned in the Bible has always been on the seventh day, and will remain there just as long as the world stands. The Bible don't say one word about changing the day, neither does it ever call the first day of the week the Sabbath. I know we call it by that name, and so does our literature and civil law, but they are both mistaken when we come down to the real meaning of the term. The most of our authors have done much injustice to this subject, and I shall aim to steer my cause independent of them all, and give the gentle reader a Bible answer to the question. I do not know whether brother Horning desires a historical answer or not, if so, that really would not help the difficulty in hand, nor clear up the matter. A good Bible exposition of the subject is perhaps the best.

5. The first command that God gave was "Let there be light,"—Gen. I: 6, showing that he was not willing to work in the dark. After working six days he finished his work, and rested on the seventh. Bare in mind that first he worked and then rested afterwards. In the Mosaic law this same day was set apart as a day of rest to be kept wholly unto the Lord. They were required ro work the first six days and then rest on the seventh. Like God, they did thesr work first, and rested afterwards. This law was given alone to what we now call the Jews, nor was it binding on any other nation under Heaven. God had promised them the land of Canaan—an earthly possession and then gave to them a code of laws which they were to obey in view of the promise God had made them. No other nation had this promise. hence on them the law wos not binding unless they first became initiated.

God made Abraham two promises. 1. The land of promise, or Canaan, and 2. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The first promise was to the Jews only, while the second was to effect the welfare of all nations, both Jew and Gentile. The code of laws given Moses at Mt. Sinai was to those alone who were to enjoy the benefits of the first promise or covenant God made with Abraham, that unto him and his seed would he give the land of Canaan for an inheritance forever. In this law the seventh day of the week was set apart as a day unto the Lord, and was called the Sabbath, and continued in force just so long as the law was binding. For a violation of this law the penalty was temporal, as was the reword for obeying it.

But we have a new area of things, the old law is now abolished; it was only added because of sin till the seed, Jesus Christ should come; We have observed that God ended his work on the sixth day, and rested on the seventh, so with Christ, on the evening of the sixth day, at the close of the old dispensation, he ended his great worke when he said "It is finished," rested his body in the grave on the seventh. On the first day of the week Christ arose from the dead, to the joy and hope of his broken hearted followers That day was fully devoted to the spreading of the glorious news of the risen Lord. Eight days afterwards, or on the next first day of the week, we find them assembled again, and this day was ever afterwards kept by them in memory of their risen Lord. They did not call it the Sabbath, but the Lord's day, to be kept to his honor, or frequent the the first day of the week, because in numbering the days of the week it came first. In the Mosaic law the first six 6 days were to be devoted to work, and the seventh to rest, and was by the Jews called the Sabbath, but not so in the law of Christ, or the Gospel, we devote the first day to the service and worship of the Lord—and call it the Lord's day—then labor the other six, hence we offer unto the Lord the first fruits of our labor.

The Sabbath day has then not been changed to Sunday at all. The old law required that the seventh day be kept unto the Lord, for the simple reason that God commanded it, and it was also authorized that it would be called the Sabbath. But this law has now been done away with, and of course so has the Sabbath as a day of rest also passed away. In the room of the old law we have the Gospel of Jesus Christ, another law more perfect than the former, one that contains no seventh day as a day of worship. But the apostles and ancient Christians, came together on the first day of the week, in memory of the resurrection. As before remarked, they never called it the Sabbath, never spoke of it being changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, We hear so much about the Sabbath being changed, but can't find one word of it in the Bible. The change was not in the Sabbath, but in the law. The Sabbath is still on Saturday, and will remain there while the world stands, but it is not binding on us who live in the Gospel dispensation, we have another day set apart for a more noble purpose. The first day of the week being the Lord's day should be devoted to his service, and those who do not keep that day dishonor their risen Master. We then should not neglect to assemble ourselves together on this day and thereby celebrate the resurrection of Christ, an event that took place on the first day of the week. We have some people in our land who commit quite a mistake, who propose to celebrate the resurrection on the Lord's day, by taking the Communian on that day. The Communion should be taken in commemoration of the death and sufferings of Christ, which took place on the evening of the day, and not in token of his resurrection at all. The ancient Christians came together on the first day of the week in commemoration of the resurrection of their Lord, and then in the evening of the day they had a meal in common which they called the Lord's Supper, after which they celebrated the death and suffering of Christ. I presume the foregoing remarks will give the desired information. They have been written in much haste, not having time to refer to the points of proof in the matter. J. H. Moore.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

Some time ago, one of our neighbors, Mr. A. Anderson, met with an accident and as it has been misrepresented and construed, the parties concerned wish us to give a true statement, which we give as given to us.

Mr. Anderson, (Anthony's father,) had procured a new gun, and wishing to test it, went out to a shed in company with his son. Wishing a rest from which to shoot and none being there, his son went around the shed to procure one. In the meantime the father had found one and was just in the act of shooting when the son came around the corner of the shed and directly in front of the gun. This excited the father and in the haste to remove the gun, by some means discharged it, the ball striking the son in the right arm just above the elbow. The bone was broken and badly fractured, and it was at first thought it would be necessary to amputate the arm but he is now getting along hopefully, and the probability is that the arm will not only be saved, but will be restored to its former soundness. Editor.

QUERY.

Dear Editors:—Will you please answer the following question? When our friends of other denominations come to see us, have we any right to invite them to ask a blessing at our tables when they dine with us, are we justifiable in so doing?

Jacob Link.

Answer.—The Apostle Paul says all things are lawful but all things are not expedient. It would be quite lawful for us not to ask such as we think are not of the true faith to exercise in a religious capacity, but it might not be expedient. Such acts, we look upon as christian civility and may be extended to all such persons, as we think possess honest religious convictions. In extending such acts of Christian courtesy we do not assent to their belief and practice, but simply exercise that charity which thinketh no evil. This has been the general practice of the Brethren, as far as our knowledge extends, and is in harmony with our own views.

Lewistown, Pa, Jan. 19, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim.—Our series of meetings passed pleasantly and we believe profitably. The brethren that came to assist us were Ephraim W. Stoner, and Jacob D. Trostle of Maryland, Stephen Yoder of Iowa, Isaac Myers of Illinois, John Spanogle of Aughwich, and a number of the Spring Run Branch. A few souls acknowledged they were tired of serving the enemy and were received as soldiers of the Cross. May they find that service pleasant, and in the end receive that inheritance which is incorruptible undefiled, and that fadeth not away, which is the privilege of all God's people to enjoy. Geo, S. Myers.

Dear Brother:—Please announce in the Pilgrim, that the District Meeting of West Virginia, will be on the 1st and 2nd days of May at the Brethren's Meetinghouse, near Bealington in Barbour Co., on the Tigrots Valley River. By order of the Church,

John W. Fitzgerald.

DIED.

PRICHARD.—In Botetourt Co., Va., Dec. 25 '73, of Fever and Consumption, Martha J., daughter of friend James and sister Mary Prichard, aged 13 years and 21 days, leaving many friends and relatives to mourn their loss.

When she was told that she could not get well, she said well, she was going to Heaven to be an angel, and ask'd her dear father mother and friends to meet her there. She was conscious of her death, she told them that she was dying, and bid her father and mother farewell and fell asleep. May the Lord sustain the bereaved in their affliction, believing their loss to be her eternal gain.

Farewell dearest Janie, thou hast passed
From suffering earth to realms of love;
Our Father grant that we at last
May join you in bliss above.

Mary S. Bundan.

IRVIN.—Sarah S. Irvin was born June 4th 1850, and died Jan 8th 1874; aged 23 yrs, 7 mos. and 24 days.

Sister Sarah was the wife of Bro. David Irvin, a young minister, and only daughter of Bro. David and sister Susan Hoff. She leaves four little children, the youngest, an infant, aged 18 days. She lived a consistent Christian life, and as the hour of her departure drew near she bade her family and friends farewell; expressing herself with Paul as "being in a strait betwixt two." but was willing to bow submissively to the will of the Lord. Hymns 592 595, 903, and 605 were selected by herself to be sung upon her funeral occasion which took place within sight of her late residence, at Beech Grove Meeting House, Wayne Co., Ohio, Jan. 20th 1874. Funeral discourse to a large congregation from Rev. 14: 13.

E. L. Yoder

SYFORD.—In the Berlin congregation, Somerset Co. Pa. on Dec. 11, '73: Cyrus Milton, son of bro. Solomon and Sister —— Syford, aged 6 years, 7 months and — days. Funeral discourse by Bros. Geo. Shrock and M. Weyand, from Matt. 18: 3 first verses.

WEYAND.—In the Berlin congregation, Somerset Co. Pa., on Jan. 10, '74, Daniel Millard, only son of bro. Michael and Sister Sarah Weyand, aged 4 years, 6 months and 23 days.

Occasion improved by brethren E. Cober, Geo. Shrock and Eld. Jacob Blough, from the words: "Man born of a woman is of a few days and full of trouble." Parents, weep not for your little Daniel. but say with David of old "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

C. H. Walker.

BRUMBAUGH.—In Randolph Portage Co O., on Jan 4th '74, of diptheria, Martha, the only daughter of Jacob and Lucinda Brumbaugh, aged 7 years, 3 mos. and 4 days. A. Brumbaugh.

LAUNCHBAUGH—In the Yellow Creek congregation, Bedford county Pa., brother John Launchbaugh, aged 80 years, 9 mos. and 26 days.

Occasion improved from 2 Cor. 5: 1—4 verses, by the brethren to an attentive congregation. We have a hope that he died in peace with God, being in his last years zealous for the truth; leaving a disconsolate aged widow (a sister) and a daughter to mourn their loss; one daughter a sister in the Church. May God comfort them in the hope to meet the departed in Heaven.

Leonard Furry,

BRANDAL.—In the Winamac District, of billious colic, on the 15th day of Nov., 1873, our old and much beloved sister Catharine Brandal, leaving a sorrowing husband and many children and relatives to mourn their loss. She was the wife of a deacon and will be very much missed in the Church. Her age, as near as can be ascertained, was about 63 years. Funeral discourse by M. A. Eisenhour and the writer D. R. Freeman.

LITERATURE.

THE OUTLAW'S DAUGHTER: or ADVENTURES IN THE SOUTH, by Emmerson Bennett. (Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, Pa.) For sale by J. U. Blair, Huntingdon, Pa. Price, 12 mo., cloth, $1.50.

This is the initial volume, of the first complete and uniform edition, in book form, of the works of this author, announced by the above named house. The volume before us is handsomely bound, and attractively gotten up, and promises well for the forthcoming volumes of the set. The writings of Mr. Bennett are full of incidents and stirring adventures, and contain a mine of valuable information, relating to the scenery, people and customs of southern and frontier life, now either passing or past away, and becoming matters of tradition.

DIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA. A complete Explanation of the Physiology of the Digestive Process with the Symptoms and Treatment of Dyspepsia and other Disorders of the Digestive Organs. By R. T. Trall, M. D. Illustrated. Price $1. (S. R. Wells, New York.) For sale at this office.

The late celebrated Dr. Pepper of Philadelphia, Pa., once said before his class at the University of Pennsylvania, that out of the many thousand cases of Dyspepsia and kindred diseases of the stomach that came under his notice while in charge of the Pennsylvania Hospital, ninety-nine out of every hundred were caused directly or indirectly by the use of Tobacco. This is the most valuable testimony relative to the cause of this prevalent, and often said to be national disease that could be obtained. The best talent in the land is engaged in determining how the suffering resulting may be relieved, and we hesitate not to say that Dr. Trall brings to the task abundant ability; and shows how it may be accomplished without the aid of medicines. This book would prove of immense value to thousands of sufferers from this terrible disease.

THE February Magazines are so attractive, and so well filled with interesting articles, that, with the list of the several we shall present to notice this week, and the numbers themselves before one, it would be a difficult task to decide which one to take. Do you want the freshest views on Science, to investigate the opinions of the great thinkers of the age, on all matters pertaining to a thorough Scientific education, and be fed, literally feasted on that you did not know? The Popular Science Monthly unfolds them all to view. Do you wish to enjoy the most charming literary productions, and poems, as well as the cream of the foreign periodicals? then look to Atlantic Monthly and Every Saturday, for there you will find the articles of the literary minds of both hemispheres; but should you desire a literary magazine, also containing a record of progress and passing events, then Old and New with its lively articles will meet your wants. Do you desire the most progressive and most profusely illustrated magazine in the land, the one that never presents a dull or uninteresting article, Scribner's Monthly, with its papers on the Great South will exactly meet your want. Should you wish the handsomest magazine in America, in point of paper typography and mechanical execution; and, withal containing some of the most brilliant articles, and the finest engravings, our Penna. Magazine Lippincott's excels; and the fine Scotch humor of its new serial Malcolm will add to its reputation. But you must not forget your Sunday reading. The Sunday Magazine will supply you with the best of articles, every one written by a master pen, the product of a leading mind. Are you interested in Human Science and progress, self-culture, the philosophy of life; do you desire to "Know Thyself" and the laws of your being, then take the Phrenological Journal; but if you desire to live without being sick, and know how to avoid the necessity of taking medicine, the Science of Health will afford you the very means needed. If you wish the fullest information on Sanitary Science, and all things relating to the alleviation of suffering in the world, get the Sanitarian and you will be abundantly repaid. Do you desire to delight the girls and boys, and bring a joy into your home, at least once a month, then fail not to secure St. Nicholas, unqualifiedly the best magizine for young people in this or any other country. It is a marvel of beauty, and a mine of interest. But with all these you would have failed to make glad the minds of the little ones, and secure for them the instruction and pleasures that will bring the greatest return, did you fail to supply them with the Nursery with its beautiful engravings. We cannot too highly commend it. Do you desire to know the way to Life Eternal and the joys of the "world to come," subscribe for the PILGRIM, and it will teach you the purest Christianity.

We will furnish any and all of these at club rates.

A REPORT has been circulated that the Atlantic is to be converted to Methodism by the new publisher, but we are assured that it is a mistake, and that its character will remain unchanged.

THE Riverside Bulletin has been bought by Every Saturday, and will appear in the future as a department of that weekly. Mrs. Mary Clemmer Ames has written a story of American life, which will appear as a serial in the same periodical.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation: but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

POETRY.

THE BROKEN BUD.

BY M. HETTIE H.

A rose tree near my window stood,
It bore a single, beauteous bud;
And long I waited for the hour,
When I should see the full blown flower.

Each day my little favorite grew,
And fast increased in beauty too;
Each morn with dew its leaves were wet,
But they were not unfolded yet.

At length one balmy morn I went.
While the leaves with dew drops were bent,
Methought I doubtless now shall see,
The blooming rose upon the tree.

But I beheld with sorrow then,
My favorite drooping on the stem,
Some wanton hand with cruel stroke,
The slender stem had rudely broke.

Now disappointed, grieved, surprised,
I dashed a tear drop from mine eyes;
And long beside the withered bud,
In silent, thoughtful grief I stood.

Then as it hung its dying head,
In fancied tones, it meekly said,
Grieve not but deign in this sad hour,
To learn a lesson from a flower.

For in my death I humbly show,
The end of all things here below;
And in one stormy night, like me,
Thy earthly hopes may blighted be.

Yea, like the leaflets on the spray,
All beauty soon must fade away.
The brightest thing below the sky.
Must wither like a flower and die.

Then mortal, turn thy thoughts above,
Where all is hope and joy and love,
Where the flowers bloom in endless day,
And beauty never can decay.

Set not thy heart on earthly toys,
But aim to grasp eternal joy;
Strive to secure a heavenly home,
Where disappointments cannot come.

Thus, silently I mused awhile.
On this vain earth's deceitful smile;
How false the pomp, the beauteous show
That glitters in the world below.

Then turned me from that quiet spot,
But never yet have I forgot
The lesson taught me, when I stood
Beside that lovely, broken bud.

THE MOUNTAIN OF THE LORD'S HOUSE.

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountain, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow into it.—Isaiah 1 .: 2-5, and Micah 18: 1-3.

That the phrase in the last days refer to the Christian era, I think will be admitted by all, but to what particular time in that period all are not agreed. I hold that the last days embrace the whole period of the Christian dispensation, from the time that Jesus said, "The time is fulfilled, the Kingdom of God is at hand," until the last saint shall have been caught up to be ever with the Lord; and that the effects of it will be produced during the entire period as set forth in the text, as far as the government of Jesus will be accepted by men of all grades and nations, but will only become general in the last, or closing days of the dispensation.

The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountain. Mountain in this connection signifies Kingdom, government, controlling power, &c. I am aware that some hold that Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, is meant by the mountain of the Lord's house. But how this natural hill or mount shall be set on top of all the natural mountains of the earth is not easy to be understood, or what particular benefit would result from such a capping the mountains does not appear.

It is evident that the term mountain of the Lord's house, has a spiritual signification, and refers to the Kingdom God would set up among men on earth during the last third of the world's six working days by His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. And is the same with the prophecy of Daniel 11: 34-35, where it is said, "a stone was cut out without hands," which not only break the image &c., but "became a great mountain, and filled all the earth." The stone here clearly signifies the Son of God, and the mountain, His Kingdom, the Church. With this view of the subject we notice the Kingdom of God.

The Kingdom of God signifies the Church under the Gospel, or the visible Church in which God is served under the Gospel dispensation. "The law and the prophets were until John, since that time the Kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."—Luke 15: 16. "The time is fulfilled, the Kingdom of God is at hand, repent ye and believe the Gospel."—Mark 1: 15. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God.—Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God."—St. John 3: 3-5. "For the Kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations."—Ps. 22: 28. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." These references prove that the mountain of the Lord's house signifies the visible Church in which God is served under the Christian dispensation.

Kingdom implies a king, and Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is the King in the Kingdom of God, and He is King of Kings and Lord of Lord's. Kingdom implies location or territory, and the territory of this Kingdom is to all the ends of the earth, embracing the utmost bounds of creation. It implies subjects, and the subjects of this Kingdom are all the children of men of every clime and nation who have received the Lord Jesus, and are born of God, and by repentance, faith and baptism have entered into it, and by a special act Jesus Christ the King made all infant children members of the Kingdom. And it implies laws, and the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, is the law of the Kingdom.

The mountain of the Lord's house, the Kingdom of God, the Church, shall be established in the top of the mountain. It shall exist after all other kingdoms, dominions and powers shall have fallen and decayed, for "In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole Heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."—Daniel 11: 44, and 6: 27. "And of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."—Isaiah 5: 7. These are glorious things spoken of our Zion, the Church, though now while her government is in charge of weak men, she is under a cloud in the wilderness, where even some of those who profess to bear her name speak reproachfully of her humble doctrines. But when her King will come into her in his personal glory, to plead her cause, her habiliments of majesty, glory, dominion and power will be manifest, and all the kingdoms of the earth will succumb before her; when her government will rule and govern all the ends of the earth. And so will be established in the top of all the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills. All sectional differences, and so-called church traditions will be swallowed up by her all prevailing influence, and there will be one Church and one people, for all nations shall flow unto it. All nations will be converted to the true Christianity. Paganism, Indianism, Mohammedanism, with the hundreds and thousands of sects and isms which now divide the Christian world, will be converted to the true faith. Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day, or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children."—Isaiah 46: 8.

"And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob." One will encourage the other, saying, Come let us go together. As the Jews, when they from all parts of the country went up three times a year to worship at Jerusalem, called on their friends on the road and in the fields to go along with them, so will one call to his relatives, neighbors and friends to come and go with them. One nation being born in a day, will excite and stimulate another to come to the birth, and join with them in embracing the true Christian religion. Many will say, Come ye, and let us go. Not I will go, and you do as you like, nor you go, and pray for me and I will consider the matter, but come and let us go. Come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord's house, and he will teach us of his ways. God's ways must be learned, and in his Church he will teach them. God teaches by his word and Spirit the communion of his people in the observance of his instituted ordinances, and hence they will go to his Church to learn them, for there he will teach us his ways, which none but he, by his Word and Spirit can do; and we will walk in his paths. "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way," and we will walk in his paths, we will obey all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameles. "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." The Gospel is the law of faith; it is the word of the Lord. It went forth from Zion where the temple was built, and from Jerusalem. When the Kingdom of God, or the mountain of the Lord's house was in its embryo state, the Lord Jesus was sent unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. He began in Galilee, but when repentance and remission of sins must be preached among all nations, he commissioned his apostles to begin at Jerusalem; and in the temple on Mount Zion, they first preached. He shall judge among the nations. His word going forth out of Zion, shall subdue souls unto himself, working in them both to know and do his will, and shall rebuke many people. By his spirit working on men's consciences, he will judge and rebuke, try, and check them. His Kingdom is spiritual, and not of this world.

The effect of being taught the ways of the Lord, and walking in them, is universal peace. They shall beat their swords into ploughshares. Instruments of war are useless things to those who are taught to walk in the ways of the Lord, and hence will be converted into implements of husbandry, which is the first employment God appointed man unto, and is best adapted to the Christian life. How different are the ways of the world. They that walk in them declare war, and plowshares are beaten into swords, and pruning-hooks into spears, as in Joel 3 : 10.

After the battle at Gettysburg, Pa., I was riding over the field; it was harvest time, but all husbandry for miles around was destroyed and laid waste. A soldier ironically addressed me while we were looking over the waste of what were flowing fields of wheat a few days before, said, war improves the country. Oh! the time when nation shall not lift sword against nation as they now do; neither learn war any more, but live in universal peace in the Kingdom of God which is not of this world, and in which his servants will not fight.

Nations professing Christianity, waging war against one another is an argument the Jews urge against Christianity, claiming that Jesus is not the Messiah because this promise is not fulfilled. But this argument does not apply to the true Christianity taught by the Messiah; but only to that of man, or by man corrupted, and perverted Christianity which is so prevalent in the world. The Christianity taught by the Messiah prevails only partially in the Christian era. The true mountain of the Lord's house, the visible Church on earth being driven by the little hills and small mountains, the kingdoms of the world and ecclesiastical authorities, being permitted for a time to be in the ascendency, have driven into her wilderness state, where she is unknown to national reputation and fame. But to all who are of an humble heart and contrite spirit, she is most gloriously grand, and her doctrines sublime. The whole design and tendency of the Gospel is to make peace, and slay all enmities. It has in it the most powerful inducements to peace, so that we might reasonably expect this effect wherever it is truly and fully preached. And it has this effect with all who accept it, and would have it universally were it not for those lusts of men from which come wars and fightings, and are lulled to rest by men of their own lusts, whom they have hired for wages to preach to them that religion sanctions it all. Where faithful men preached the Gospel, Jews and Gentiles were reconciled and brought together by it, and there were no more such wars between them as had been, but became one sheepfold under one shepherd. The Gospel of Christ, as far as it prevails, disposes men to be peaceable, and as far as the love of God is shed abroad in the heart, constrains men to love one another: not only particular and special friends, but all men, embracing enemies as well as friends. The primitive Christians were famous for love, so much so that their very adversaries took notice of it. And thank God we are assured in the text that in the last days this principle will prevail and become universal. Who shall live when God doeth this? But do it He will in its proper time, for he is not a man that he should lie.

The practical conclusion the prophet draws from all this, is, O, house of David, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. Brethren, it is our little Zion, unknown to, and yet despised by the world, of whom these glorious things are spoken. We are the Lord's little flock to whom he will give the Kingdom, for we preach his Gospel of peace truly, and it is known to all who care to know, that as far as the principles we preach are believed and practiced, all the effects set forth in the text follow. Our brethren by by faith and practice, beat the swords into ploughshares, and the spear into pruning-hooks, and from the day of their conversion to God and the faith, they learn war no more. During the rebellion this fact was fully demonstrated.

Brethren, love and peace are the principles that will, and must prevail, because they are of God who is love, and who has enjoined upon his people not only to love their brethren, but also their enemies, and peace being the result of love, the sword is sheathed where Christianity prevails, and the religion of love and truth will at last prevail, and subdue the world to God, and will be established above all Popedoms and princedoms of the world. Then let us not hesitate to proclaim them to the people of all creeds and faiths. Tell them these are the principles that will prevail, and they who believe and observe them are the people of God. Tell them to our children and have them believe and observe them; urge upon all to come by faith, repentance and baptism, (trine immersion,) into the Church that teaches and observes these principles, and is built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone, that they may be in the building which will at last be established in the top of all the mountains.

And now I entreat one and all, old and young; Come ye and go along with us in this kingdom, and we will do you good, for the Lord and King has spoken great and glorious things concerning it. Come, let us go.

THREE PRECIOUS THINGS.

PRECIOUS BLOOD, PRECIOUS FAITH, PRECIOUS PROMISES.

1 Peter 1 : 19. 2 Peter 1 : 1. 2 Peter 1 : 4.

Of the disciples of Jesus, perhaps Peter represented poor human nature in all its varieties more than any one. Impetuous, soon repentant, apt to make the same blunder, or one quite as rash the next minute, I do not know but his crown will be the brighter for his final conquest. John, called the beloved disciple, content to lie on the bosom of Jesus and listen to the words that fell from the divine lips without cavil, while the hasty Peter must rebuke the Master. So unlike, and yet, both requisite. One proclaims as it has been justly called, God's love to the world, and the other loving much because much was forgiven, speaks of the Precious blood, Precious faith and Precious promises. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."

"But Christ being come, a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say not of this building, neither by the blood of goats or of calves but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place having obtained eternal redemption for us." Here then we see the price paid for our ransom was precious, priceless. It was precious because it was of the Son of God. It was precious because a voluntary offering. Without this precious blood the new covenant could not be ratified. It was precious, because when it was shed the vail between the Jews and Gentiles was rent and the way into the Holy of Holies was made manifest.—"Having, therefore brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say, his flesh, and having an high priest over the house of God, Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works." Heb. 10 : 19-24

"To them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ, Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord." 2. Peter 1 : 1

Paul says, Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," and I think a better definition cannot be given, but we use the word faith sometimes to imply mere belief of admission of fact. For instance, a man believes that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, but he does not render any homage to God as a divine architect or sovereign Ruler. He believes that He is, and that He is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek Him. Yet he does not seek Him and his faith avails him nothing. He believes, that Christ Jesus came into the world, suffered and died, and rose again for our justification, but his faith is not precious, it does not make him an heir of salvation, for faith, without works is dead, and as there are some works to be performed without which it is impossible to please God, his faith is merely nominal. He believes—The devils also believe and tremble. But there is a faith that takes firm hold of the promise, Because I live, ye shall live also, That faith wrought with works, and the trial of which being much more precious than of gold which perisheth though it is tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ"

3. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

Precious promises! They lift the soul out of self, and draw us heavenward. When the moral sky is dark and overcast with clouds, how like a bow of divine beauty do they appear, spanning the way between earth and Heaven. We might often hear "these voices in the night" did we but look up, instead of down. We might hear the gracious words, "Fear not, I am with thee." The sea rolled before the Israelites, the depths of the wilderness, and the host of the Egyptians behind, yet the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night, were evidences sufficient of the Guiding Hand. Therefore "fear not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." We are not always required to work. Obedience to God's commands is only required, be that Stand still, or Go forward. Moses was at one time to smite the rock for a supply of water, at another to speak to it. And because in the latter case he disobeyed and smote TWICE he was not permitted to enter into the promised land, for by his action he did not sanctify God in the eyes of the children of Israel. He may not have understood the import, but he had the command. We think the Rock referred to Christ, who being once smitten was henceforth to be spoken to. Let us also beware seeing we are compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses, lest we do not heed the commands, and only look over into the promised land.

Let us gather some of the precious promises, and may we be strengthened in so doing. I think there is a promise for every condition of God's people. The ladder that Jacob saw, set upon the earth, and the top reached to Heaven and the angels of God ascending and descending on it. Isaiah says, "When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."—43 : 2. We are not promised exemption from all perplexing and harrassing things, but we are promised the supporting presence of Him who was in all points tempted as we.

Turning to Jeremiah we read, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." 31 : 3. God's love to man is manifest in all his dealings from the earliest period of time. After the transgression in the garden, it was kindnes to the human race to prevent our first parents from taking of the tree of life in their sinful state. And when God saw the fallen state of man, before the Egyptian bondage, he promised redemption.

"For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed saith the Lord that hath mercy upon thee."—Isaiah LIV 7-8-10.

But perhaps the glorious capstone of the promises, the brightest here in the bow of divine grace is the triumphant resurrection. The great theme on which Paul delighted to dwell. The great spring time he speaks of "When this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible, incorruption." His own aspirations were, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection." And when writing to the Thessalonians he rises triumphant, dwelling on the voice of the Archangel, the trump, the ascension of the risen saints in their corruptible bodies, he says, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Yes the Great Sheaf has been waved as earnest of the mighty harvest. "Christ the first fruits, afterward them that are Christ's at his coming." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection."

THE WORD IS LIFE.—As bread is necessary to sustain life and give vitality to every organ of the system, so is the word of God necessary to sustain the soul. The word of God "Is spirit and it is life," hence it gives life as well as action to the soul, as bread gives life and action to the body. By obedience to the Word we live; by disobedience to the Word we die.—J. M. Wells

THE CHRISTIAN'S PILGRIM-STAFF.

The Christian's life here is compared to a journey he hath to travel. As this world is not his home, he is going to a better one; yea, he is looking for a country where his Master is—where God has promised to dwell with him and wips away his tears, and to be his God forever. In this world surrounded with sinful and wicked men, where he is only a stranger or pilgrim, he travels; he is journeying on, among an unrighteous and adulterous generation, hence he is oft called to suffer losses, pecuniary losses, even sometimes, not of a trifling nature. As a citizen to another world, he is not disposed to avenge himself, or avail himself of the benefit of a temporal power. Christian forbearance will not allow it; love exercised to our enemies disapproves of it, and what is most the Gospel of Jesus Christ forbids it. Losses of a pecuniary nature are not the only things, he has to suffer. No, no; reproaches mockings, evil entreatings, and the eye of the slanderer is continually staring him in the face, watching him closely to see whether he can find aught to say against him. Crosses, trials, tribulations and temptations, he meets with almost every step. Amidst all these difficulties, the worldly minded man will say, "How can the Christian make speed in his dismal travels and enjoy himself as he does? Do we not see his countenance beaming while observing the ordinances, held in derision, even by a christian world. Is it possible that he can endure all such frowns without resentment?" This is a mystery to many professors, not alone in the world. And why? Because they have never experienced the power of the Gospel with the Holy Ghost shed abroad in their hearts, neither obtained the full assurance of the ever-presence of the Triune God. Behold the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous. The tempest may roar, clouds of darkness may follow in quick succession, deep may call unto deep at the noise of the waterspouts, when waves and billows are gone over him, yea he knows that the Lord will command his loving kindness in the daytime and in the night. This song shall be with him and his prayer be unto the God of his life. Tho' he goes mourning because of the oppression of his enemies, and with a sword in his bones his enemies reproach him, and in the service he rendereth to his God is mocked, the infidels daily approach him asking, "Where is thy God?" Yet amid all his trials, in the triumph of his faith, he cries, "Why art thou cast down, O, my Soul! and why art thou disgusted within me! Hope thou in thy God, for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance and my God!

Brethren and sisters, do not be discouraged; though you may feel weak under the pressure of your temptations, almost cast down, your christian progress somewhat retarded, your road strewn with thorns and briars and your pathway paved with the mire and quicksands of despondency, still hope in God. Says he, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He leadeth me beside the still waters. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil; for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Yes, dear Christians, God's Rod is our comfort, God's staff is the pilgrims support, and why shall we pine? Why shall we despond when we find our road is not always strewn with flowers? Though our journey is a thorny maze, yet we are glad to know that it will end. If we sow in tears, we shall reap with joy. Be ye steadfast, young brother; be steadfast young sister; you may imagine a long journey, but it may end before that of our old brethren's and sisters'. But whether young or old, let us as a united phalanx courageously and boldly meet the foe, fight the battles of the Lord, hold out faithful to the end that we may receive the crown of life. For what is our hope, or joy, or our rejoicing? Are not ye even in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ at His coming? Brethren and sisters, look forward, we anticipate great great things, meditating upon Heaven, the presence of the Lord, the smiling countenance of Jehovah, the felicity of the saints. O, my soul is enraptured! Delight fills my mind!

My countenance is beaming with delight at the thought of the possibility of meeting with my Jesus, that lovely Savior who died for me. Brethren, sisters and friends, while they contemplating God's unspeakable love humanity in securing the blessings of heaven. Oh what a glorious scene opens to my view! It seems to me

> I see a world of spirits bright,
> All beautiful and fair;
> Their robes are all of spotless white,
> Oh, who would not be there!

Dear old brother and sister, do you wish to be there? Young brother, young sister, do you wish to be there? Yes, I know you do. Then run your race with patience and look to Jesus.—Sinner would you wish to be there? Sinner, SINNER, I call you again, would you wish to there? Then repent and believe the Gospel.

LEONARD FURRY,

LORD, IS IT I?

BY D. B. MENTVER.

Jesus says, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness." Have you done so?

Satan says, "You must wait until you are older, as soon as you get settled in life it will be easy for you to serve God," or "wait till you have retired from business."

"Lord, is it I" that will listen to such a wicked advice? Not I. Reader, what will you say?

Jesus says, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Satan says, "Its no use; be easy, take your pleasure."

And Mr. PRESUMPTION says, "There's no danger, no use striving, all will be made holy and happy." Reader, don't be deceived.

Peter, a faithful apostle says, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the Name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Mr. SKEPTICISM says, "I don't think baptism will do any good, if God's Spirit does its work upon the heart, outward forms and ceremonies are of no use." This is a very dangerous man; he is interfering with God's plans. We had better thank the Lord for His saving commands than find fault.

Jude, another apostle says, "Earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints."

Mr. FAINT-HEART says, "Don't preach doctrinal sermons, or you will offend some people." Then listen for an "uncertain sound." I fear there are few true watchmen.

Paul, that loving old preacher, says, "See that none render evil for evil unto any man, but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves and to all men." How do you like that? That is the best peace doctrine.

But Mr. REVENGE says, "My neighbor has acted so badly, that I will not stand it any longer, I'll make him know that I have rights as other men, and I'll make him respect them." So. Better be more like Jesus.

Again, brother Paul says, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

Mr. FAIRWEATHER—Laziness says, "Believe I'll stay at home to-day; so rainy, and I don't like to listen to Bro. W., for he can't preach much anyhow." Poor man! What good does his religion do him? He is not quite awake. Let us hear the Word preached when we have opportunity and profit by it.

Here is brother Paul with another admonition, "Pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

Mr. WORLDLY-MINDEDNESS says, "I can't find time to pray, and then I have so many things to attend to, and my mind is so taken up with the business of the day, that I am not prepared to pray." Dear me! How worldly you are! Do you think you can serve God and Mammon in this way? May the Lord help you to consecrate yourself fully to His service. Don't only have a name that you live, but be a true, loving, praying disciple. So shall you "be an example to the believers," and a child of God, getting ready to meet your Father. Ask His blessing in all you do, and he will grant it.

I have not reached every class, yet I trust, that many will find something in the above to persuade and inspire them throughout this year, and for the future, to a better, and higher, and more devoted life in Jesus our Lord.

FEET WASHING.

The Christian Standard is a large weekly paper, published in Cincinnati, Ohio, and edited by Isaac Errett, a learned Campbellite minister, and among other items it proposes to answer all questions touching the meaning of Scripture, &c. Well to tell the story in full, a few months ago, S. W. B. sends in the following question:

"Is Feet Washing binding on us as a church ordinance?"

This of course is a fair question, and is a good test for Mr. Errett to tell which he thinks the most of, Christianity or Campbellism. Well here is his answer:

> No. The apostles were to teach the disciples to observe all things whatsoever the Lord had commanded. Among these 'all things," feet-washing as an ordinance to be observed by the church, has no place. The only place recognized for it is among "good works"—a rite of hospiality practiced by individuals. See I. Tim. v. 10. It is placed along with lodging strangers, relieving the afflicted, and other works of benevolence. It bears no mark of a church ordinance.

But Mr. Errett has some members in his church, who are not to be led about by every wind of doctrine. So a few days ago J. B. Wolfe, of Cerro Gorda, Ill., sends in the following good logical production, as another test with which to try the learned editor's faith in the law of Christ:

> In the STANDARD, No. 46, I notice a question asked by S. W. B., and the answer to the query does not suit me. I would like to hear some more about it from you. The query is this: "Is feet-washing binding on us as a church ordinance?" We must bear in mind that if any man shall take away from the words of the Book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of Life and out of the holy city, etc., etc. What did Jesus say to Peter, when Peter said, "Thou shalt never wash my feet," and Jesus answered in positive language, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me."
> And then again, in the 14th verse, "If I, then, your lord and master, have washed your feet, ye [the church] ought to wash one another's feet." Will any one dare to deny as plain a command as this—words spoken by Jesus himself? God forbid. You claim that this is left to your own option, because Jesus said, "Ye ought to wash one another's feet." But stop and think. Suppose you will tell one of your children to do a certain piece of work, and use the Savior's language, that it ought to, and that child does not do its work, will you call that child a dutiful child? I, for one would not. Neither will the the Savior us; but I am afraid he would reject us as he did Peter, or would have done, if he had not submitted. I will say again, be careful that you do not deny any part of the word of God, for it is very dangerous ground to occupy. I am no scholar, as you will see; but I think I can read and understand the word of God. I am sorry, very sorry, for the poor inquiring soul, that he relied upon the STANDARD for information on this all-important subject of feet-washing. I claim that the 13th chapter of John affords all the information that any person needs on this subject.
> May the spirit of God so direct us that we may all be alike, is my prayer.
> J. B. WOLFE.
> CERRO GORDA, Ill. Nov. 26, 1873.

I don't know to what church this Mr. Wolfe belongs, but it is a very easy matter to see on what side of the question he stands; but next in order comes in reply to the above a note from the learned editor; here is his language in full.

> For the sake of a few honest, conscientious people, whose scruples we respect, we admit the foregoing communication, that we may reply to it, and then, as we do not regard feet-washing as an "all important subject," we shall dismiss it from our columns.
> 1. That our Lord, when he said to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me," did not mean to say that feet washing, as an ordinance, was essential to fellowship with him, is evident from the fact that all introduced into the church by the apostles there is not a solitary instance of the observance of feet-washing as an ordinance. This ought to lead our correspondent to question the correctness of his conclusion.
> 2. When our Lord says, "You ought to wash one another's feet," he does not mean by "you" the church, as our querist interlates or interprets. There was no church there. There was no Church of Christ in existence at that time. The apostles were afterwards empowered to teach their converts to observe all things whatever he had commanded them, and they never, in a single instance, taught them to observe feet-washing as a church ordinance.
> 3. The only place given to feet-washing by the apostles is "a good work" (1. Tim v. 10). It were as reasonable to make the lodging of strangers a church ordinance, as the washing of feet.
> Our querist is sorry, "very sorry." Well, so are we. Sorry that he is sorry, very sorry that he is very sorry; very sorry that he seeks to enforce as an ordinance that which has no such character. The authority of Christ can be dishonored as much by perverting as neglecting his teaching.

The reader will observe that Mr. Errett has dismissed the subject from his paper. I am of the opinion that if he had been in the upper room in Jerusalem, on the night of our Savior's betrayal he would have wanted to dismiss it there too. Well Peter did try the game, but the Lord was about to dismiss him for the business. I will not here argue the case in this communication, as the reader will likely hear of this matter in complete before long—but simply want to state that the gentle reader has both sides of the question now before him. Read the above extracts and you have Mr. Errett's logic in full, then read the 13th chapter of John, and you have the command and example of Christ in complete; now then it is left to your choice to obey which you think proper.

'Tis not the amount we read but what we remember that improves us.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Feb. 3, 1874.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

Mrs. Mary Shoemaker, an aged and respected Quaker lady of this place, but formerly of Philadelphia, Pa., died suddenly on the 24th inst.

Charts.—Remember that J. H. Moore has reduced the price of his "Historical Chart of Baptism" to mere cost, and it will hereafter be sent post paid for the small sum of 50 cents per copy. Every family ought to have one.

Dr. David Livingstone, the great explorer, who has been for thirty years in the interior of Africa, to explore, that unexplored country, and to discover the location of the lakes, at the source of the river Nile, died near Unyanyembe, in Africa, while on his return from the accomplishment of his task.

Russian Settlements in the United States.—From the Herald of Truth we learn that the Russian Menaonites have commenced a settlement in the neighborhood of Mountain Lake, Minn. Some ten or twelve families have located there, purchased farms and are preparing to raise a crop for the coming year. In Russia there are some 500 families preparing to come to America and are expected to arrive about the first of April.

Our Friends everywhere will please continue their efforts in behalf of the Pilgrim. Hundreds and thousands of names might be obtained by persevering efforts. The scare of the panic is over and many who refused to subscribe at the beginning of the year would take it if called upon now. There is nothing of importance accomplished without an effort, and as our success depends mainly on the efforts of others, we make our continual appeals to all who are interested in the cause which we are advocating, to continue their solicitations.

Eld. C. G. Lint, of Dale City, favored us with a visit on last Tuesday. He spent the day with us. Being the first call on the Pilgrim family, we hope he was as favorably impressed with us as we were impressed with him. The day was partly spent in discussing several questions of vital importance to the brotherhood and we hope the time may soon come when, what is now the subject of private conversation may be carried out by the united action of the Church. As Bro. Lint promised to give a general report of his visit, we shall omit that part, hoping that our readers may hear from him soon.

Money By Mail.—The post-office detectives advise against sending money by mail, claiming that it is setting an open and unnecessary temptation before post-masters. We receive considerable money in this way and the larger part of it is so carelessly put in that the greater part of letters containing money can be readily detected, some using white envelopes. This should never be, as money in white envelopes can be more readily detected than in yellow ones. We do not feel ourselves responsible for any sums sent to us over $1.50, unless registered, or sent by check or postal order.

The Celebrated Siamese Twins, Chang and Eng, died early on the morning of the 17th inst. Chang had been afflicted with paralysis for some time, but had been able to go about over the plantation on Thursday preceding his death. He was dead about one hour before Eng was aware of it. When he gave the alarm of the death of his brother, he said: "I suppose I must die too." His death which seems to have been the result of fright, took place two hours afterward. The membrane that bound them, was never separated, and there is a provision in their will forbidding their separation, so the mystery will never be solved.

On last Sunday we had the pleasure, for the first time, of examining the Companion and Gospel Visitor as now consolidated. The size and form is the same as before except the "head" which now reads: Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor. The name does not have much to do with the character of the paper, but we cannot see the propriety of retaining both names when it is really but one paper. Bro. J. Quinter has the paper under his immediate control, and from present indications, the consolidation will be an advantage to both, publishers, and readers. As there are now only two papers instead of three last year, we hope the Church will come to the aid of both and give them that encouragement that they so richly deserve. We have but a few families but what could afford to read both, and that to advantage too. Our object is the same and the field is sufficiently large. Sin is enlarging her borders and every means put forth to withstand her should receive the united support of the Church.

TO THE CITIZENS OF HUNTINGDON.

After carefully examining different locations as a proper place to publish the Weekly Pilgrim, we decided in favor of Huntingdon, where we have spent considerable money in putting up a suitable building in which to carry on our business successfully. We have now cast our lot and means among you, hoping that our presence and influence may add, at least, a mite towards aiding the spirit of enterprise that is so manifest among you. Our work, it is true, is not of a local character, neither do we represent it as such. We claim it to be strictly religious, and as all are, or should be concerned in a work of this kind, we feel the more free in presenting our claims to you as a Christian community, for a liberal patronage. Our paper is published in the interests of the Church of the Brethren or German Baptists, but while we do this, we hope our labors will harmonize with the views of all such as believe in a true and vital Christianity.

As quite a number have expressed a desire to read the Pilgrim had they an opportunity, we make the following arrangements for the accommodation of all: Of this issue we will print a sufficient number of extras to supply the town and have them distributed by a carrier. After giving a few days for examining the character of the work, we will have him call again, and then all who feel to give us their sympathy and support, will please give him your name and number and the Pilgrim will be supplied regularly by a carrier, if a sufficient number is obtained. If not, those convenient can get it at the office, while those at a distance can be accommodated at convenient points hereafter designated.

Our terms are $1.50 per year in advance, however if there are those who wish to read our paper and have not the cash, we will wait them three months, at the expiration of which time we will expect all to be paid.—If it does not suit the gentleman of the house to be at home at our second call, please leave the name and money with the lady. We make this arrangement, believing that there are a large number of our citizens, many who know us and our fathers, who are willing to give sympathy and aid to any laudable enterprise in their midst. The present No. is a fair sample of what may be expected during the year. Each subscriber gets a Pilgrim Almanac FREE. Hoping that our work will meet a favorable reception we now await the result.

RELIGION.

There is much said and well said too, about religion, yet the term seems to be but vaguely understood by the generality of professing Christians, and its life-giving principles carried out by only a sacred few. Religion is not a thing to be received but to be done. It is the visible result of the reborn or regenerated man or woman as exemplified in their Christian life and conduct, and unless we can have this visible sign whereby all men can know that we have passed from death to life, we have no assurance of a new creature in Christ Jesus. Just as sure as a little leaven will leaven the lump, so sure will pure and undefiled religion manifest its workings in the creature. The fact is, it cannot be otherwise without causing a breach in the law both of nature and of God. Thorns cannot bring forth apples, neither can the bramble produce grapes. We know there is much loud professing of religion in the world, and thousands say "they get it," just as if it was a commodity attainable for a stipulated amount of asking for, but unless we can see it living, acting and walking about doing good, we dismiss it as the hallucination of a wrongly instructed and disordered mind. The best possible definition of religion is given by the Apostle James, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep unspotted from the world."

To visit the fatherless and widows is a good work, and easily understood, but to keep unspotted from the world implies so much that few care to understand it. The act of regeneration dismembers us from the world and makes us subjects of a new kingdom. Old things have passed away and all things have become new. By old things, we understand, the works of sin, of darkness, and of the devil. These, in our death and burial, have been destroyed and we come forth as new creatures in Christ Jesus, and as a consequence, all the things we now do are new and of a different character to what we done while in an unborn state. We have become subjects of a new kingdom, and are to be identified in doing its work. This is the outgrowth or result of love, which is the test of our discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." Then the whole idea of religion may be comprehended in "love to God and love to man," as love is that divine principle which stimulates its possessor to good works.

We manifest our love to God by doing His commandments, and to refuse to do this is to deny our discipleship. "He that saith he loveth me and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." This is a positive declaration and commends itself for our careful investigation. This is not only reasonable but it is natural. Whom should we love but Him who first loved us?

Our love to man is manifest in our every day walk and conduct. It is our privilege and duty to walk thro' the world with open hearts and hands, administering to the wants of the poor and needy, visiting the sick in their afflictions, ever holding in readiness, at least, the cup of cold water for the stranger, remembering that we too are strangers and pilgrims in a strange land travelling onward and upward towards the city of our God. By carrying out and manifesting to the world this divine principle of love, we fulfill the letter and spirit of religion.

Our religion then will be the sum and substance of our life labor for good. We have enlisted in a good cause and there is not a moment to be lost. "I must be about my Father's business" is as important to us as it was to our blessed Master. Every thought, or deed devoted to sin will be a spot on our title to the discipleship, and if we are not careful it may become so defaced that in the end our inheritance may be lost, and we be debarred from entering that glorious Kingdom where all is joy and peace forever more.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

ENOOURAGEMENT.

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessing in heavenly places in Christ. Ephesians 1: 3.

My dear young Brethren and Sisters: My pen has been in a dormant state for a considerable length of time, but while I was reading PILGRIM No. 2, in the "Notes of Travel," by D. P. Sayler, I saw that through labors of the Brethren, some young and precious souls were made to exclaim: "Blessed be the God and Father!" I was encouraged in my weakness to try and bring some of the spiritual blessings to our minds afresh for our encouragement and comfort, so that we may not get weary in well doing, but still press onward and upward in our high calling.

We will first call to mind the time when we made that good confession to God before many witnesses; our baptismal vow, in which we covenanted to live faithful until death. Oh! the happy time when God in his great mercy, through the merits of the atonement made by our Elder Brother on the rugged cross, canceled all our sins and insquities, and smiled upon us from the courts of glory with a reconciled countenance. Oh! the joy for pardoned sins, which caused us to rejoice in the God of our salvation, and we could for the first time exclaim in the language of the text: "Blessed be God the Father," and realize that we were "blest with all the spiritual blessings in heavenly places."

May our minds often revert to this refreshing season and be revived and encouraged with the thought that God is the same yesterday, today and forever. He who led his people through the wilderness will still be their guide unto death, Let us cleave to the Lord with full purpose of heart; let us take heed to our selves lest our profession should all be in vain. While reflecting upon the time that I enlisted into the service of my Master, I remember some who, soon after in their youthful days gave their hearts to Jesus, but, O, sorrowful thought! they have again turned back to the beggarly elements of the world. Let us watch and pray that we still realize that God will bless us with "all spiritual blessings," Let us not forsake the house of worship, the "heavenly place in Christ." Here we will receive much encouragement; our hearts will be often made to burn with love and feel that it was good to be there. We are often encouraged while thinking over the happy seasons we were permitted to enjoy with the Brethren and Sisters in Ashland Co., Ohio, where we were born into the family of God's dear children. Our communion meetings are calculated to buoy us up and make us strong in the inner man. Oh how solemn! when we reflect upon the suffering and death of our Redeemer, the great love he had for us, let us then centre our affections on Jesus while we sojourn through these low lands of sorrow to the realms of endless glory, then with all the sanctified we will join in the song: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

S. A. HONBERGER.

Dear Brethren:—As you solicit Church news for the PILGRIM, I will give you what little is on hand at this time, but the first few items are not very cheering. The Ark of God is still moving on slowly. But accessioos to the church, we made but a few during the last year, but we were obliged to make a few expulsions, in order to obey the commands of Christ. It rather seems as though the time of trial and sifting has surrounded the people of God. In the Spring Creek Church, of Dauphin Co. Pa., times and seasons of prosperity seem to be very fluctuating. In our branch, some four years ago, during one winter and summer, we baptized some eighty individuals; but since that time we must close yearly with a few—can hardly keep up the full number, if we deduct the deceased, the expelled and those who move to other quarters. May God help us, and revive that life and energy in members, preachers and the people in general, that we may have a prosperous future.

On the 20th inst., I repaired to Lancaster, where the Hymn Book Committee convened again for the purpose of completing the compiling of our pending book. There I found the beloved brethren, Thomas Gray of York county, and John Hertzler, and B. Balsbaugh, of Berks county, at the house of Bro Jacob Reinhold, where we continued our labors in company until 3 o'clock p. m. of the 22nd, at which time the two brothers from Perry county left for home, then the remainder of the work rested on myself, Grey and Reinhold, which we accomplished on the 23rd, all prepared and put in the printer's hands. John Baer's sons at Lancaster, who offered to do the printing much cheaper than any others consulted. When the bargain was made, we inquired how soon we could get a lot of the books for distribution? To which he replied: "In about three months.

Also attended preaching at Lancaster on the two evenings in succession. The first evening we happened to meet brother Isaac Myers from Ill. at meeting and because he was from a distance, we called on him to take the lead. He then addressed the congregation, taking for his subject: "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and His ears are open to their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against those that do evil."

Bro. John Hertzler followed him. The next evening at the same place, it became my lot, as the others were all absent, I took for a text: "Faithful is he that calleth you." Thes. 5: 24. Considered the first part in English and the last part in German.

WM. HARTZLER.

NEW HOPE, Augusta Co., Va.
Jan. 20th, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim:—We are glad you have commenced your visit to us again at the commencement of this year in your enlarged form, which we think is a great improvement if the brethren and sisters will give you plenty of good copy to fill up your columns. We have been silent for some time, and it is only through a kind turn of Providence that we are permitted to take up our pen once more to let your readers hear from this part of God's heritage. It has pleased our Heavenly Father to afflict us somewhat in body, but we have tried at all times, while in our afflictions, to humbly bow to His will knowing that He will do right with us, whether it is His will that we live or die. I have been confined to my room since the 10th of November, but I have so far recovered that I can now walk out a little, for which I feel to praise the Lord. Previous to that time, that is, 10th of Nov., I was confined most of the time to the house for three weeks, with a very bad felon on my finger, so I have been afflicted for some time, but do not wish to complain.

I will say to you that I received your prospectus and Almanac in due time, but was sick when I received it, and ever since, so that I have not been able to do much in the way of getting subscribers for you, but by the blessing of God, I hope to get out soon, and then I will try to do what I can for you in that way.

The church is in a prosperous condition, as far as I know. There were a good many additions by baptism through the summer and fall, which certainly is encouraging to those of our brethren whose duty it is to stand up between God and man to defend his cause.

Now dear PILGRIM a word to your readers. We all would like to have a good paper, and the only way we can expect to have it is to give the editors plenty of good copy, which they so much desire. If they have only copy enough to fill up the paper they cannot make any selection, but if those brethren and sisters who have the language and talent to write would keep them overstocked with their productions, so they could select the good and cast the bad away, then we could and would have a good paper. I would encourage the sisters to write as they sometimes touch a tender cord where the brethren fail to do it. We hope, dear PILGRIM, that you will be able to go out through the year laden with such things that will make the saints rejoice and sinners tremble. S. J. GARBER.

NORTH GEORGETOWN, OHIO.,
Jan. 15th, 1874.

Brother H. B. Brumbaugh:—We are again indebted to that benificent hand that has granted unto us life and another rich feast, as an earthly yet celestial blessing, for which we are thankful to the giver.

We, the brethren and sisters of Sandy Church, of Columbiana and Stark counties, Ohio, enjoyed the benefits of a series of meetings, and were favored in weather and the presence and labors of Bro. Jno. Nicholson of Shanesville Ohio, formerly of this Church. He came to the Heims meetinghouse near Moultrie, on the evening of Dec 20th, preached three sermons, from there to the Reading meetinghouse on the evening of the 22nd. The audience was commendable but not very large, but increased in number as well as interest as the meeting progressed. Bro. Nicholson here preached eleven discourses with the zeal of a faithful laborer in the vinyard of his Master. The church was refreshed by the genial showers of food for the inner man, reminded of her christian duties, and built up in the most holy faith, and we have reason to believe that some have cast their bread upon the ocean of God's mercy, with the intention of getting it some days hence. Meeting closed on Sunday 28th. That evening bro. N. preached at Freeburg.

We expect Jas. A. Ridenour of W. Virginia, to arrive here on the 14th of February, to labor for us in the good cause for a few days. From here, some of the brethren expect to accompany him to Bristolville, Trumbull Co. Ill.

JOHN A. CLEMENT

MANOR CHURCH, Md., Jan. 3, '74.

Dear Pilgrim:—We had an interesting series of meetings which commenced on Christmas eve and ended on the 30th. The services were held at the Manor Church each morning and evening, part of the time, and then at the Church near Downsville. Bro. Sherfy, of Getteysburg, Pa., was with us during all the meetings, and brethren Ephraim and Solomon Stoner and W. H. Franklin part of the time. We enjoyed a refreshing season during the meetings and believe many lasting impressions were made. On Wednesday morning the brethren left us carrying with them our best wishes and prayers. E—.

EXPLANATORY.

And he can not sin, because he is born of God. 1 John 3: 9.

Dear Pilgrim: I feel like writing a few lines for your readers upon the above text, as it has became a matter of inquiry. I do not see the great trouble in solving the query, when we compare scripture with scripture. And in order to give the view that I have of this expression of the apostles, I will first invite the reader to look at this scripture in connection with 1 Cor. 2: 14: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolish unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Now we will discover that the natural man is by the Scriptures said to be in a state that he can not discern the things of the Spirit. Then according to this declaration, he must forever remain in this dilemma. But we see that he may break off from his sins by doing righteousness. Now by comparing the natural man with the spiritual man, we come to the conclusion, that, in one dwells the seed of the Lord, and in the other the seed of the devil. Then as the one begins to read about Jesus and the love of God, his spiritual blindness begins to vanish, and he begins to see some beauty and grandeur that he never saw before, and he still pursues his search, and still new beauties are presented to his mental vision, and, as a consequence, the seed of the wicked one is being weakened all this time, and he thus goes on until he becomes a spiritual man, by doing what the Lord has required at his hand, and he is thus born of God and becomes a child of God.

Now as these graces are increased in the natural man, until he is a child of God, so by reversing the operation, the seed of God is uprooted by man suffering himself to be tempted and drawn away of his own lusts which war in his members. But, says one, it is said he can not sin, so it was said that the natural man can not discern the things of the spirit. Yet we can show that there is a process by which he may change. And now we will show that there is a way by which the child of God may be changed, see John, 3: 6, "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." Now how do we abide in him, (for the above quotation would imply a possibility of failure,) see John 15: 10, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." Here again we notice that it is upon condition, "If ye keep, &c." which would lead us at once to the conclusion that if we do not keep the commandments, we will fail to abide in his love, and thus we fail to be his children, for his seed does not remain in us, any longer than we abide in his love, for if we do not abide in his love, we do not abide in him.

Again see 1 Cor. 10: 12, "wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." Thus we see that Paul did not understand that they could not sin, (or go back) for again he says, "we are not of them that draw back unto perdition," &c. Peter also tells us what to do, and says if ye do these things ye shall never fall. And in conclusion I will say that this is the kind of a sin that I think is spoken of in the text, and not mere weakness.

A. HUTCHISON.

Centerview, Mo.

FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

The following we give to show what may be accomplished by earnest workers, even under the most adverse circumstances. A number of our agents are now turning their attention to those outside of our membership, and are now succeeding very well. This is a move in the right direction, as we should feel as anxious to have others read our periodicals, as we are to have them hear us preach. That the PILGRIM has been the means of doing good in promulgating the doctrine of Christ is acknowledged by all. If so, why not make a greater effort to enlarge its circulation? ED.

Bros. Brumbaugh:—I am most happy to inform you that the ever dear PILGRIM, is again paying us its welcome visits which are gladly received. I was getting very lonesome during the few weeks that it did not come. I have been at work for you wherever an opportunity was offered and have succeeded in getting you a few more subscribers. I have three names to send you now, which makes in all, eleven names, two of which are respectable members of the Methodist church. I am doing all I can to increase its circulation, and meet but very few but what would love to read it. I meet a few who say they have no time to read it. Such I suppose would not have time to read the Bible nor go to preaching.

I have volunteered in laboring for the PILGRIM because I believe by so doing I am aiding a good cause as I know it has been instrumental in turning sinners from the power of satan unto God, the Father. I was talking the other day, about taking the PILGRIM and the much good reading it contained when an old sister said, "Oh how I would love to read it if I only knew how to pay for it." When I told her how liberal you were, she said, "I must have it. I can pay for it during the year, if I live." There are a great many who, no doubt, would take the PILGRIM if they had an opportunity and knew how to get it, as there are a large number in this country as well as others, who never hear the Brethren preach, and where the PILGRIM goes and is handed from one to another, as is done in many places, it has done as much good as preaching. This I know to be a fact and therefore feel to say; Brethren and Sisters, feel interested in the PILGRIM cause and do all you can for it, both by laboring to increase the circulation and praying for its editors that they may be encouraged and strengthened in promulgating the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. May the Lord bless us all.

From your sister. N. CROUSE.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Dear Brother Editors:—Our winter to the present has been a favorable one to farmers. We think there has been a sufficiency of rain to insure another grain crop. December 3d. we had a regular "Eastern fashioned" snow storm. It reminded me very much of by-gone days in Ill., where we never missed a winter's sleigh ride, but it is of rare occurrence here. Our neighbors tell us more snow fell in this storm than has fallen in the whole of twenty-five years before altogether. It fell to the depth of 8 inches in Suisun Valley, but at present, our valley (Suisun,) is assuming a more spring-like appearance. Vegetation is springing forth rapidly, and soon hill and valley will be a continuous green. I think it now is California's most delightful season. I send enclosed $1.50 to renew subscription to PILGRIM, I dis-remember at what time the term expires, but I feel that I cannot do without the paper, isolated as I am from the main body of the Church. There are only two of us here in Suisun Valley, so we seldom hear the doctrine preached in its purity. Elders Geo. Wolfe of Lathrop, and J. Myers of Almeda, kindly favored us with the blessed opportunity this winter, preaching for us a number of times. The subjects were well selected and ably delivered. The attendance was good and the best of order prevailed. We hope to have preaching quite often, as those good ministers tell us we are not forgotten, nor shall not be neglected. We feel truly thankful that we are held in such kind remembrance. Yours truly,

CARRIE P. FOSTER.

Cordelia, Cal.

Dear Brethren: We had a series of meetings at Shiloh, commencing on the night of the 16th inst., and continued until the 24th, good order and attention to the word preached. Eleven souls were convinced of sin, and eight were baptized. There was a time of rejoicing such as was never known at this place before. Others were, we believe, seriously impressed, insomuch that we think they too will get the consent of their mind to delay no longer. The following ministers were present: W. H. & Godfrey Shaffer, Wm. and Elias Anvil, Isaac Ball, James H. Holsberry and the writer, May God carry on the good work, is my prayer.

BRO. JOHN D. BAER, of Somerset, Pa., says: "The Brethren of Quemahoning congregation had a meeting of a week, which closed on Sunday after Christmas. They had two additions to the church. The meeting was held in the meetinghouse near Sipesville. Brother Hilderbraud of the Conemaugh congregation and Bro. Jos. Berkey of Shade, were present and preached.

QUERY.—Will some brother please give an explanation on the following passages of scripture: Mark 1: 43—44.

Why did he tell leper "to tell no man"? Have we any Scripture on record that He did tell them not to keep it secret? A full explanation is desired. D. S. REPLOGLE.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

God willing, there will be a series of meetings in the Aughwick Church commencing in Germany Valley, at the Brethren's Meeting-house, on Saturday evening, February 21st, '74. All who desire to be with us are hereby cordially invited, by order of the Church. J. B. GARVER.

Brother Brumbaugh, please announce through your columns that the brethren of Cihppaway church intend holding a series of meetings commencing on the evening of the 14th of Feb. 1874, at the Beech Grove meetinghouse. A general invitation is extended to all, and especially to ministering brethren. By order of the church. D. M. IRVIN.

Smithville, Ohio.

MINUTES.

The District Meeting of 1873, in Southern Ill., authorized me to have the Minutes of said meeting printed, and send copies to all Churches in Southern Ill. This I have done, but have just received a letter stating that all have not been supplied. I still have a few copies on hand, and if any other Church has failed to get copies, they will please inform me immediately. Please inclose a stamp, and address J. H. MOORE, Urbana, Champaign Co. Ill.

DIED.

DILLING.—Jan. 27, 1873, in the bounds of the Clover Creek Congregation, sister Barbara Dilling, aged 73 yrs., 6 mos. and 23 days. Funeral services improved by Eld. D M. Holsinger and the writer from Isaiah 35: 10.

BAKER.—May 23, '72, John Irvin son of Bro. Jacob and sister Elizabeth Baker, aged 1 year, 5 mos. 27 days. Funeral improved by G. W. Brumbaugh and Jac. L. Wineland, from Amos 4: 12.

LEIDY.—Jan. 10, '74, Lizzie Alice daughter of Daniel and Catharine Leidy, aged 10 years and 16 days. Funeral services improved by the writer from Rev. 20: 12.

T. B. MADDOCKS.

ACKER.—Jan 9, '74, Henry Acker, aged 66 years, 2 mos. 21 days. Funeral improved by Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh in the English and G. W. Brumbaugh in the German, from Heb. 9: 27.

DRAKE.—In Shirleysburg, Huntingdon Co., Pa., Nov. 8, 1873, Margaretta, widow of Philip Drake, dec'd, aged 83 years, 9 mos. and 8 days. Occasion improved by the brethren, from Heb. 9: 27.

BYERS.—In the Aughwick District, Nov. 29, 1873, Elizabeth Byers, wife of Solomon Byers, aged 74 years, 4, mos. and 29 days. Occasion improved by the brethren, A. L. FUNCE.

MILLER.—Near Roaring Springs, Jan. 5, 1874, H. B. son of J. H. and Martha Miller, aged 7 mos. and 10 days.

DEIHL.—Nov. 28, '73, of diptheria, Geo. W. son of Bro. Daniel and sister — Deihl, aged 4 years, 4 mos. and 18 days. Funeral improved by Eld. Jacob Miller and J. W. Brumbaugh, from James 4: 13, 17.

The happy home of Bro. Deihl, was made sad by the afflicting hand taking hold of all the children and though medical aid was resorted to, yet little George, the youngest, the darling of the family, was called to sleep in Jesus. Father and mother, brothers and sisters, will you meet me in heaven?

MARTZ.—In the Manor Church, Md., on the 18th inst., our aged sirter Catharine Martz, aged 87 years, 7 mos. and 7 days. Funeral services by Elds. A. Cost and L. Emmert, from 1 Peter 1: 23-25.

Sister Martz united herself with the church in early life, lived a consistent member 54 years, leaves a number of children to mourn their loss, her husband, a brother, having died 11 years ago. Her father Christian Harshman, was a minister among the Brethren in Frederick county, Md. Many years ago her grandfather immigrated from France, and died at the advanced age of 120 years. JACOB REICHARD.

OBONNOR.—In Springfield, O., of cholera, July 29. 1873, sister Evaline Obonnor, aged 56 years.

She was taken sick in the morning about 6 o'clock, and died about 7 o'clock in the evening. She suffered no pain, and was perfectly conscious all day. I never saw any one so resigned in my life, she did not want to get well. She said when first taken my time is up, I am going to die. As Brethren did not come, the services were performed by Rev. Mr. Ketchum, of Centre St. Methodist Church.

S. M. PRETZMAN.

NEY.—In the Panther Creek Church, Dallas Co., Iowa, Dec. 7th, 1873, sister Saria, wife of Henry Ney, aged 45 years, 8 months and 9 days.

In her affliction, she suffered greatly, but she bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. In her affliction, she called for the Elders of the Church to anoint her. Accordingly she was anointed in the name of the Lord, to the strengthening of her faith. She then resigned herself into the hands of the Lord. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends, and the occasion improved by Eld. D. Long and others, from Psalm 23: 4.

GEO. DETRICK.

PLOUGH.—In the Upper Cumberland District, near Newville, Jan. 23d, 1874, Samuel S. Plough, aged 31 years, 9 mos. and 17 days.

The subject of this notice was only sick about six days, during which time, he suffered very great pain, without hardly any intermission until he breathed his last, He was a very fine young man and a seeker of salvation for years, and of late concluded to unite with the brethren, and intended to be baptized next summer, but O, how sadly disappointed death came to him, before the summer season. Nevertheless he held fast to his Savior, whom he professed to have found to his souls comfort, consolation and salvation, yet he expressed himself that if the good Lord would spare him to get well, he would attend to being baptized, as soon as able. But as he found that his part was, to make the great and solemn change, he quietly and willingly submitted to the will of the Lord. He leaves a sorrowing widow, and one small son, a father and mother, one brother and four sisters, to mourn their loss, but they do not sorrow as those who have no hope. Services by the brethren from Luke 12: 40, "Be ye therefore ready also," &c. DAN'L KELLER, Sn.

Companion please copy.

FILBURN.—In the upper Miami Co., Dec. 12, 1873, brother Peter Filburn, aged 76 years, and 3 months. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Peter Nead and Abram Flory, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large concourse of people.

Brother Filburn was born in Neckerhaus, Kingdom of Wertemburg, Germanie confederation, Sept. 1799. Came to the United States of America in the year 1818.

In 1822 he was married to Elizabeth Harshbarger, and in 1829 emigrated to Montgomery county, O, from Maryland. In 1853 he moved to Miami county. (where he lived to the time of his decease,) where his wife died in 1856, and in 1857 he was married again to Dabora Overholtzur, who survives him.

Brother Filburn was one of our plain old members. He was a member of the Brethren for upwards of 50 years, and his seat was seldom vacant in the sanctuary, and in conversing with him, his conversation was principally from the scriptures, and of Heavenly things, instead of worldly matters.

The Bible was the only book that he read, and he almost knew it by heart. By his death the church has lost a faithful member, the community a good neighbor, and the needy a charitable hand.

Some time before his decease he told the writer to see that his burial was conducted in the old order, to have a plain coffin, and to be hauled to the grave in a wagon instead of a hearse, and was buried in the cemetery at Spring Grove. Peace to his ashes.

H. H. ARNOLD.

FRANTZ.—Near Millersburg, Elkhart Co., Ind., Oct. 12, 1873, in Rockrun District, brother Peter Frantz, aged 70 years, 5 mos. and 2 days. He was a consistent member of the Brethren Church for many years, He leaves a wife and many children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Elders Daniel Shively, Jacob Berky, Levi Weaver and others, from James 1: 10, 11. ANNA FRANTZ.

THE BRIGHT SIDE.

Now and then a shining pebble,
As we walk the wave-washed strand,
Smiles upon our passing footsteps,
From its lowly bed of sand.
Now and then a virgin rose-bud,
Breathes upon us by the way;
And its sweet delicious fragrance,
On the breeze doth round us stray.

And in winter's desolation,
While the naked boughs are seen,
There amid its bleak surroundings,
Smiles the pine-top evergreen.
Though the road be rough and weary,
Till we reach the mountain height,
Then are we repaid our climbing,
By the prospect grand and bright,

God hath placed these things to please us,
All along our path each day;
Emblems faint that just before us,
There are better things than they.
These are green spots as we travel,
Oases on "weary" ground,
Left there by our loving Father,
By the pilgrim to be found.

Happy he who sees the beauty,
Leaves the bitter, tastes the sweet,
And enjoys each pleasing object
He may on his pathway meet.
Thus will gloom be quickly scattered,
And the sun will brightly shine,
All of sadness he defeated,
And a happy life be thine.

KEEP GOOD COMPANY.

Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of evil men Prov. 4: 14. Walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path.

There are many things in the Bible that are important to the young, but nothing, perhaps, more so than to strictly obey the above good advice or commandment.

There are many persons who keep bad company but think there is no harm in it, because they do not participate in any of their bad habits. This is a wrong idea as it is not natural for sheep to go into the company of wolves without endangering their lives.

In the path of the wicked there is no good, and as certain as you go into it, so certain you receive injuries either your person or character. The wicked will either devour you or make you as bad as they are themselves.

I have heard boys who have been learning in this path, say, "I am no fighting character but I will not be imposed upon." That boys character was already tainted with the spirit of the company which he kept, and by remaining a little while longer under their instruction, will find himself in a position that will impose upon him, and according to his own resolution, he will be to fight it out.

I once was asked by a young man whose brother had been in a fight, after stating the particulars, how I would have escaped fighting, if I had been imposed upon as was his brother. I told him that fights had their causes and the best way to avoid them, is to remain away from the places where the troubles commence. Some young men and boys are imposed upon and in trouble all the time, but it is their own fault, as they are continually running in the path of the wicked, where such things are always at hand. Such was the case with this young man. On Sunday, instead of going to Church or reading good books he went off to some neighboring boys who were in the habit of lying, swearing and fighting, and as a result, he got into trouble, when if he had remained away from them, he would not have been imposed upon, nor would there have been any call for a fight. Therefore, if I were to give advice, I would do it before the trouble commences.

Another important advantage of keeping good company is the education we receive. In good company, we come in contact with good and proper conversation whereby, we learn to converse properly, and about things that are right and honorable, but in the path of the wicked, we learn things that are unbecoming and unfits us for decent society.

Remember, dear young reader, the time will soon come that we all must make our mark and it depends largely upon the company we keep, whether it shall be honorable or dishonorable, whether we will be somebody or nobody. And after that, the more important time will come, when we shall be called to eternity. If we are found in the path of the wicked with the wicked we will be to take our part in eternity. Therefore, walk not thou in the way with them, but refrain thy foot from their path because, in the end, it leads to destruction.

THE SERPENT OF BRASS.

When the children of Israel were journeying through the wilderness, on their way to the land of Canaan, they often disobeyed God.

At one time they complained against God, although he took care of them every day, and gave them what they needed to eat and drink. He then, to punish them, sent among them fiery serpents, which were so poisonous that all who were bitten by them soon died. The people then seemed sorry for their sin; and Moses, who was their leader, prayed that God would have mercy on them.

God heard them in their distress, and told Moses to make a serpent of brass, and put it on a pole, that all that looked at it might be cured. How eagerly the people who had been bitten looked up to the brazen serpent!

I suppose some of the people tho't it was such a simple thing to do, it couldn't possibly do them any good; and so a great many lost their lives, because they wouldn't look up when God told them to.

God's commands are never too simple to be obeyed, and those who obey him cheerfully are always the happiest.

He calls on all little children to pray to him, and ask him to forgive them when they have done wrong. And he is always ready to do so, if he sees they are really sorry in their hearts.

CONSEQUENCES.

In a country town, many years ago, some children were met for a social evening at an old farm house and while the sport was at its height, a little boy thought it would be funny to draw a chair out from under a little girl, and let her sit down on the floor.

He watched his opportunity, and made the attempt; but the little girl seeing what he was doing, jumped back into the chair, and striking her spine upon one of its projections, broke her back. For seven years, from fourteen to twenty-one, she lay upon her bed, and during all that time was carried from her chamber to the parlor but once.

Thirty years have passed; I have just returned from a visit to her sick chamber. Thirty years of disability and pain as the consequence of a thoughtless deed by a little boy. A few strangers minister to her daily wants, without whose said she would be sent to the poor-house, or home for the wretched and homeless poor.

Terrible consequences to follow a thoughtless act. Let boys be careful. Let all remember that consequences walk hand in hand with every deed, and that for all our deeds, God will bring us into judgment." Christian Era.

DON'T BE COWARDS.

"I wont tell a lie! I wont be a coward," said a fine little fellow, when he had broken a little statue of his father's in showing it to his playmates, and they were telling him how he could deceive his father and escape a scolding. He was right. Cowards tell lies; brave little boys tell the truth. So was Charlie Mann right, and was rewarded for it, as the following story will show:

A young offender whose name was Charlie Mann, smashed a large pane of glass in a drug-store and ran away at first, for he was slightly frightened; but he quickly began to think, "What am I running for? It was an accident; why not turn about and tell the truth?

No sooner thought than done. Charley was a brave boy, he told the truth—how the ball with which he was playing slipped out of his hand, how frightened he was, how sorry too, at the mischief done, and how willing to pay if he had the money.

Charley did not have the money, but he could work, and to work he went at once, in the very store where he broke the glass. It took him a long time to pay for the large and expensive pane he had shattered; but when done, he had endeared himself so much to the store-keeper by his fidelity and truthfulness, that he could not hear of his going away, and Charley became his clerk. "Ah, what a lucky day it was when I broke that window," he used to say.

"No, Charley," his mother would respond, "what a lucky day it was when you was not afraid to tell the truth."—Youth's Companion.

A CHILD'S IDEA OF PRAYER.

Little Nellie, who was only four years old, no sooner saw work laid aside than she ran to her mother's knee and claimed a seat there. Mrs. Lee lifted her to her lap, and went on busily thinking of her duties and cares while she rocked herself and Nellie to and fro.

For a while, Nellie amused herself very quietly by winding a string in and out through her fingers; but presently she began talking to herself in a low tone: "When I say my prayers, God says, 'Hark, angels, while I hear a little noise!'"

Her mother asked her what noise was that.

"A little girl's noise. Then the angels will do just so" (shutting her mouth very tight, and keeping very still for a moment) "till I say Amen."

I wonder if the children who read this story of little Nellie have ever thought how wonderful it is that God always hears their prayers.

PUBLISHER'S ITEMS.

—Joel H. Flora. Your letter containing $1.50 was not received. All right now.

—Eld. Jacob Wagoner's address is changed from Cerro Gordo to La-Place, Piatt Co., Ill.

—Nothwithstanding our frequent changes from cold to warm—our physicians think it distressingly healthy.

—The WEEKLY PILGRIM is acknowledged to be strictly orthodox, and is read by all classes with pleasure and profit.

—M. Johnson. In regard to the subscription you speak of, we cannot now tell without considerable trouble. Please ask Bro. Sears about it, he will know.

—The citizens of Huntingdon need a good general newspaper, and just as soon as they say "go" we are ready to supply the want. What shall we call it?

—If you want to read a paper free from worldlyism and politics and filled with good religious instruction, subscribe for the WEEKLY PILGRIM. Only $1.50 per year.

—The PILGRIM office is situated on 14th and Washington. Those wishing to give us calls will come in at the side entrance, pass up stairs and enter the first door to the left.

—Huntingdon within the last few years, has been making rapid strides toward city dimensions, and from present appearances, the coming Spring and Summer will add greatly to our thrift and population.

—Our friends in town who desire to encourage the only religious periodical in their midst, will please prepare themselves for the carrier's second call. With book and pencil, he will be around to wait upon you. Give him your name and number and we will labor to make our weekly visits both interesting and instructive.

—Our respected friend and townsman, Mr. S. S. Place, who has been supplying those who desired it, with Prof. Fowler's recent great work—"The Science of Life," and putting up an excellent door-bell, will continue to accommodate our citizens with these articles, as well as supply that best of books "The Bible." He will also distribute to every family a copy of this issue of the PILGRIM, and afterwards call and receive the subscription of those who desire its weekly visits.

—The upper end of our town needs a general variety and provision store and we have a good room ready for it. Who will embark in the enterprise? Our room is on the corner of 14th and Washington. The room is 18x43, high ceiling, well lighted, and a good basement underneath, terms easy and possession given on the first of April. Our citizens need and must have a good store, and a better location and room cannot be found in this end of town. Any person wishing to enter an enterprise of this kind, will do well by examining our room and learning our terms.

LITERATURE.

EXPRESSION: Its Anatomy and Philosophy. By Sir Charles Bell, K. H., with the Original Notes and Illustrations designed by the Author; and with additional illustrations by the editor of the "Phrenological Journal." (S. R. Wells, New York.) 12mo. cloth, $1.50. For sale at the PILGRIM Office.

This is an enlarged and entirely new edition of a work of great scientific and physiological interest. It is comprised of ten essays, so arranged as to give a complete history of the subject; a subject of very great interest to all who are in any way brought into contact with the world around them; and of special interest to physicians and others who are so often brought in contact with persons while under the effect of the Emotions, where the expression often reveals what no language could convey. The book, if well studied and understood will teach principles which can be made available in the selection of apprentices, farm hands, kitchen girls, servants, &c., or the choosing of friends, or companions, and thus be of immense value. It is not entirely without a spiritual or religious tone, even contrasting the vicious with the good, in such a way as to leave the weight of the impression in favor of the good, pure and beautiful. The engravings illustrate the text, and in themselves give a remarkably pure history of the subject. We have in the work the "whole range of human character and expression, from the divine loveliness and purity of the Infant Savior, of angels and saints to the strength, fierceness, and brutality of the executioner." We have an objection to urge against the book which we will call a presumptuous fault, though written for English readers, it contains many quotations and notes from the Latin, French, &c., which are always a vexation to those who do not understand these languages. Though they might be omitted in most instances, without impairing the sense, yet we always feel that if the thoughts therein contained were worth quoting, they should be quoted in the same language in which the book is written. These quotations may properly display the knowledge of the writer, but they do not so impress the general reader.

THE NOTE TAKER or Elements of Tachygraphy, Part II. A Treatise on the second style of Lindsley's brief Writing, for the use of Lawyers, Editors, Reporters, Students, and all persons desirous of taking full notes in courts of record, professional schools and seminaries, and public assemblies. By David Philip Lindsley, Boston: Ohio Chapp & Son, 3 Beacon street, Chicago. D. Khuball, P. O., Box 308.

We have just received a copy of the above work and to say the least, we are highly pleased with it. The man who succeeds in simplifying Short Hand is a great benefactor to the country, as there is scarcely any one thing in the whole scope of education that is so desirable in this fast age as to be able to take a verbatum speech. In this Mr. Lindsley has succeeded in a very great measure, so much so that any person of ordinary ability can take to the study with the assurance of success, by giving it the attention the subject demands. The system is simple and natural and can be acquired as readily as long hand, if the same care, and time is devoted to it. Any of our readers wishing to learn this desirable art, should examine Mr. Lindsley's works, as we feel assured they will give satisfaction.

——James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, are the publishers of some of the handsomest, and most desirable books in the country. Their companion volumes, "Child Life in Poetry" and "Child Life in Prose," both edited by John G. Whittier, are charming books for children, and fine specimens of book-making. Their books are always handsomely executed, and very popular.

——The first volume in the "International Scientific Series," by an American author is "The New Chemistry," by Prof. Cooke of Harvard, now nearly ready by the Appleton's, New York.

——In the Magazine notices last week, the sense, and force of the article was destroyed by the omission of "not"—"it would be a difficult task to decide which one to take," should read,— which one not to take; and we take this opportunity to say that every family should, after our church papers, take one, or more periodicals.

——The Cottage Hearth, is a monthly periodical of 28 pages; published by Millikin & Gould, Boston, Mass., at $1.25 per year, the first number of which is on our table. It is to be devoted to Home Arts and Aids, Home Life and Leisure. We will be glad to form its acquaintance.

——The Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiognomy for 1874, begins a new series in a new form. It is a valuable manual, and contains a surprising amount of useful information, which seems to have been gathered specially for its pages. Price 25 cents. (S. R. Wells New York.)

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation: but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year, A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

"ANXIOUS BENCH RELIGION EXAMINIED," BY ELDER J. S. FLORY. A SYNOPSIS OF CONTEETS. An address to the reader: The peculiarities that attend this type of religion. The feelings there experienced not imaginary but real. The key that unlocks the wonderful mystery. The causes by which feelings are excited. How the momentary feelings called "Experimental religion" are brought about, and then concludes by giving that form of doctrine as taught by Jesus Christ and recorded by his faithful witnesses.

The Second Edition is now ready for delivery. The work has been carefully revised, corrected and enlarged.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, post-paid, from this office on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00; 25 copies, $4.50; 50 copies, $8.50; 100 copies, $16.00.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.50 Four copies, $3.25. Sent post-paid. Address

FRUITION.

BY WESLEY.

Busy fancy fondly gazing,
Down the varied vale of time,
On a mighty scene is seizing,
To the Christian most sublime.

When the conflicts heavy rattle,
On the balmy air shall die;
And the gloom and fear of battle,
Be dispelled from every sky.

When the enemy's dark forces,
Shall be vanquished and dismayed;
And destruction's dismal sources,
Be o'erhurdened with the dead.

When the fainting arm of mortal,
Fails to crush the crafty foe;
See, from Heavens potent portal,
Jesus forth, the final blow.

Then the direful conflict over,
They who virtue's path have trod;
Lasting peace shall quick discover,
'Mid the ransomed host of God.

Then with VICTORY on each banner,
Shall the multitude convene;
In the golden tinted glimmer
Of the glory now unseen.

Oh! methinks I see them gather,
Where the wavelets kiss the sand;
Priceless jewels of the Father,
Loving creatures of His hand.

Whil'st the anthem loudly sweiling
O'er the ever verdant plains,
Each Celestial valley filling.
Wakes the angels loud refrain.

Now commingling in mid-ether,
Lo! the golden pillars quake,
As the holy strains together,
O'er triumphant Zion break.

PURITY OF THOUGHT.

Where do our thoughts originate? Some, taking the expression from the Bible and elsewhere literally, would answer, in the heart. Among the many mysterious and wonderful parts of the human mechanism, the heart has perhaps been the most noted, and by no means the best understood. The ancients knew that it is the most vital and sensitive part of the body, but their accurate knowledge does not seem to have extended much farther, as they fell into the error of supposing the heart to be, not only the seat of life, but also the abode of the soul and the source of all the nobler emotions, such as courage, mercy, generosity and love. This idea engrafted many words and expressions upon their language, and these in turn have been used by all succeeding writers, even the most enlightened. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," as well as the more modern version, "If the heart is right, all is right,"—both bear the testimony in this connection; as do the terms "tender-hearted," "pure-hearted," "heart-felt" to learn by heart," "large-hearted," and hundreds of other phrases in every-day use.

But when the intelligent use these phrases they do not wish to be understood literally, as it is universally admitted that the thoughts originate in the mind which has its seat, not in the heart but in the brain. It is the mind that thinks, that feels and that wills.

We can not think without thinking about something and this something is the object of thought. It may be real or ideal, an object of perception or a product of the imagination; it may also be pure or impure, according to the way in which we think about it. To the pure, all things are pure. Nothing that God has created should awaken in our minds unholy thoughts; but a base mind sees a taint in everything every object of perception has some blemish, and every picture of the imagination is defaced by some spot or wrinkle. It is not thus with the "pure in heart." Like Peter on the house top, they may sometimes see things that have a tendency to awaken improper thoughts, but, like Peter, they soon learn that whatGod has cleansed no one has a right to call common or unclean. The good man can not prevent the birds from flying across his orchard, but he can prevent them from building their nests in his choice apple tree. So he may not be able at all times to keep dark thoughts from crossing his mind, but he can avoid harboring those thoughts until sin is conceived and the soul's integrity lost. When the tempter comes he can say, "thus it is written, get thee behind me Satan." In my own short christian experience I have found no better method than this for getting rid of evil thoughts. The Word is our sharpest sword. We need none sharper if we know how to use it, and use it properly. It is the only weapon that Christ used in that great encounter in which all the hosts of Satan were defeated. I have found that by letting the mind dwell prayerfully on some text, it is an easy matter to get rid of thoughts that I had vainly tried to shake off by mere force of will or purpose. The mind must have its chambers occupied by tenants, and every vacant room will be filled with imps no matter how much we strive in our own strength to keep it empty, "swept and garnished."

The importance of entertaining only good, pure thoughts, can not be over estimated. Thought is the main-spring of action. All the wrong doing that has ever disgraced our earth has been the fruit of wrong thinking. On the other hand, "a right will is right action, and though such a will by the movement of a spirit emprisoned in a body all paralyzed and moveless, it is stronger than the universe." God judges actions by the motives that prompted them. In His sight good actions will not make up for evil intentions. A pure, noble mind is the only fountain-head of a truly noble life. The mind's eye it is that causes the whole body to be full of light or full of darkness, according as it is single or the reverse. The soul's purity underlies all purity. It, made pure, all else becomes so; it is the "inside of the cup or platter" spoken of by the Savior. If it is made pure by the removal and exclusion of bad tho'ts and desires, the outside, or our words and actions will also become pure. As the tree is so must the fruit be.

Hence purity of thought is essential to our happiness both here and hereafter. For when good thoughts are absent, bad ones are sure to be present,—present to rob us of an approving conscience, which is the prerequisite of all genuine happiness. Without this we can not enter that golden city, above whose arch-way is inscribed, "Nothing impure can enter here." Dissembled holiness is double iniquity. Without sanctified thought melody is mockery, prayer is blasphemy and worship worse than lip-service. The empty lamp, the close shut door, the dread "too late"—all should teach the value of honest convictions, purity of thought, and the dangerous folly of making religion a cloak, Christianity a mere name, and by this course becoming a foolish virgin in the end. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY.

Paul says, Christ sent me to preach the Gospel. not with wisdom of words &c. What a train of thought, must have rose from the disciples at Corinth, at the time Paul spoke these words, from the fact that there were divisions and contentions among them, for he says, "that every one of you say, I am of Paul, I of Apollo, I of Cephas, and of Christ.," He then goes on and tells them that Christ is not divided, &c., and we certainly think that his followers should not be bigoted. But we will see whether the words are not applicable now-a-days. Do we not hear brethren say, after a sermon by a certain Bro., that's my man, he preaches up the old land marks, or, if you please, the brethren's "uniform." After a while another Bro. comes and preaches; after the meeting is over, it is nothing strange to hear brethren say, that's my man, he knows how to handle those close fisted money brethren.

Does not this look as though we were standing in the same channel, as those Corinthian bretnren did, of which Paul makes mention as being contentious, and reproves them sharply. Now, we think, it is not wise nor prudent for any brother or sister to make use of such slang phrases; as they are detrimental to both speaker and hearers. Our words should be well seasoned. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

FOR THE PILGRIM.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

To be successful in what is undertaken is the desire of all men. Underlying success are a few principles that but few have really ever thought much of.

1. As a rule, a man will not succeed in more than one thing at a time. If two be undertaken, one must be neglected or there is no success. Man's adaptation is such that he really ought not to have more than one occupation, and then study well to succeed in that, letting other people's business alone.

2. A man in order to succeed must be contented with his employment, and not be continually desiring a change.

3. He must be industrious, laboring to be useful in his business or he is sure to fail.

Those facts underly all success, in all cases, and especially in that of a minister. If he concentrates all his powers to make of himself a useful minister, and succeeds, he is most sure to fail in some other pursuits of life, and for this simple reason a majority of the ablest ministers in the world die in poverty. If to the contrary, a minister succeeds in the other general pursuits of life, he is most sure to fail as a minister; we cannot generally succeed in two things at the same time, the one must yield to the other.

J. H. MOORE.

THE world needs men of large hearts; men who think and feel for others; men who, for the sake of others, can make some sacrifices. The whole church needs a new baptism—the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Nothing else, it seems to me, will ever get us away from ourselves, that is, our own personal interests. There are congregations not a few that are so circumscribed by their own selfish notions, that they hardly ever do anything except that which immediately concerns their own personal interest. The world may go to ruin for all they care, only so they have things comfortable themselves.

COMING TO JESUS.

And the spirit and the bride say Come, And let him that heareth, say Come. And let him that is athirst, Come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.—Rev. 22: 17.

This language is expressive of the faithfulness and will of God that all men should be saved. St. Paul says, "God is faithful by whom ye are called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And Jesus the Son invites all the weary and heavy laden to come to Him and He will give them rest. To this rest, the Spirit and the Bride say COME.

Jesus says, "I will send Him, (the Spirit) unto you, and when He is come, He will reprove (convince) the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." The Spirit in His own way and manner will convince the mind of men that certain things, whether by thought, word or deed, are sinful, and that some things, whether by thought, word or deed are right. And man being a moral, or free agent can choose to do either the sinful, or the right thing, and doing the sinful, he is convinced of a judgment to come. To him the Spirit says, Come to Jesus.

The Spirit and the Bride. The Spirit working in and with the Church, which is the body of Christ, and is the ground and pillar of the truth, with her ministry preaching the Gospel, says, Come. Every true Gospel sermon preached, and prayer offered by the Church's ministry, says to the unregenerate, COME. The method of the common salvation is to preach the Gospel. For "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe," and "whosever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." But "How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things." So in spreading the Gospel, the Bride says, Come.

And let him that heareth say, Come. It is as natural for a new born babe in Christ to desire the salvation of all men, as it is for a natural born babe to breathe the breath of life; and hence all who have heard the word of salvation unto obedience, say, Come. The first desire of the parent after conversion is, that their children may be converted. Their prayers, their sighs, their tears go after them, and all combine in saying, Come. And even so with converted children of unconverted parents; their first and last concern is, that they ne converted to the true faith and be saved, and to this end they groan, they sigh, they pray, they weep, and unite with the Spirit and the Bride in saying Come. And though their first sympathies are drawn towards parents and children, an unregenerate world is not forgotten by them, but their longing souls are poured out in prayer to God that all may, and will, Come.

(In parenthesis, let me ask, is it wrong or sinful in Christians that their first sympathies should be drawn out toward those who are nearly allied to them by the ties of nature? I believe it is not. It was so with Abraham, of whom it was said that he was the friend of God, and the father of the faithful. When God determined the destruction of Sodom, Abraham's concern went out after his nephew Lot who lived in it. And the Savior bid the weeping daughters of Jerusalem to weep for themselves and for their children. And so Christian parents weep.)

And let him that is athirst, Come. An invitation to the thirsty souls to come to the waters, has long ago been given by Jehovah's prophet. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Ho, every one, all that are thirsty after righteousness may come, and be welcome. Not the Jews only, but the Gentiles also may come. Not the high, the rich and the learned only may come, but but the poor and the maimed, the halt and the blind may come; from the highways, the lanes, and from the hedges they may come. ALL, all who thirst, the only qualification required, may come and be welcome to Gospel grace.

And whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely. WHOSOEVER WILL. After all the Spirit and the Bride, with all who hear can do, none but they who THIRST, and WILL, can, or will be saved. Natural thirst is a painful sensation of the throat occasioned by the want of drink, a vehemont desire for drink. This sensation, or vehement desire for drink is used in the Scriptures as expressive of the painful sensation the soul of man experiences when awakened to a troe sense of its lost condition, and of the ardent and vehement desire to obtain that which will satisfy this want, as water satisfies the natural thirst. The soul thus awakened, thus thirsty, will come to Jesus and be filled.

The will is that faculty of the soul by which we dotermine and decide in the mind that something shall be done, or shall not be done, which implies power to carry the decision into effect. Great disputes have existed respecting the freedom of the will. But as the worldly wise, the worldly educated, and they that will be wise above that which is written, are the disputants, the humble soul seeking after truth need not fear. The Savior says, the reason why the people of Jerusalem were not gathered even as a hen gathers her brood under her wings, was because they would not. And here it is, they that will let them come.

Dear reader, the freedom of your will you can prove by your daily intercourse with the world and its associations. You can will to go to town, and you can will not to go. You can will to plow, or will not to plow. You can will to attend the wedding you are bidden to, and you can will not to attend it; and so on through all your social relations of life. This you know to be true. Even as you can will to go to Church and sit and hear the sermon through, or you can will to rise to your feet and walk out of the house and leave the preacher in the middle of the sermon. This you know to be true. With these simple and plain truths before you it must be self evident to you that you can will to lay hold of the truth and be saved.

Let me entreat you that you will come and take the water of life freely. Taking the water of life, is to take, or receive the doctrine of Christ by faith in the love and spirit of it. It is coming to Jesus through faith in the Gospel, by repentance, prayer and baptism. By these you can come to Jesus in His Church, and in it you come to Him in His ordinances; washing the saint's feet, eating with them the Lord's Supper, and the Communion of bread and wine; and the holy kiss of charity, If you know these these things, happy will you be if you do them. And by giving diligence to all things commanded by the Lord, you will "add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness, brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, charity. And if these be in you and abound, they make you that you shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." All you can have if you but WILL COME. D. P. SAYLER.

[For the PILGRIM.]

INSTRUCTIONS TO MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL.

1. When you rise to preach do not spend time making apologies. You were elected to your office to preach the Gospel and not to make excuses. Think of Moses, how he was rebuked for making excuses. If you are yet young in the ministry, and unlearned, say nothing about it, just preach the best you know how, and that is all God requires of you in the case.

2. Above all things quit when you are done with your subject. Many men speak two hours when they ought to have quit at the end of fifteen minutes, for the simple reason that they were then through with the subject in hand. I was called to the ministry when quite young, and in order to perform the duties resting upon me at that time I was compelled to study very hard, as I had attended school but little during my life and consequently had a very limited education. After I had served in the ministry about six months, I was called to visit a sister in another part of the state, of course I must preach every night. I usually selected my lesson early in the morning, and then spent the entire day studying it, so when evening came I generally had a pretty good knowledge of it, so that I was able to hold a congregation pretty well for about half an hour. The brethren told me that I did not preach long enough. I told them that I always made it my rule that when I got through with a subject to quit. I am not advocating short sermons, but I do maintain that a preacher should close when he gets through with the subject in hand. This a very important rule, and one with which the people do not generally find fault.

3. Never try to touch a thing that you do not understand. Ministers should study their lessons well. Their work is an important one, and a mistake with them may be a greater one with some sincere hearer. Never preach a thing that you would be ashamed to see in print, as the angels are recording your sermons in heaven, and they must be subjected to the inspection of the judge of all the earth. When young ministers commence preaching, they should first learn to speak slow and distinct, and be sure that every word uttered is full of truth. Fine figures of speech, oratorical flowers and dazzling rhetoric should be avoided, at the beginning they will naturally fall to to their place in the proper time.

4. Ministers ought to be men of reasonable education, however this is not absolutely necessary. The apostles were not all finely educated though they were generally well informed. A minister should understand the language in which he speaks. Words always mean something, and that something should be well understood by ministers. They do not need to attend school in order to obtain this knowledge, but can make rapid progress by carefully reading good books. The best idiom for teachers is Bible language; this is grammar good enough for anybody.

5. Correct pronunciation is important to every minister, it cannot be over estimated. All words should be pronounced correctly, and for this reason a dictionary becomes really necessary. Bible names are frequently difficult to pronounce. I have seen men become so extremely excited, as the saying is, that they could not get the words out fast enough, now this is all unnecessary. When you talk or preach as though you wanted the people to understand every word you said, do give the people a little time to think as you go along.

6. Above all things, do avoid a sing-song tone. The house of God is a house of order, and I do maintain that a preacher has no business singing while he is preaching. He has been elected to preaching the gospel, and not to sing it. Singing is all right in its place, but a sermon is not a song to be sung. Ministers of the same congregation should watch each other and not allow even one of the number to run into this bad habit. I have yet the first person to find, who admires this sing-song preaching.

7. Ministers should avoid the use of all such words as and-um-er, a long word not to be found even in the Bible nor any dictionary I ever saw. a word without any meaning at all When you mean and singly, say it,. and do leave the um-er off. The apostles had no such an ending in their sermons, they spoke the word plainly and distinctly.

8. Some people when preaching, have a great trouble with their hands. They must pile up the books—tear them down again, roll their handkerchief all up into a knot, and many other things too numerous to mention. If a minister don't know what to do with his hands while preaching, just let them alone, they will take care of themselves. I once heard of a preacher who was in the habit of piling up books, &c., while he was preaching; so a German brother who was sitting near him reached over and gathered the books that the preacher was playing with and shoved them all over to the other end of the table and then remarked to the brother, 'now then preach.' I asked the German brother why he did this in time of worship? He simply remarked that had he told him of it after meeting, he would have forgotten it, but now he will never forget it so long as he lives. The best school in the universe to learn the proper use of the hands while speaking, is to watch little children telling their mother some interesting story. Take a few lessons and improve by them.

MEETING AND PARTING.

What words in the English vocabulary are calculated to convey to the mind more solemn impressions than these? Oh what joy pervades the soul at meeting of friends who for years have been parted! That brother and sister who have been rocked in the same cradle, who have been dandled upon the same knee, and heard the same kind words from a fond mother, who have by sad misfortune been torn early in life from each others fond embrace, to live amid strangers and in different climes, when they meet again what a joyful meeting! The recollections of the past make such a meeting pleasant indeed. But the bitter usually follows the sweet. When the Revelator, John, in his transporting vision, saw a mighty angel with a little book open, he desired to have the book, and he was commanded to take it and eat it up. He did so. The first sense of feeling produced was a sweet taste in his mouth. But the second was a sensation of bitterness in his belly. Thus it is in meeting and parting, the sweet and the bitter. The fact has been realized very recently by the writer. A lovely sister I had not seen for years, I had the pleasure to meet very unexpectedly, and words cannot express the joy of this meeting. But, Alas! Two short weeks passes and the parting came, which to me was sad indeed. Thus in life we have the sweet and the bitter, we meet—we part. These words in life are solemn indeed. But they are doubly solemn and impressive when connected with eternity. To the sinner, a sad thought indeed. But to the saint a glad thought.

Oh happy day when saints shall meet,
To part no more the thought so sweet.

What cheering words! Brethren and sisters to us the thought of meeting above is sweet. "Lift up your heads for the time of your redemtion draweth nigh." Brother—sister, are you prepared for this great event? When you shall meet with saints to part no more. Have you a father, a mother, a brother, a sister or a friend who is in darkness even until now? And if so are you using your influence, both by word and action to win them over to Christ? Then, no doubt your labor will not be in vain. But if you are unconcerned about them they may be lost! Alas! alas! the thought of parting with them to meet no more! Here I am constrained to use the words of the poet:

"Parents and children there shall part,
Shall part to meet no more."

O how the word part dwells with awful solemnity upon my mind, while with tearful eyes I pen my thoughts on this momentous subject! Shall part to meet no more! Brethren and sisters let us think of that friend who was found with the rest of guests having no wedding garment on. And now unconverted friends I beseech you, think of this parting time. Here you part with the hope to meet them again on earth. But if at the judgment you part with them, your hope of meeting them again will expire, without God, without hope and beyond the reach of mercy, you will be tormented day and night forever. Can you dwell with everlasting fire? "Kiss the son lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little." May God help you to do so is the prayer of a weak servant of Christ.

FOR THE PILGRIM.

LAWFUL STRIVING.

"And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." 1 Cor. 9: 25.

Thus reads the first clause of the 25th verse of chapter 9 of I Corinthians. That an effort is required of a Christian, to maintain his standing as a christian, is evident not only from the above scripture, but from many other portions of God's word.

Paul, at another place, says, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Again, "Ye did run well, who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth," and again, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And the Savior says, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Striving then becomes a duty upon all who wish to succeed, in the great spiritual warfare in which all are engaged. It is a duty incumbent upon all.

The apostle in illustrating the matter, refers to the Olympic games to which the Grecians engaged, for amusement of the vast auditory that repaired to the various places, to be gratified in the exhibitions of the various athletic exercises there presented. And says, the performers were temperate in all things, that they might be successful, and they did it to obtain a corruptible crown,—but argues that we should do it to obtain an incorruptible one.

To learn more particularly how those performers prepared themselves, we would have to consult history, but those whom the apostle addresses more immediately in the epistle, knew full well, what he referred to, when he made the allusion, "Temperate in all things." As no doubt some of his converts had thus been engaged during their impenitent state, their rules were rigid, and were rigidly to be observed, or failure would surely be the result.

Had the apostle been consulted about the propriety of those games, he evidently would have said they were not proper, or of their utility, he would have said, they were not useful in a christian warfare. Yet he holds them up to christians, as an example worthy of imitation, when such zeal would be applied in our spiritual warfare, in which we are all engaged.

There is another feature in the matter to which the apostle refers. Those Grecians subjected themselves to all the rigors of the rules applicable to their preparation, for success in those exercises, and after all but one could win, and the trophy would be what? A crown of ivy!

Paul uses such matters as illustrations, and at the same time, do not such illustrations reflect up the conduct of many professing Christians, of whom it cannot be said, "they have a zeal without knowledge. But on the contrary, it can be justly said they have knowledge and have not the zeal to bring that knowledge into practical operation. And why, do you ask? Because they are not "temperate in all things," as is required of them by the scriptures at the head of this article.

There is a great deal said about temperance, as applied to drinking intoxicating liquors, and very properly too, as it has become a national sin, and its sad effects are seen in almost every family, if not directly, at least indirectly, and it should be abated if possible, by all legitimate means. But the apostle says we are to be "temperate in all things." Hence he intimates there are other intemperate things, besides drinking too much intoxicating liquor.

Do not many persons eat intemperately? They do, and thereby render themselves unfit for business of any character. If such people go to the house of worship, they are not profited, because they are too stupid to comprehend what is said by the minister, if they do not go to sleep, which latter is often the case. Such drowsiness mars the pleasure of a social circle, and it is all attributed to over much eating, and comes under the sin of gluttony.

Again, do not many persons act very intemperately, when they rise early, often before day, disturb the slumbers of their entire family, and commence their work for the day, continue all day and part of the night too, perhaps, often to engage in work, and very hard work too, ending profitless besides, and for what? Simply to acquire wealth, not that they themselves might enjoy it, but their children are expected to enjoy it, and very often they do, but not in a manner contemplated by the parents. I have often wondered what some parents would say, could they see how their hard earnings are used by their children. To hear also the wicked expression used by them, such as the following: "If father would have left me more, it would have been of use, to have made an effort to retain it," Such expressions have come to my knowledge.

Intemperence, is manifested too, in excessive indulgence in dress, male and female exhibit, yet the latter most. Many really absent themselves from Church, because they cannot get ready to go, it would take too long to dress. They indulge themselves too freely on Sabbath morning, and if they have any distance to go, they fail to go, owing to a disposition to make a display when there,—not having the time to array themselves, the result is they either do not go, or if they go they arrive at such an unreasonable time, only to annoy the congregation, and fail to derive any benefit from the meeting. May the Lord dispose our minds and hearts properly.

CONNIVANCE.

The successful use of this stratagem is not the art or gift of any one. Parents, teachers and public speakers of various callings, may in many instances, and under certain circumstances, accomplish much good by pretending not to see, hear, and in any way notice, all that is transacted by their children, pupils or auditory; while on the other hand incalculable harm may be incurred by an attempt to secure authority and influence by connivance by such as are not capable of exercising a profound discretion in this matter.

Children soon learn to know about how well a parent sees and hears, and so also pupils soon know this of their teacher. Then let a child learn to know that connivance is exercised upon it, and one of two things is the sad consequence; either the influence of the latter is impaired, if not lost, or else the former must be brought and kept under by otherwise unnecessary punishment. And how painful it is to be necessitated to chasten a child for a fault caused by our own indiscretion. Hence the necessity of thought upon this subject, and of caution in the matter. But upon the other hand, suppose one in authority over another would confess, and even seek to see, hear and know everything, of much or no importance, transacted by their subjects, the result would be a perpetual train of tricks and mischief, or else a distraction of intellect, or at least a self undervalue and undue embarrassment on the part of the child, and a continual agitation of sentiment on the part of the master, parent or teacher.

A minister had better pray publicly in behalf of his misbehaved auditory, than to scold it publicly. But a reasonable degree of connivance in this case is more tolerable than in the two former cases. But mark the degree.

BUT FOR A MOMENT.

"Our light affliction which is but for a moment." What a brave, noble heart here uttered words of courage and strength. This man knew sorrow. He was in the daily experience of deep distress. He had been thus for many years. He suffered that he might help others in their sufferings. He did not complain of his hard lot. He did not utter one word of a sour, morose, or grumbling kind. No. he said the affliction was light. He added to this the statement that it was only for a moment. And could we see things in the light of eternity, as did Paul, we should feel thus concerning our incomparably lighter sufferings. Only a moment, and they are all past. Only a little atom of time, and we bid an everlasting farewell to sorrow. Not a word of complaint should ever escape our lips. We feel some anguish, but it is light compared with the weight of glory. We feel the pain sometimes as though it were long continued. But the moment eternal things rise to our view, how transient the pain and anguish seem to us! Nay, we even welcome their sharp stings, and acquiesce in their continuance as long as it pleases God. These deep sorrows are our best friends. They are in employ, each at work for us, working out the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Faith says this is all well. Not one hour of withholding. Let patience perform her perfect work, that it may come forth as gold.

The little moment will be past ere long. The light affliction will be all borne. Then there will remain joy unspeakable and without end. Welcome the anguish, if we may but use it as our Lord commands.

THE WORD OF GOD.

The word of God is a sure support for men in trouble. Man's words may be reasonable, wise, consoling, but it never forms a solid foundation in tribulations, like that which comes from heaven. God's word comes with authority; it falls upon the heart like the rising sunlight upon the mists of night, dissipating the doubts, illuminating the pathway, and inspiring the courage needful for the struggle unto victory. It is the end of all controversy. Whatever else one may doubt, he may not doubt, the immutable word of God. Whatever else may fail, this word will abide. Heaven and earth may pass away, but this word remaineth. No man who puts his trust in that word, and who shapes his life in filial obedience to it, need fear the opening future, either of this life or that to come. Respect unto the commandments excludes fear and shame. It emboldens the heart and strengthens the hands for all good deeds, and gives assurance of the coming victory and reward.—Chronicle.

MANY persons pass for spiritual, who are only loyal to a system of theology. There are thousands of these who know not Jesus; who are no nearer to knowing Jesus because of being experts in systematic theology, but only the farther removed from Him by the use they make of such acquisitions.

A religious life is not a thing which spends itself like a bright bubble on the river's surface. It is rather like the river itself, which widens continually, and is never so broad or so deep as where it rolls into the ocean of eternity.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Feb. 3, 1874.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

The Menonites of America are calling upon the Churches, especially those holding the non-resistant doctrine, for aid to help their persecuted brethren of Russia to immigrate to the United States. They are trying to raise $350,000 in the shape of a loan. Next week if there is room, we will give the statement sent us.

The New York Observer says: There are some indications of trouble brewing between Italy and France. If war breaks out it will be a religious war. Germany is backing Italy, and poor France will get the worst of it. And for two good reasons—first, she has the shortest guns; and, secondly, she is on the wrong side. It is too late in the history of the world to make war to keep a Pope on a throne.

Keep us supplied with the current religious news of the Churches. Paul went around to see how the Churches did. Are we not interested in how our Churches do? We have a much more convenient way of gaining this intelligence now, let us make use of it. Send in the items of interest from every Church and we will gladly make room for all such as will be for the general good of our readers.

The panic, though about past, we fear will work unfavorably to the poor, and the calls for charity. This should not be, as there is no class that it falls so heavily upon as the day laborer. We feel to appeal to our beloved membership in their behalf. Close not your bowels of compassion upon them, ever remembering that all we have and receive is from the Lord and that he loveth the cheerful giver.

Too Small.—By an oversight our stock of paper run short and was not noticed until it was too late to order others, and too make out our issue, we were compelled to use a smaller paper which we had on hand. By condensing our forms we succeeded in getting it all on, but it left a very small margin. For this we are sorry and hope that those who got them will bear with us as it was the best we could do.

Calls.—Late on Monday evening our bell rang, and we found at the door quite an old and brotherly looking man, and as we are known and know each other by that "peculiar" appearance, we had no hesitancy in inviting him in, when we found ourselves honored with a call from our unknown, yet known, aged brother John Forney of Falls City, Neb. He informed us that he was on a trip East, had been with the brethren in Philadelphia, Germantown and Indian Creek, and was now on his way to Johnstown and Somerset Co., Pa., his former place of abode. The call was a short one but fully appreciated by us as we are always pleased to have our brethren call when passing through. We live a distance from the depot, but all trains are met by a hack which will deliver all who wish to stop with us for 10 cents.

Last Year we received about $33.00 to pay for Pilgrims sent to the poor. That amount paid a little over one-third, leaving about $60.00 for our share, which is just that much more than we can afford, as we send in addition to the above, a large number at reduced rates.

This year, the demand upon us for the poor is fully as great as that of last, and so far, we have received 75 cents to be devoted to that purpose. Brethren and sisters, those of you whose bowels of compassion yearn towards God's poor, will you not send us a mite for this purpose? We do not wish to refuse them, neither do you. Then let us all do a little and thus gladden their hearts, as they appreciate the messages of salvation as dearly as do we. We will gladly open a "Poor Fund" list giving each one credit for what may be sent us.

THY KINGDOM COME.

The daily prayer of hundreds and thousands throughout the land is, "Thy Kingdom come" and yet they are just as persistently fighting against its coming, or in other words, they are determined that it shall not come.

If we desire a new kingdom, we must first be concerned in regard to who the subjects are to be, as this is a very essential point in organizing a kingdom. This done, we must then determine who the king shall be. If it is to be our kingdom we have a right to choose our own king, and one too, that will rule according to our wishes and for our pleasure, but if it is Christ's Kingdom we wish established among us, the subjects must be of such a character as will be willing to accept and submit to his laws, and as this is the Kingdom that we all seem to be praying for, it is well to consider its character, the character of its subjects, the conditions of membership, and whether we are ready and willing to receive it.

The Kingdom of Christ is thro'out the Bible, represented as a Kingdom of peace. The first announcement was glorious, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, peace on earth and good will to men." These "good tidings of great joy" was the character of the new and coming Kingdom Since Adam sinned, to that time there was no peace. Although prophet after prophet was raised up, prophesied of it and fell asleep with the fathers, yet it came not, no peace, no great joy. At last, the prophets all sleep—time moves on. Only a sacred few watch for the long hoped for event, and it comes, the heavens break forth in singing and angels deliver the great message, a new King is born. This King is to rule the Kingdom for which we are praying, and as He is to bring peace on the earth and good will to men, His Kingdom must be a Kingdom of peace. Zachariah in predicting concerning his son says, "He shall guide our feet in the way of peace." He spake thus because he was to go before the face of the Lord to prepare His ways, and as these ways lead into the Kingdom of Christ, by us being taught to walk in them, our feet are guided into the way of peace.

If this is so, we can readily determine the character of its subjects. To have a kingdom of peace there must be peaceable subjects, therefore to become members of this Kingdom we must learn the principles of peace, which will result in "good will to men." Until this principle becomes universal and predominates in every heart, our prayers cannot be answered, as the Kingdom must be universal, and none to oppose. The King has come and the Kingdom is being established, and to hasten its progress, we have the desire embodied in the prayer of all prayers, "Thy Kingdom come." The call for subjects is being promulgated throughout the length and breadth of the land, all are invited to come and enlist for the Kingdom, but in order that all may be loyal to the King and be known as his, there is a certain process given through which we must pass. This is called;

Conditions of membership.—The first essential point in these conditions are that we become fully dismembered from the Kingdom of the world. Christ Jesus declares that His Kingdom is not of this world, or His servants, subjects, would fight. The subjects of the Kingdom of the world do fight, but the Kingdom of Christ is to be a Kingdom of peace and therefore is to be composed of subjects who live and carry out the principles of peace. This dismemberment is brought about by what is called the fundamental principles of the new law, repentance, faith and baptism. Repentance is brought about by learning the nature and requirements of the Kingdom. We first learn that by sin or disobedience we showed our disloyalty to God, and voluntarily became the subjects of satan and of his Kingdom, as his Kingdom is composed wholly of disobedient angels and men and women, and that in this condition we are lost to all to that is good, that this Kingdom has nothing to give us in this life but fleshy gratifications and in the world to come misery, and eternal woe,—cast off, rejected of God we are left to grope our way in darkness,—strangers and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and without hope and God in the world. In this terrible condition we are pointed to Christ, our new King, in all His loveliness, beauty and power. First, as the Son of God, surrounded by the choicest gifts of heaven, and adored by all the heavenly hosts. Next we find him in the habiliments of flesh, lying in the lowly manger because there was room found for him nowhere else. At the age of thirty He descends into the Jordan and there under the hands of the Baptist receives the initiatory rite of the new Kingdom. From thence He is led into the wilderness of trial, and after a long fast, successfully passes through three of the greatest temptations that satan had to present, after which He commenced the great work of redemption. From city to city He wends His way, preaching the doctrine of the Kingdom of peace, healing the sick, opening the eyes of the blind and unstopping the ears of the deaf. Without a home or where to lay His head, He meets the scorn and mockery of those whom He is laboring and suffering to save, with a divine patience, and even prays for them. There were none beneath His notice, even the prostitute found grace in His eyes and was told to sin no more. Thus we follow him on through the scoffs and scorns of an ungrateful world, through a mock trial before priests and worldly kings, thro' the baptism of suffering in the garden of distress, and finally up to Calvary's rugged cross, there to die an ignominious death that we might live and be eternally happy. When we thus learn our true condition and the price of our redemption, we are led to repentance, or as the apostle says, "Know ye not that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Repentance is a sorrow for sins, and if preceded or accompanied with a genuine faith, will produce works or action. Having repented of sin and a living faith in Christ, we become proper subjects for the initiatory rite of the new Kingdom, which is Christian baptism. This gives us a valid title to citizenship. Some rite or public formality was necessary in order that a public profession could be made before the world, and as this profession was to be accompanied with a new life, the rite was chosen that would most fully illustrate the change intended. Ecce Homo, in speaking of the Jewish baptism says, "The water in which they were bathed washed away from them the whole unhallowed and unprofitable past: they rose out of it new men in a new world, and felt as though they had been born again into a higher state. No ceremony could be better adapted to Christ's purpose than this." In baptism we have a beautiful figure of the death and burial of the old man of sin, and the resurrection and coming forth of the new man in Christ Jesus, and it is a wonder to us how any can fail to see it.

These are the conditions of membership of Christ's kingdom and gives us valid authority for praying, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." If we desire the speedy coming of this blessed kingdom we must labor to prepare ourselves and the world for it. When we pray, "Thy Kingdom Come" we also pray, "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." If we mean what we pray and God's will is to be done on earth as in heaven, there must be a very radical change somewhere and perhaps that change is needed most in ourselves, as the spirit of this kingdom must commence its operations within the soul first. Unless we be come fully dismembered from the kingdom of the world our souls yearn not for the coming kingdom although we pray for it every day. As long as we continue to be wedded to the foolish maxims of the world, so long we care not for "Thy Kingdom come." As long as we encourage the spirit of pride, envy, hatred and malice towards each other, the spirit of Jesus is not within us, and for us to pray "Thy Kingdom come" is nothing less than solemn mockery. Does not God know our hearts? Why then pray for the very thing we do not want? The kingdom cannot come in such an unholy element, and were it to be established with such a material it could not stand. Let us then be consistent and not pray for the kingdom to come until we have first prepared ourselves for it.

The coming of this kingdom is a the most happy thought and should be earnest yearning of every regenerated soul. If we live not to see it come in its universal sense, we can have the assurance that it may dwell within us, which will afford us joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Dear reader let us continue to pray "thy kingdom come," let us live, "thy kingdom come," and let us labor for thy kingdom come." Let us pray for the glorious time when on righteousness shall be proclaimed from shore to shore, when the thundering cannons and the glittering bayonets shall be forged into pruning knives and plowshares, and when nations shall learn war no more.

SERIES OF MEETINGS.

We have learned of a number of series of meetings being held throughout the brotherhood and some with marked success. These meetings are not conducted after the popular style of holding revival meetings, but the same as our regular services with this difference, they are continued from 4 to 8 days, or even longer, if circumstances seem to call for them.

We, as a church are justly opposed to undue excitement, or scaring people into the church as we believe it not to be in harmony with the teaching of Christ.

The work of regeneration is all important, it is a work for life and eternity and therefore demands a candid and serious consideration, such as cannot be given under a strain of excitement or the impulse of a moment, hence we have the wholesome advice, "set down and count the cost, or to dig deep and found our house upon the rock."

We believe the converting power is in the word of God. If the faithful preaching of it will not effect sinners and induce them to come to Jesus, there is an unwillingness on their part to comply with its terms and if other means are resorted to in order to get them into the church, they are brought against their will, while under a calm and considerate judgment, and their religion is the result of organic excitement and impulsive judgmen and when that passes away, their religion goes with it. We have no objection against sinners becoming alarmed under the power of the preached word, but we do doubt the validity of a religion prompted by singing and prayer alone.

The commission was not go sing and pray, but go teach, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that will not believe let him be damned. We drop these ideas because there is danger of running such meetings to extremes.

On the evening of the 14th inst., the brethren of Chippewa, Ohio intend to commence a series of meetings at the Beech Grove church and on the evening of the 21. the brethren of Aughwick, Pa., will also commence a meeting.

A LITTLE MORE PATIENCE.

Complaints are coming in discouragingly fast in regard to the non-arrival of the PILGRIM. As said before in a large majority of these cases the names were booked and the papers sent. We wish it understood that there is a fault somewhere in the mail arrangement, as we are not the only publishers that have these difficulties to contend with. Some of our dailies reach us only two and three times a week, yet they are sent daily. The post office has a great many paper grabbers and there seems to be no remedy for it. We are careful in mailing to all subscribers, as we wish all to receive their papers, but our care will not effect the neglect of careless and dishonest post masters. We hope our readers will understand this and not write us too sharply until we are known to be in fault. If the papers do not come, send us a card giving us the full address and stating what numbers are missing. We are always glad to remedy all mistakes as far as it is in our power to do so. In a few weeks we hope to have our Addressing Machine in operation which we hope will avoid the mistakes that are now attributed to pencil marking.

A GEM.

The following gem by William Cullen Bryant is found in St. Nicholas for February, and is commended to the careful consideration and study of both young and old. If these thoughts are true of this life, who can measure eternity's regrets over the follies and sins here committed? And with what care each day should be spent, and each pleasure enjoyed.

"Upon the valley's lap,
The dewy morning throws
A thousand pearly drops,
To wake a single rose.

Thus often, in the course
Of life's few fleeting years,
A single pleasure costs
The soul a thousand tears."

The pleasures of this life are naught, as compared with the higher joys of the life to come; then what folly to barter these for those, and eternally regret the choice. Time well spent, a distress or sorrow relieved, a want supplied, brings pleasures costing the soul no tears.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Editor: As I have not written to you since I have been taking the PILGRIM, and my present term now being closed, I will just say I feel as if I have received the full worth of my money. I was so anxious to receive the PILGRIM that I frequently could scarcely await its arrival. If so, why not support it and thus aid in keeping the ark of the Lord moving along. If any of the brethren or sisters become weary on the way and feel that their faith is growing dark before them, let them subscribe for the PILGRIM and read its pages filled with the light from above, and most assuredly, the darkness will be dispelled and the soul revived in the divine life.

As for myself, I never become weary in reading its pages, and as long as you continue filling its pages as you have done heretofore, to many it will be a pilgrim indeed. It greatly cheers my aged mother, whose days will soon be numbered, in her lonely hours, especially when not able to go and hear the preached Word. By its visits we have preaching weekly in our own home, and that too, by many of our able and aged, as well as young brethren whom we never saw.

Enclosed find $1.50 for 1873 and please continue it for 1874, as I cannot well do without it and cannot spend my money for a better cause. May God bless your labors in the cause of Christ and the promulgation of the doctrine of life eternal.

CAUTION.

CANTON CHURCH, STARK CO., O.
January 24, 1874.

This is to inform the brethren and all whom it may concern, that a young man made his appearance among us, last Fall, by the name of Lewis E Smith of Huntington Co., Ind., claiming to be a brother and presenting a certificate from the Church of said Co.

Our suspicion was excited from the fact that his certificate was written and signed all in one hand writing, and also that by his request he should hold this certificate always, which we knew was not in harmony with the custom of the Brethren. So we addressed a letter of inquiry to the first name on his certificate.

We received a prompt reply, stating that this L. E. Smith was a brother, that he received a certificate and went to Illinois; after some time, he returned without a certificate. He was married to a young sister, and after living together two months they parted, he being in fault; that he is not divorced; that he left Indiana and went to Ohio without a certificate; that his conduct being such that the Church refused to grant it; that he is acting the part of the prodigal; that his parents, who live only a mile from the writer, are worthy members of the Church, and are very sorry that their son is so ill disposed, but hope that he may yet see the error of his ways and reform.

The certificate he held was a forged one, not having the proper names signed to constitute it legal.

The writer also states that he had him published several years ago thro' the Companion, but thinks it has been forgotten and advises us to expose him again, preparing the Brethren to give him a proper reception.

Hope the editors of the Companion and Pilgrim will give the above a place in their papers.

Yours Fraternally

REPORT FROM SPRING RUN.

According to announcement, a series of Meetings began, Saturday evening, Jan. 24th, and ended Sunday evening, Feb. 1st, in the Spring Run Congregation—near McVeytown—Mifflin Co., Pa., which Branch is under the Eldership of Joseph R. Hanawalt.

During the meetings 14 sermons were delivered in Spring Run M. H.; 4 in Sam'l. Yoder's S. H., and 2 in Matawana.

The Ministers who spoke were Daniel M. Holsinegr and John W. Brumbaugh, Clover Creek; Grabill Myers, Eldorado, and William H Quinn, Tyrone, all of Blair county; Wm. H. Maitland, Mifflin county and John G. Glock, Shirleysburg, Huntingdon county, all of Pa.

The meetings were all well attended and apparently much interest manifested.

One evening as the meeting was closing for the night, a request came from a sick woman—wife of Philip A. Murphy, who has a fever—for some brethren to come and pray for her, which was complied with. Our prayer is if it be God's will, that she be speedily restored to good health, and become a bright and shining ornament in the true Church of Christ.

Since last reported, 4 have been baptized and 34 in all have been added to this congregation since last Spring.

May the good work be steadily on the increase. Amen.

Dear Editor: I am happy to say that we had another visit from our estimable brother F. P. Loehr, which is worthy of note by us. He left his home on the morning of the 24th of January, and arrived with us in the evening of the same day. The day was cold and stormy, but according to promise, he filled his appointment and preached to an attentive audience. Next day, Sunday, weather more favorable, meeting at 2 o'clock p. m. and from the following words, "I will go a fishing," he gave us a very interesting lesson. He remained with us until the 2d of February, and preached every night to attentive hearers, which I hope may have the desired effect, that they may become doers of what they have heard, as it was spoken with power, as of one having authority. It brought a query to my mind, Why is it that the Church does not support such gifted ministers that they could spend all their time in fulfilling the command, 'Go ye therefore and teach all nations." There is a great call for ministers all through these western States, and we have plenty of able brethren to fill the wants if the Church would furnish the means.

There are, in this county, but five members, and we are in rather poor circumstances, so that we are not able to recompense ministers to come very often, and there are others in like circumstances, and I know that we have a great many brethren who are blest with this world's goods. To them I appeal to help their poor brethren that they may have the Gospel preached as well as the wealthy. The Gospel sounds as pleasant to the believer here in Michigan as in the Eastern States, but it is not often that he has the opportunity of hearing the whole Gospel preached. There are a great many professors who are only taught to observe part of the Gospel. That is taught by their minister. Such I would refer to the advice Paul gave to Timothy, "Search the Scriptures."

MINISTERIAL ENGAGEMENT.

Arrived at Loudonville on the 15th of January 1874. All night at bro. E. P. L. Dow's, remained with him and family until sometime in the afternoon on the 16th, then brother J. Workman came with a conveyance. Brother Baker and I accompanied him home, a distance of 2½ miles from town. This evening preaching commenced at the Brethren's Meeting-house about one mile west of Eld. Workman's residence. The audience not very large, but good attention All night with brother J. Workman. On the 17th preached again at 11 a. m., dined with brother W. Priest, Eld. James Workman from Danville was in company,—passed the afternoon very pleasantly. Brother James addressed the audience in the evening, delivered a very interesting discourse to a large audience. All night with brother G. W. and sister Smith, who are very zealous members in the body of Christ. the Lord keep them near his bleeding side. Preached again on the 18th at 11 a. m., large congregation, good attention. Dined with Eld. Workman, preached again in the evening, all night with Eld. Workman. On the 19th preached at 11 a. m., took dinner with brother Wm. Workman. Brother Wm. and wife are noble hearted Christians indeed. Preached again in the evening, lodged at bro. J. Fisher's. They are truly lovers of their blessed Lord and Master, are kind and affectionate, God bless them. 20th preached again at 11 a. m. This discourse closed our meeting at this point. Quite a number of us dined with Bro. W. Priest and family, quite an excellent dinner. They are very kind members, the Lord bless them. Brother W. Bowman conveyed us to his residence, some three miles west of Loudonville. Meeting commenced in the evening in the McFall Meeting-house small audience but good attention. Spent the night with brother Bowman; brother Adderholtz and sister Zellner were with us. Bro. and sister Bowman are also noble hearted members; the Lord keep them faithful till death. Preached at 11 a. m. on the 21st. After meeting dined with brother David Brubaker, one of the ministers in this arm of the Church. Brother David and family are very pleasant and kind His family nearly all members of the Church, the Lord help them to be faithful in the good cause. Preached again in the evening, Eld. M. Workman and wife present tonight. All night at brother Bowman's. 22d preached at 11 a. m., dined with brother McClure. They are very kind and affectionate members. Eld. Workman and his son Joshua, brother Adderholtz and myself visited brother Wm. Bowman, who is very much afflicted, had prayer with him and family. The Lord give him grace for his day and trial. He has made his peace, calling and election sure, thank God, he is now ready to be offered, though but a youth. Preached in the evening, all night with brother Studabaker.

23d. This morning visited old friend McClure, accompanied with Eld. W. and Elder B., had prayer. The old gentleman is afflicted with heart disease. Preached again at 11 a. m.,—had an excellent meeting. This was our last meeting at this point. We then sang a hymn, No. 772, and bid each other farewell in hope of meeting in Heaven. Bro. E. P. L. Dow took me home with him in his buggy to Loudonville. Eld. Workman, wife and son William, and brother Smith and wife all dined with brother Dow in the afternoon. I remained over night. He is a very kind, tender-hearted brother, I believe he is in full possession of brotherly kindness. He has a very kind companion, a noble hearted lady, the Lord reward them for all all the kindness. 24th. This morning bid the family farewell, took the train at Wooster. Eld. J. Shoemaker got on the cars, on his return from Michigan. I arrived at Millersburg at noon, took dinner, then walked 7 miles to brother J. Millers, drank a cup of tea, and my son waiting for my arrival, I then rode horseback 8 miles, and arrived at home at 8 o'clock p. m., found all well, thank God.

On the 25th I left home, travelled 5 miles afoot to Rogersville, preached at 10 a. m., and in the evening. The Loudonville Church (as it is called,) Eld. Morgan Workman is bishop, and a noble man he is indeed. He is mighty in word and doctrine, fully able to rightly divide the Word. Nature has done much for brother Workman. His companion is truly a mother in Zion. Eld. Workman's church is in the best of order, the members have their lamps trimmed and burning. It appears there is not a jar among them. His assistant ministers are Bro. David Brubaker and Joshua Workman.

In the year 1872 they had some 20 accessions, and in 1873, 14. This church now number about 60 members. In conclusion, I hope the dear brethren and sisters at Londonville will accept my heart-felt thanks in return for their kindness and many gifts which I received at their hands. I will never forget them, no never. May the Lord bless them is my prayer. I remain yours in hope of eternal life. JOHN NICHOLSON.

Shanesville, Ohio.

Dear Brother Editors of the Pilgrim:—As Church news are solicited from the brotherhood, I will give you a short sketch of our travels. Bro. John B. Shoemaker of Chippeway Church, and I, met at Wooster on January 15th, and repaired to the the house of brother Jonathan Kurtz, a short distance from town, where we enjoyed their company and hospitality very much. On the morning of the 16th, we took the early train for Williams Co., expecting to reach our destination same day, but failing to make connection we were delayed until the evening of 17th; were met at Fayette, the terminus of a new rail road, six miles distant from the brethren by Bro. Jacob Keiser one of the speakers of that Church, who conveyed us to his home. The meetings were appointed at the other end of the Church, and we were not able to reach our first appointment, but remained at brother Jacob Reisers, found them all well and enjoyed their society and hospitality very much. Next morning being Lord's day, we were conveyed to place of meeting, a school house near Bro. David Rittenhouse's, a few miles west of Pioneer,—found a reasonable congregation assembled where we tried to preach the word of life. Meeting at same place in the evening, and next day at Bro. David Rittenhouse's. From there we moved on Monday evening to Bro. Bollinger's school house, where we had meeting in the evening, and at the Brethren's houses in day time, on account of school, until Thursday, when we went to Primrose. Meeting there in a Universalist house Thursday forenoon. In the afternoon one baptized. Meeting again in the evening, when Bro. John left me and returned home, having to attend a council in Stark Co., Ohio. I remained with the brethren until the morning of the 27th, when brother Jacob Keiser conveyed me to Bro. Long's school house, 6 miles north of Bryan, the county seat of Williams county, where we had one meeting. On the morning of the 28th, Bro. Jacob Keiser conveyed me on to Bryan, where I remained with two of my nephews over night. On the morning of the 29th, I left for home where I arrived in the afternoon of the 30th, and found all well for which we felt to thank God, for his abounding grace. Upon the whole we enjoyed our trip very much, formed new acquaintances with brethren and sisters, and hope done some good. The brethren are praiseworthy for the great zeal they manifested for the truth, and have our prayers for their kindness shown toward us. We hope to soon hear of the fruits of our labor, for some strong impressions were made upon some of them. We think they are almost pursuaded to be Christians.

Yours in love,
GEORGE WORST.

Dear Pilgrim:—On last Wednesday evening I received the sad intelligence that brother George Suine had died suddenly on Tuesday evening, and that the funeral and burial would be on Thursday at 10 o'clock a. m.

Funerals are really very solemn occasions, but they are very frequent. I was at a funeral once that was very largely attended, and while passing along with the solemn procession, a very old German brother standing by the wayside, leaning upon his staff, and looking at the pitiable throng, said to me, "Es gept noche ein monichie leicht bis die all forgrawva sin," i. e. there will be many a funeral before these are all buried. I thought his words contained a very large idea, and I think so yet, but when I add to it the idea of all the mortals that tread the earth, and compare them with all that ever did tread it and now sleeps in its bosom, and when I add to this idea the resurrection and the judgment which await all, then I become involved in a problem which God alone can solve.

Funerals change the language which nature speaks to the living. Things that were emblems of life become decorations of the abodes of death. They speak of the last agonies, of the shroud, and of the silent tomb. But it is not well to be always dying, nor to be always thinking or talking of death. It is well to be prepared to meet death as a faithful servant is prepared to meet the first night after the end of his servitude, wrapping the drapery of his couch around him and lying down to a sweet sleep and rest, to awake in the morning in the enjoyment of perfect freedom.

FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Bro. John Gault of Wood Co. W. Va., says: "The Church here numbers 35 or 40 and I think if some able minister would come here and preach for us a while some more would join with us. We are weak in the cause, but our desire is that we may grow in grace and a knowledge of the truth, so that when we fail on earth we may have a home in Heaven."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

God willing, there will be a series of meetings in the Aughwick Church commencing in Germany Valley, at the Brethren's Meeting-house, on Saturday evening, February 21st, '74. All who desire to be with us are hereby cordially invited, by order of the Church. J. B. GARVER.

Brother Brumbaugh, please announce through your columns that the brethren of Chippeway church intend holding a series of meetings commencing on the evening of the 14th of Feb. 1874, at the Beech Grove meetinghouse. A general invitation is extended to all, and especially to ministering brethren. By order of the church. D. M. IRVIN.

JOHN ZUCK.

DIED.

WHITEHEAD.—On Jan. 21st 1874, our beloved brother Samuel Whitehead, of Union Centre congregation, aged 63 yrs., 1 mo. and 10 days.

He was a member of the church for 39 years, and was much loved by all who knew him. He was very zealous in the Master's cause—especially in the last years of his life—as his whole life was to talk and and urge his children, and all that were about him to come to God. When he come to bid them a final farewell, he exhorted his children, grand-children and neighbors to meet him in Heaven. His companion has lost a faithful husband, the children have lost a kind father, and the church has lost one of its most zealous and noble members; but we comfort ourselves with the assurance that "our loss is his gain and that we may all meet him above. Oh may we all remember his admonitions and all strive to go to him! Funeral by Davis Foust and the writer to a large and attentive congregation, from Rev. 14: 13. JESSE. CALVERT.

(Companion, please copy.)

LEIDY.—In the Clover Creek congregation, Blair county Pa., on Jan. 10th, '74, Lizzie Alice, daughter of Daniel B and Catharine Leidy, aged 10 years and 16 days.

ALSO, in the same family, on Jan. 24th '74, Emma Jane Leidy, aged 1 year, 7 months and 6 days.

Funeral services by the brethren. Thus within the space of two weeks has Jesus called two innocent jewels out of our family to rest in the paradise above. May their little graves serve as way-side marks to point the parents to the far off Land; thus leading them with a gentle hand to follow Jesus in his foot-steps. May they also seriously consider that they have the privilege to go to them, to unite there and form a family in Heaven. Then grieve not for your loved ones, they are well cared for; but grieve for yourselves and respond to the call in this bereavement, unite yourselves with the children of God. If the messenger of death calls you, then you are prepared to meet your children in the clime of eternal bliss. What consolation, what comfort, and what joy it should afford you to know the Savior's appeal:

Suffer little Lizzie and Emma to come,
For of such is the kingdom of peace;
In glory they shine, in their beauteous home,
Where sorrow and pain shall evermore cease!

S. B. FURRY.

GRIMES.—Near Rockport, wood county W. Va., on Dec. 25th, 1873, Harriet Annie, daughter of Bro. William Grimes, aged 11 months and 6 days. Funeral by the writer JOHN GAULT.

HARTSOUGH—In the Rush Creek branch of the Church, Fairfield county Ohio, of typhoid fever, bro. Edwin Hartsough, aged 49 years, 5 months and 10 days.

He was chosen to the ministry September 6th, 1858, but never labored much in office. He leaves an aged mother, (a sister), a wife, four children, brothers and many friends to mourn their loss.

Funeral services by the writer to a large and attentive congregation, from 2. Tim. 4: 7—8. He was buried on his farm.

HESS.—In the Welsh Run congregation, Washington county Maryland, of heart disease, sister Sarah Hess, wife of brother Hiram Hess, aged 34 years, 4 months and 15 days.

She was an amiable sister. She leaves a kind husband and four children, two of which are mutes, an aged mother and many friends to mourn the loss of one so near and dear.

Funeral services by brother Keefer and the writer, from 2. Cor 5: 1.

NICHOLAS MARTIN.

SOUDER.—In the Maple Grove congregation, Ashland county, Ohio, bro. John Souder, aged 72 years, 3 months and 16 days.

He suffered long but bore it patiently; was anointed with oil according to the Word. Funeral services by Bro. A. M. Dickey and the writer from Amos 4: and a part of 12th verse, 'Prepare to meet thy God.' We were assisted by brother David M. Witmer of the Ashland congregation.

LET ME GET A START.

A little black-eyed girl once laid
Her book upon my knee;
And with a troubled look essayed
To learn her A B C.

But all in vain—she did not call
A letter right—not once;
At length I harshly sat her down,
And called her "little dunce."

Sad tears soon filled her morry eyes;
I'd pained her Little heart;
"Aunt Fanny, do just wait," she cries,
"Till I can get a start."

And soon the dear girl "got a start,"
Each letter learned to tell,
And ere three months had passed away
Could learn a lesson well.

Now, when you find some duller mind
Discouraged, sick at heart,
I say, be patient—chide them not,
But help them "get a start."

Young Folk's Rural.

DON'T SOUND THE TRUMPET.

We here give another little story sent us by an aged pilgrim for the young pilgrim and those intending to become such. It shows up most beautifully two classes of boys and girls that we have in the world. The one class does good acts because they have good hearts while the other does good only when it can be seen. You who read the Bible will remember that Jesus said, when you do alms do not first sound a trumpet but let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth. This is the way the little girl done, but the little boy wanted the trumpet sounded by having it put in the newspaper.

We hope our little girls will follow the better example by doing good for the sake of good.

"It was noticed in the newspapers not long since that a little girl in New Haven had for some weeks, abstained from the use of butter, and had given the avails to a missionary. A lady in the town after reading the account to her little son nine years old, asked him to do as the little girl had done. "Yes, ma'am, if they will put it in the newspaper." Do not laugh at the little boy, he has not yet learned to conceal his heart."

While we give this for our young we also wish our older ones to read the little boy only said what thousands of grown people think but do not say it.

HOW ANDY FOUND COMFORT.

As our young little brothers and sisters, no doubt enjoy good little stories, we select for you the following from the Nursery, which we hope you will all read and try to profit by it. It teaches quite an important lesson which we would like to have you all learn. The lesson is this: When you get into trouble, always try and make the best you can of it. This is what Andy did. He commenced by trying to make the little mice happy, and by so doing, forgot his own troubles, after having first determined to mend the wrong he had done. If all little boys would follow this example, how much less crying and pouting we would have among our little ones.

Andy had been careless in playing ball, and had broken a pane of glass. His aunt thought he ought to be punished: so she locked him up in the woodshed, after having placed a jug of cold water and a slice of bread on an old chest, which served at once for a table and a bench.

At first Andy felt rather sad. But he thought to himself that he had enough money of his own to get the pane of glass mended, and that he would run to the glazier's, and have the job done, the minute he was let out of prison.

Then the little boy began to cheer up; and as he lifted his head, and opened his eyes, he saw something that soon made him lose all recollection of the broken pane.

On the floor were two little mice, who, tempted by the smell of the nice bread, had come out of their holes. Andy was a humane boy; and he said to the mice, "You poor hungry little things! you shall have a good time, whether I do or not."

Andy was not aware at the moment, that in trying to make others happy, though those others were only two poor little mice, he was helping himself out of his own sorrows.

Moving his hand quietly toward the slice of bread, he crumbled up some of it, and threw it gently down for the mice to eat. At first they ran off; but by and by, seeing that Andy did not mean them any harm, they came boldly back, and ate up all the crumbs.

Then Andy threw down some more; and this time they did not run. They ate all that was given to them, and looked up, as much as to say, "Thank you, little boy; we should have no objection to a few more of these nice crumbs. Times are hard, and people say there is a great panic somewhere."

Andy gave them some more; and then, as his eyes caught sight of a mouse-trap that lay on the floor, he said, "You poor little fellows! I have broken bread with you; and the laws of hospitality will not permit me to see you caught and killed before my sight."

So he got up and kicked the mouse-trap under a big basket, where it could do nobody any harm.

By and by Andy's aunt unlocked the door, came in, and was surprised to find him looking so bright and happy. "Your mother has just came back from market," said she, "and has been scolding me for shutting you up."

"You did perfectly right, aunty," said Andy; "and I mean to have the pane of glass mended at my own expense. Now, please tell me one thing: When one has made an acquaintance, and broken bread with him, is it not right to keep that one from running into danger, if one can do so?"

"Of course it is, you queer boy!" said aunty.

"You're sure of that, are you?" asked Andy.

"Of course I am," replied aunty.

"Then I'm all right," said Andy; "for you must know, aunty, I have been dining on bread with two little mice, who entertained me greatly; and so, rather than see them caught, I kicked the mouse-trap under the basket."

"But you've caught me instead of the mice," said aunty, laughing. "O Andy, Andy! What shall we do with you?"

PERSEVERENCE.

It is so easy to begin! I have seen boys and girls do it so many, many times, and then break down at the first little trouble.

Did you not make ever so many good resolutions one New Year's Day, to begin "all over again," and have your life faithful and wise and true? And did you not get discouraged, at last, because you had failed a few times, and give it all up?

Did you not begin very industriously, one Spring, with your flower-seeds and your garden-beds, and determine to have everything orderly and beautiful? and did you not grow careless after awhile, and feel discouraged because the weeds grow so fast, and neglect it more and more, until your flowers were all crowded, and their beauty spoiled?

Did you not begin once to try any have perfect lessons at school every day? and because you failed once or twice, did you give it all up, and say it was of no use?

You see it is so easy to begin! The difficult thing is to persevere; to go on with courage and hope, even after we have made mistakes and failures. We must learn to do this all through life, if we mean to have brave and noble lives, that will honor God and do good to others.

THE DOG AND THE SHILLING.

A gentleman who had a splendid Newfoundland dog was riding with a friend one day, when the dog became the subject of conversation. Having praised the qualities of his favorite very highly, the owner assured his companion that Nero would, upon receiving the order, return and fetch any article he should leave behind, from any distance. To confirm this, a marked shilling was first shown to the dog, and then put under a large square stone by the side of the road. The gentleman then rode for three miles, when the dog received the signal from his master to return for the shilling he had seen put under the stone. The dog turned back, the gentleman rode on and reached home; but to his great surprise the hitherto faithful messenger did not return during the day. It afterward appeared that he had gone to the stone under which the shilling was placed, but it being too large for his strength to remove, he had staid howling at the place till two gentleman on horseback, hearing the noise made by the dog, stopped to look at him, when one of them alighting, removed the stone, and seeing the shilling, put it into his pocket, not at the time thinking it to be the object of the dog's search. The dog followed their horses for twenty miles, remained quietly in the room where they supped, followed the maid into the bed chamber, and hid himself under one of the beds. The possessor of the shilling hung his breeches upon a nail by the bedside; but when the travellers were both asleep, the dog took the breeches in his mouth, ann leaping out of the window, which was left open on account of the heat, reached the house of his master at four o'clock in the morning with his prize, in the pocket of which were found, besides the shilling, a watch and money, which, upon being advertised, were returned to the owner, when the whole mystery was explained, to the admiration of all parties.—Wood's Household Magazine.

INEXPENSIVE HAPPINESS.—The most perfect home I ever saw was in a little house into the sweet incense of whose fires went no costly things. A thousand dollars served for a year's living of father, mother and three children. But the mother was the creator of a home; her relations with her children was the most beautiful I have ever seen; even a dull and common-place man was lifted up and enabled to do good work for souls by the atmosphere which this woman created, every inmate of her house involuntarily looked into her face for the key-note of the day, and it always rang clear. From the rosebud or clover leaf which in spite of her hard housework, she always found time to put by our plates at breakfast, down to the story she had on hand to be read in the evening, there was no intermission of her influence. She has always been and always will be my ideal of a mother, wife, home maker. If to her quick brain, loving heart and exquisite face had been added the appliance of wealth and the enlargements of wider culture, hers would have been the ideal home. As it was, it was the best I have ever seen.—Helen Hunt.

THE afflictions of God's people turn ever to their advantage.

THE road to happiness and health lies in simplicity and moderation with a "mind at ease."

BY taking revenge a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing over it he is superior.

LITERATURE.

UNCLE GRANDSIRE'S MAXIMS.—A Fairy Tale from the French. Illustrated. (Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger; Philadelphia.) Price $1.50.

We cannot refrain from giving the motto of this book,—

"Divine goodness, thou embracest all; all happiness is contained in thy fertile bosom; Divine goodness, daughter of Heaven, given to the world by God supremely good!"

In the preface the author tells her young readers that "there are no fairies," that "The providence of our Heavenly Father who is as good as he is powerful, directs our life," that "The only true fairies are the virtues that God sends us," and that "prayer is the talisman that brings them from heaven." With this view of the fairies before the mind of the young reader, and the lessons taught in the book, it were well enough to place it in the hands of many children, until they feel that their happiness or unhappiness depends upon these capacious little creatures, whom they believe will rule their destiny's and shape their course through life.

A SELF-MADE WOMAN; or Mary Idyle's Trials and Triumphs. By Emma May Buckingham. (S. R. Wells, New York.) 12mo. cloth $1.50.

This is an autobiographical story of a young girl who, in spite of poverty, sickness, disappointments and many obstacles, obtained an education, which we fear was a very superficial one, though represented as a remarkable success. The book was evidently written under the presumption that the author was a genius without much thought, but with the effort to display knowledge which, alas! seems to have been lacking. We would gladly say something in its praise if we could do so, conscientiously. If it has any merit it is its unconscious dullery, which will scarcely commend it to favor.

——THE NEW YEAR OF THE LIVING AGE. The number of Littell's Living Age for the week ending January 3d, begins a new volume (the 120th) of that sterling periodical, and the present is therefore a good time for the beginning of new subscriptions. For early numbers of the new year, the publishers already announce articles on important topics by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, the eminent scientist, Sir Arthur Helps, Alfred Russel Wallace, F. R. S., etc., and Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning on Literary and General topics, together with latest and most valuable contributions to Science, Art, Politics, History, Biography, and general Literature by the ablest authors, as contained in the unrivalled periodical literature of Europe. On the whole, The Living Age, for 1874 promises to be even more than usually valuable to its readers, and is indispensible to every one who desires a "thorough compendium of the admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."

The numbers for January 31st and February 7th are remarkably rich in their contents. The following articles are particularly noteworthy:—Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning on Literary and General Topics, from the Contemporary Review; a very readable and appreciative article on Sir Edwin Landseer, from the pen of Miss Thackeray, Cornhill Magazine; Spanish Life and Character in the Interior, during the Summer of 1873, part III, Macmillan's Magazine; Popular Songs of Tuscany, Fortnightly Review; Lew Gardens, Edinburgh Review; Universal Suffrage, Spectator; Ellis's Life of Count Rumford, Nation; House Martins as Builders, Popular Science Review, etc. These numbers also contain the conclusion of "The Parisians," by Lord Lytton; an instalment of a short story by Anthony Trollope, and parts I and II of a remarkable story, entitled "Far from the Madding Crowd," which is attributed by the London Spectator to George Elliot.

With fifty-two such numbers, of sixty-four large pages each (aggregating over 3005 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low; or still better, for $10, any one of the American $4 magazines is sent with The Living Age for a year. LITTELL & GAY, Boston, Publishers.

——The Chromo given with "Wood's Household Magazine, is a beatiful picture of the celebrated "Yosemite Valley, in California, which has been set apart by Congress, forever, as a National Park. It shows Bridal Veil Falls, 620 feet high, and those immense cloud-capped mountains, hemming in the beautiful valley, traversed by the Merced river, and from which there is ingress and egress only by pack mules and Mexican ponies.

——BIRDIE, and His Fairy Friends, by Margaret T. Canby, is a book for little children, giving Birdies adventures with the fairies, and we fear its tendency to instill into the child's mind too much of superstition, and not enough of the Divine Love. The "fairy tales" are beautiful to children and greatly interest their young minds, but great care should be exercised always feeling that early impressions are the most lasting. (Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger; Philad'a.)

——Merry's Museum, formerly a very popular youth's magazine, was merged with the "Youth's Companion," one year ago, which is now one of the most sprightly and attractive Illustrated weekly papers for the young folks in the country. It is published by Perry, Mason & Co., Boston, Mass., at $1.50 per year.

——"The Centennial," published by H. W. Crotzer, Philadelphia, is an 8 page monthly paper "devoted to the interests of the approaching Anniversary of American Independence, Family Reading and Advertising, at $1.00 per year. It is neatly printed on good paper.

——The new proprietors of Atlantic Monthly, printed an extra edition of the January number, and yet have been obliged to reprint it to supply the demand.

DIGESTION AND DYSPEPSIA. As there has been a number of inquiries in regard to our views of this work, we hesitate not in recommending it as a very excellent work, especially to dyspeptics. For sale at this office at $1.50.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE SUNSHINE OF LOVE ON THE HEART.

BY F. W. SORDAM.

Like raindrops bright on the withering leaf,
Parched through many a day of summer heat,
To the world-weary mortal depressed with grief,
Falls the sweet sunshine of love on the heart.

As the drooping flower by the evening dew,
Awaking bright with the morrow's sun revives,
So by the smile and tone of the heart that's true,
Sadness departs, life's joyous pleasure lives.

Something congenial we were formed to love,
The flowers, plants, trees, the streams and mountains tall;
Animals, birds, the sun, moon and stars above,
Humanity most, and God who made them all.

We were formed to love, yet for love's return,
If not less than human, or perchance divine—
From those beloved we instinctively yearn,
And bereft of sympathy and love repine.

As the voice of the nightingale's warbling,
Rings sweet on the air of his fair native home,
So to the heart sick of loveless wandering,
Does the sweet gentle tone of true love come.

O noble the mission to whom is given—
To humanity dear the labor of those,
Who gifted to love, here make a sweet heaven,
By charming away mortality's woes.

Peaceful the home of love's sweet abiding,
O happy is the heart where true love dwells;
There flowers of contentment and kindness spring,
And purity sweet, with virtue, prevails.

O beam ever brightly thou sunlight divine,
Dispel from the heart the dark shadows of sin,
Till all nation's and climes shall bow at thy shrine,
And peace universal on earth shall reign.

PENITENT.

BY AL. S. THOMPSON.

My heart with care and grief oppressed,
Because of its guilty stains,
Is void of comfort, peace or rest,
And filled with aching pains.

All earth to me seems cold and dark,
As on life's sea I'm tossed;
My soul seems launched on a frail bark,
That's destined to be lost.

My thoughts from Christ seem far alloyed,
And never feel at ease;
There dwells in me an aching void,
Which I cannot appease.

All nature seems to be enshrouded,
Her beauties all have fled;
With tears, my eyes are oft beclouded,
My soul is filled with dread.

From morn till night, I bear this load—
This burden of my grief;
Over this rough and rugged road,
Because of unbelief.

In my pillow there lurks a thorn,
That penetrates my brain;
And causes me with grief to mourn,
In agony and pain.

But Jesus can my load remove,
And fill my soul with joy;
If I but ask him, in his love,
He will my grief destroy.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

(FOR THE PILGRIM.)

PEACE AND HOLINESS.

Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.—Heb. 12: 14.

To have, or to be in perfect peace with all men, is to be very fortunate indeed, and it is the condition of a very rare character only to enjoy it, and the duty as well as the pleasure of a righteous person to "follow" it, to seek it, and to strive for it. "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceable with all men."

Christ Jesus followed peace with all men, not denying the "dogs" of the food which was sent "unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel," yet his enemies cried "away with him." And Pilate, who was not an ignorant man, nor even an impudent man, in relation to things pertaining to his government, endeavored to appease the hatred of the Jews and to warrant to himself the peace and friendship of the world's monarch by delivering up the PRINCE of PEACE to the merciless desires of his enemies. But how long, alas, till the same Pilate who had thus sacrificed his choice, was compelled to rage war against this same people in order to defend the effigies of the Emperor, which were on the ensign. Thus it appears that for a mortal being, moral or truly religious, to follow the principle of peace, then is one thing, and to be at perfect peace with all men is another, and the greatest of all true principles interposes between the two, which is justice. But even now in addition to this beautiful, moral, and indispensable course of life, in order to see the Lord, the apostle says, "and holiness."

The command of the Lord is, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," but to be as holy as God is holy, is also rather to be sought than to be found in this life, for "in my flesh dwelleth no good thing." And when we draw the analogy between "Be ye perfect as your father in Heaven is perfect," and "Charity is the bond of perfectness," then seeing that although charity be obtained, it is at best but the bond, and not imperfectness itself. So with holiness. Christ dwelling in us, ruling and reigning in our hearts and minds, it brings about in our manner of life and all our purposes and desires, an entire consecration to His Holy Being, even blending our minds in the mind of Christ, to please Him in all things, and to "hearken unto God rather than to men," and as Christ died for us, so to die also for Him, which is to deny ourselves of the various lusts of our earthly nature, and to be virtually in possession of that living, working, precious faith once delivered to the saints. And then shall we be governed and guided by Him, and even indeed become "partakers of His divine nature, having escaped the corruptions which are in the world thro' lust."

So man can follow holiness. Then may one even be said to be holy, and that in a Scriptural sense, as we read in the Scriptures of holy men, holy people, and even of holy places, holy mountains, holy temple, and holy sacrifices, &c. These titles however belong to things only, entirely, and that legitimately consecrated to God. And now our text tells us that without these, no man shall see the Lord. Sad thought, that so many think themselves to be holy, claim to be casting out devils in His name, and prophesying and doing many wonderful works, and shall even dare to plead their cases thus at His coming, and shall only have had a form of godliness but in works deny the power thereof. Some having works only and no faith, and some faith only and no works, others having neither, and still others, having both, but alas, having offended in one point, are found guilty of all.

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear;
Who such a strict account must give,
Of our behavior here?"

"And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the sinner and the ungodly (unholy) appear." "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Then take heed lest any should come short of the promise of entering into His rest, and of seeing Him as He is. When He shall come "in the brightness of His glory, every eye shall see him, but when God shall be "all and in all," then the holy only shall see and enjoy Him.

Mirabile, Mo.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DAY OF REST.

Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respects an holy day, or of the new moon, or of Sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.—Col. 2: 16, 17.

The idea cherished in the minds of many that while God in the creation of the world, after He had labored six days and then rested on the seventh, binds man to rest on that day in itself, has no foundation in the Bible. The Mosaic account of the creation is not so sure whether those days were like our days, for we read that only on the fourth day the lights to divide the day from the night were created. True the Lord separated light from darkness and called light day, and darkness night, but who can tell whether that day or night was like ours, as "a day is with the Lord as a thousand years." But certain it is that the Lord rested in the seventh part of the time mentioned in the Bible. "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." Why? Because that man should rest and keep it holy? No; it says, "because that in it God had rested from all his works which God created and made." Gen. 2: 3. It cannot be shown that God ever commanded man to keep one day out of seven holier than the others until the children of Israel were traveling from the land of bondage to the land of Canaan; and prefigures an eternal deliverance from the bondage of satan through Christ the second Moses. And the law there given on Mount Sinai, moral and ceremonial, shadowed forth the good things to come in the gospel dispensation which ended in Christ. Christ is the end of the lay, to all them that believe. Did the Lord ever resume his work again as regards the visible creation? Certainly not. "They the heavens and earth were finished and all the host of them." Hence, I assume the position that the seventh day's rest of the Lord, typifies the millenial rest that remains to the people of God.

We have intimation that a seventh time was observed in days and also in years previous to the Exodus of the children of Israel, but whether in imitation to the Lord's rest in scripture is silent. It is conclusive, however, that no command was given by the Lord to this effect; though nature and justice to man and beast, would require a rest of one part out of seven. However, I have never found a command to man, even not to the descendents of Abraham, the giving of bread from heaven to the children of Israel in the wilderness. Ex. 16, 23. Read the 30th carefully and you will undoubtedly see that the observance of the Sabbath was new to them. For instance, Moses said, "Eat that to day; for to-day is a Sabbath unto the Lord; to-day ye shall not find it in the field." "Six days ye shall gather it but on the seventh day which is the Sabbath in it there shall be none." And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather and they found none." By the expression a Sabbath, and that some went out on the seventh day, it seems to me conclusive that this was the first command of the Lord to man for the keeping of that day called Sabbath. It is remarkable that for twenty-five hundred years after the creation of man there was no command given, and the term Sabbath used for the first time. It is a Hebrew term and here untranslated, but simply means REST.

The idea that is embodied in the term Sabbath the seventh,is enshrouded in ignorance. It is used for days of rest accompanied with feasts whether it occurred on the seventh day or not, and we often in order to distinguish it from a fast day, called the seventh day Sabbath. Now, in the moral law, it is more strictly commanded. In order to remind them of what he had told them shortly before in reference to the gathering for manna and make it positively binding He saith, "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy," including in this command, son, daughter, servants, cattle, and stranger within his gates, and stoning to death was the penalty of violating this command. This was binding to the Israelites only, and continued to be so until they accepted the faith in Christ. The law was the school-master to bring them to Christ. He brought a new covenant, a better one, which supercedes the Jewish covenant. All those who accept Him are under His direction. He has delivered them from the law, and whatever is necessary for the Christian to do is embodied in the New Testament. For the old shadowed for the new, hence the words of our text. Yes, says some the moral law is still binding. I say so too as far as Christ incorporated it into the new. A part he has changed, and part abolished. Hence Paul stands justified in his writings to the Corinthians in his second letter, third chapter, alluding to the moral law written and engraven in stones and abolished, done away in Christ and repeats it three times. Christ says the Son of Man is also Lord of the Sabbath, hence by his death and triumphant resurrection, brought a new era into the world, the redemption of man complete, which is more noble than the creation, hence the Christian keeps an everlasting Sabbath, every day in his life he will keep holy and consecrated to the Lord until he ends in that Sabbath remaining to the people of God. Jesus Christ, the captain of Salvation, gave no commandment concerning the Sabbath day. The divinely inspired writers never hinted a word in regard to the keeping of the Sabbath, neither did they reprove the believers at any time for breaking the Sabbath, rather to the contrary. See our text.

I agree with brother J. H. M., that the Sabbath under the law was never changed to that people unto whom it was given so long as they do not believe in Christ; but if we have put on Christ, the substance of the symbol, we should, yes, we must leave the shadow and cleave to the body of Christ. But one point our brother overlooked which I claim to correct, which is, that the term Sabbath is not found in the Bible for the first day of the week. If he means in King James' translation I have nothing to say against it, but if he hath allusion to the Sacred writing, I find the term in Greek, [Sabbathon] five times at least in the New Testament, Matt. 28 : 1, Mark 16 : 9, John 20 : 10, Acts 20 : 7, 1 Cor. 19 : 2 ; in all those places Luther translates Sabbath, and correctly too, according to the Greek copies, but as said before, it is a Hebrew term, and simply means rest. Hence if we keep the Lord's day, or the day in which our Lord rose from the dead a day of rest from our labors, and have chiefly our service on that day, we are justified in the strict meaning of that term (Sabbath,) and say nature and justice requires now, as well as before the giving of the law, that we as well as our beast of burden, should rest one day out of seven, though the Christian's law does not strictly command us to do so. There must be an order, and if disunited in that order, confusion is engendered and the people will not prosper. The temporal powers in all the Christian countries have very wisely adopted the Lord's day as a day of rest, and more particularly for the worship of God, and set a penalty upon violating it. This alone is sufficient for us to keep it inviolate, for we are commanded to be subject to the higher powers, and subject ourselves to fall into its judgment, when no positive command is against its requirements. Let me here observe that every day in the week is kept as a Sabbath by one nation or the other, and each government requires that day under penalty to be kept. For instance, Christians 1 day, Greeks 2 day, Persians 3 day, Assyrians 4 day, Egyptians 5 day,and Jews 7 days, and I believe each are justified in doing so providing they keep strictly the seventh day according to the demands of their laws. But from the resurrection of Christ, which occurred on the first day of the week according to divine testimony, we have all reason to believe that the followers of Christ soon after that time, in honor to their risen Savior. He after his resurrection repeatedly appeared to his disciples on that day, and on the first day of the week the Holy Ghost descended upon the apostles, and for the first time, preached the Gospel in its fullness with the resurrection of Christ from the dead. On that day the disciples came together to break bread, and John, the revelator, was in the spirit on the Lord's day. Notwithstanding all this, the Judaizing Christians were still wedded to the law, and some undoubtingly kept for awhile the seventh day, Sabbath, with other ceremonies, and were consciencious, hence demanded the Gentile Christians to observe those things mentioned in our text. Barnabas in his letter to a certain Church, saith in reference to the abolition of the Mosaic law, your new moons and Sabbaths I delight in, as I have made them ; in which I have rested and made new in the beginning of the eighth day which is a commencement of a new world. Therefore we celebrate the eighth day with joy in which Jesus arose from the dead. Chapter 11 : 13-14-15. Barnabas was Paul's partner. Again Ignaties to the Church at Magnesia, writes, "Because we do not live according to old works, we come in possession of a new hope, we do no more keep the Sabbath, but live in keeping the Lord's day, through whom our life is resurrected by Himself and through His death." Ign. 4th letter 9th chapter, 1, 2, 3.

LEONARD FURRY.

AN EARNEST CALL.

HELP NEEDED.

Dear Pilgrim:—The emigration of the Mennonites from Russia for conscience sake, brings the question of religious toleration, and especially that of the non-resistant Churches, in a very forcible manner before the mind of every non-resistant Christian. And as all non resistant Churches are deeply interested in this important matter, we feel no hesitation to appeal to them for assistance in aiding our brethren, who with the loss of all their property in many cases, and in others without any means to defray the expenses of the journey, are compelled to leave their native land or give up their faith. Should any feel prompted to contribute a mite by the reading of the enclosed article, (Earnest call for Help,) it will be received with the deepest gratitude.

JOHN F. FUNK.

Elkhart, Ind.

"Those that are in distress lead thou into thy house * * * and hide not thyself from thine own flesh." German translation from Is. 58 : 7.

Thus calls the prophet to those in his day, in view of the distress brought upon both the innocent and guilty, by the weakness and imperfections of the race, and appeals earnestly for help to all those who have it in their power to assist in relieving them, as far as human aid is able to relieve. The same Spirit which put these words into the mouth of the prophet, prompted Paul, when in the days of the new dispensation, he says, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." And what Jehovah required of the people of his Covenant, the Maker of that Covenant also exhorts his faithful followers to observe in his new commandment of love. And truly opportunities to such works of love are not wanting in our day. Calls for aid to the distressed add the alleviation of human misery, stands at the door of every friend of humanity.

To set forth one of these scenes of sorrow and distress, and give further opportunity for the manifestation of that faith which worketh by love, is the purpose of these lines. If the kind reader will go with us a short time, we will take him beyond the shores of America, across the wide ocean, through strange lands, into a land that is now engaged in the effort of adopting new laws and government regulations—Russia.

In a southern part of this country there are a number of Mennonite colonies, which to the casual observer do not at all appear to be in a distressed condition. Friend William Hepseler, the Canadian Commissioner of emigration, who visited these colonies in the Summer of 1872, indeed made the remark, as he beheld the beautiful, regularly built villages, with their magnificent farms, gardens, orchards and groves surrounding them, that a colony so beautiful, and upon such a scale was not to be found neither in Europe nor America, and yet at this time there is great distress there, for the new laws of Russia take away from our brethren in the faith there, the privileges which less than one 100 years ago, were guaranteed to their fathers forever, who came from Prussia into Russia, upon special invitation, to settle where they should be permitted to enjoy the fullest religious freedom, and be enabled to maintain their future existence as non-resistant Christians. If now our brethren desire not to trample carelessly under feet this treasure, the principles of our faith, the doctrines of non-resistance, which our forefathers purchased with their own blood, and transmitted to our care and preservation, they must after the manner of our forefathers, take their staff in hand and exchange the land, which no longer bear them with their religious peculiarities, for another.

But not only are the peculiar religious institutions of our brethren in Russia, in danger, but also their nationality, their Germanism, language, &c., for it is unmistakably the purpose of the reform movement in Russia, if possible, to merge every foreign element into their own Russian nationality, speaking the same language and following the same religion. Under these circumstances, what could be more natural than that those brethren in Europe who have been looking for an asylum of peace, should look towards free America, as the most suitable place for them, where the Mennonite also may live in peace side by side with those of other denominations, in the full enjoyment of his religious sentiments?

But the greatest difficulty with which the brethren there have to contend, are the two questions, How shall we be released and made free from Russia? And how shall we get to America?

For the brethren to become free and disengaged from Russia is a very difficult matter, since the Russian government, to further her own interests, seeks in every possible way to hinder and retard the emigration of the Mennonites, though according to the Imperial Manifest of the 16th of June, 1871, in which full liberty to emigration was given during ten years from date, the government cannot entirely prohibit the brethren from leaving during the next six years. She seeks to hinder them from going, because she knows how great a loss she sustains by allowing a part of her best farmers to leave the country, and that thereby the agricultural, commercial and manufacturing interests of Southern Russia will suffer a very important loss. One cause of the great difficulty, is the emigration of the Mennonites, is the fact that the Mennonite colonies are settled in districts which are occupied by Mennonites only and belong exclusively to them alone, so that their farms cannot be sold to outside parties, but only transferred to persons belonging to the same church. It is now however reported that the next few years this restriction will be removed, but the question then arises, Who shall buy the farms of the Mennonites? The native Russian cannot purchase it, because he does not understand how to cultivate it; and why should he? The Mennonites will, finally, after all, leave their farms in Russia, and after they move away their farms can be had almost for a gift. Some of the brethren who propose to come to America the coming Spring, have already sold farms, worth $5000 and $6000 for $2000 and even for $1000. If we consider then that all the farm buildings in those colonies had to be built according to a plan determined by law, without any regard as to the means of the builder, and that in consequence of this, many of the colonists live in fine houses for which they are largely in debt, so that the occupant often is worth not more than half or a quarter of the value of the property in his possession, it may by plainly seen that the Mennonites, in breaking up and leaving the country, will be compelled to sacrifice nearly all they have, so that they may indeed with the deepest anxiety inquire, How shall we be able to get away? The circumstances of the churches in Poland, and several in the government of Ekatarinoslaw, are especially unfavorable in this respect. And in addition to all this, it is with great difficulty, with the loss of much time and heavy expenses that they are enabled to obtain the necessary passes by which they will be permitted to cross the Russian lines.

From the foregoing the second question presents itself, How shall we be able to get to America, if there are no means to pay the expenses? To answer this question practically, the Mennonites of America have already commenced. They have appointed Aid Committees,—from which the Mennonite Board of Guardians has been formed. The duty of this Board is to receive the means collected for the aid of the needy European brethren in the faith, on their journey and apply them properly to the purpose for which they are designed. (On this subject, which has a number of times been presented in the Herald of Truth and the Mennonitische Friedensbote, the circulars No. 1 and 2, issued by the Board in December and January respectively, give more special information. Copies of these circulars will be sent to all who desire it by addressing the Secretary of the Board.)

But as this work in order to make it sufficient for the necessity of the case, will require a very large sum of money, as we expect, at least, 1000 families of these Russian Mennonites to come to America early in the Spring, and as the money reported and designed to be given as a free gift, will not, by any means, be sufficient, certain amounts have already been reported, which the donors have designed to be loaned to the needy Russian Mennonites. (We remark here that the Russian Mennonites prefer to accept this aid as a loan, to taking it as a gift.) But that the Board of Guardians may, with any degree of certainty, be able to accomplish the work which they have in view, a large amount of money to be given as a loan, will still be needed, and this is the object of this address to all the brethren in the faith, and to all "cheerful givers," 2 Cor. 9 : 7; to appeal to them and invite them earnestly to take part with us in the work. The receipt of all moneys given to this aid, whether as a free gift, or a loan, will be acknowledged by the Treasurer, John F. Funk, of Elkhart, Indiana. According to the decisions of our Board the money to be loaned, alone, will be applied to cover the expense of the passage across the Ocean, while that given as a free gift will be given to those who need aid to prosecute their journey from New York to the West, or otherwise after their arrival.

In order that those who wish to give to this cause larger sums as loans, may have the assurance of a sufficient guarantee that the money will in due time be paid back again, we here add Article 8. of the decisions of the Board of Jan. 2d 1874. *

Should those however who interest themselves in this cause, prefer to appoint committees of their own, aside from those already appointed, for the purpose of being able to carry forward this work with greater facility, we shall gladly receive such committees, and cordially invite them to co-operate with us, as already declared in article 6 of the decisions of the Board of Jan. 2d.

In conclusion, we wish and pray that God, who is the giver of every good and perfect gift, may add His rich blessing to this call for aid and to our whole work, so that many may be found who with open hands and willing hearts will lay hold thereof and help us to bring our brethren, who are in great distress in a foreign country to us, into our own land to enjoy the inestimable privileges of peace and religious freedom

Principal Director, Chr. Krehbiel.
Secretary, David Goerz.
Treasurer, John F. Funk.
Business Agent, Warkentin.

P. S. Those who prefer to give to this cause as a free gift, are cordially invited to do so. Both loans and free gifts are acceptable.. But since we need a large sum, we believe that we can get the necessary means together more readily by loans than by gifts. Address Mennonite Board & Guardians, Somerfild, Ill.

* For the purpose of more easily keeping accounts of money loaned, we have temporarily adopted the following plan: Each Church is requested to send in to the treasurer, the amount collected in accordand with the plan given, if possible, as one sum total from the Church, when each individual sum given amounts to less than $100.00. Individual members, however, who give $100, or over, may send the amount individually. In this way, the account of receipts will be easily kept; and the manner of paying back the money simplified as follows: Every needy European brother, landing at New York, presents to our Business Agent his certificate properly authenticated by the Bishop and Ministers of the church to which he belonged in Europe; which certificate not only gives him the right to claim assistance, but also at the same time makes the church, represented by her bishop and ministers, who have signed the certificate, responsible for the payment of the amount of aid needed by the bearer of the certificate. These certificates will be signed by the Director and Secretary of our Board, and will be sent from here to Europe, and at no time will be than the number of fares for which the treasurer has means to pay.

Upon presentation of such certificates, filled out in Europe, our Business Agent in New York will allow the sum needed from the fund on hand; and the receiver thereof signs a note prepared for this purpose, to which will be attached as security for the payment of the same, the certificate brought with him from Europe. The Board of Guardians will annually distribute these notes to the churches which advanced the the money, as legal notes which must be paid by the parties whose signatures they bear. The holders of these notes have no claim upon the committee, but upon the makers and sureties themselves. (The sureties are, according to the certificates, the European church to which the receiver of the aid belongs, represented by the Bishop and ministers whose signatures the certificate bears.)

By giving those notes, made in New York, to the representatives* of the several churches, instead of to each individual, who may only have given a small sum. the keeping of the accounts of the committee will be much less burdensome and greatly simplified. It seems best to send small sums to the Treasurer of the Board, through the representatives of the church, while for amounts of $100.00 and over individual notes may be given. More special information will be given on this subject when required.

(9) The business office of the Board of Guardians is in Summerfield, Ill., where all the business of the Board will be transacted.

THE GREAT CONFERENCE.

While Elder C. G. Lint labored for us, we, I think, were all made to feel well satisfied with the crumbs that fell from the Master's table. Especially during his last sermon was I wrapt up in meditations, and ever since has my mind been feasting upon those things the good Lord has so graciously delivered and presented to us through his servant. The subject of the last sermon was the transfigration of Christ, the Savior. As the subject was opened, my mind immediately cooperated with that of the speaker's, and seemed as a linked chain to move on throughout the entire discourse. Our minds are somewhat congenial, and through the instrumentality of a higher power we soared aloft. When the Savior took Peter, James, and John into the mountain apart, we at once took great interest and followed them. As we beheld them there in solitude, the Savior bowed in prayer. What Submissiveness and what solemnity ! His countenance became attered; a flood of light burst upon him—Effulgence upon Effulgence—untill the splendor of his face reached the brightness of the luminary above us ! His raiment became white as light—shining exceeding white as snow, "so as no fuller on earth can white them ! O, what a transfiguration, what glory, WHAT MAGISTY ! As we beheld with awe and great emotion of spirit there appeared Moses and Elias talking with Him. Hear, O earth, this great conference, this solemn consultation ! How momentous and grave that subject ! A subject that during its transpiration enshrouded the earth in darkness caused it to tremble, the rocks to rent, and the graves to open, out of which "many bodies of the saints which slept, arose." "The sun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom." But to what extent they discoursed upon the decease of the Lord of life and glory" we are not permitted to know. No wonder Peter felt good to be there where he beheld that solemn and glorified assembly. We confess that we felt very good to be there in spirit. We felt as a privileged guest, and thank God, that through the mind's eye and through the faith and spirit of the adopted children of God, as dear children ! we were permitted to accompany this company and behold one of the most interesting, most beautiful, and most grand and sublime scenes. It was beatific within itself ! was admission to heavenly honors ! O how blissful, how happy we felt! There, as the representations of three great dispensations, were they talking with each other. Moses, as the representation of the mosaical dispensation. Elias, as that of the prophetical, and Christ, as that of the Christian dispensation. As they were thus conversing, Peter, and those with him, became heavy with sleep; they are thrown into a stupor; they sleep, they are unconscious. Dead to the scene and the things, that transpire around them. Now they awake suddenly. How steady they look ! they gaze! Are they dreaming? No! It is a reality ! Christ, their Lord and Master, glorified before them, and two men standing with him ? Men who long ago, have gone the way of all the earth ? Here upon this mount with their Lord ? Their eyes become dazzled with the splendor before them, their minds, become bewildered, confused, reeling in admiration and in happiness. "Lord," exclaims Peter, "It is good for us to be here. If thou wilt, let us here make three tabernacles ; one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." Keep quiet Peter, you know not what you say ; the Omnipotence of God has over come you ; you know not what your requests are ; you are sore afraid ; God moves on your heart ; you know nothing of the meaning, of your expression ; your requests are not admissible ; they cannot be granted ! Cast your eyes above ; do you see that bright cloud approaching ? Ah! tremble now and fall to the ground. Hark ! Do you hear that ? Let the Almighty now speak, let Him make known His disire ; and, O earth, keep silence for thy mighty Creator moves upon thy mount in excellent glory ; and in tones, unmistakable, makes known his wishes ! "This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased hear YE HIM." Did I not long ago, in ages past, proclaim to the world through Moses, the one who had just been in your presence, that a "prophet will I raise up unto you, him shall ye hear in all things he saith unto you ? Yes, Peter, this beloved son is now that prophet, hear him ; do his bidding, follow him ; tread in his footsteps ; entrust yourself into his care ; cleave to him ; learn of him ; and ever be ready to be filled with instructions he giveth you for they rear unto you, if obeyed, "a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Moses cannot give you the words of eternal life ; neither can Elias. Did I not tell you, "the law and the prophets were untill John ?" And did you not hear Him that is John preach repentance, because the Kingdom of heaven is at hand ? That time when the people just emerged from great darkness to that marvelous light ; that light which sprung up and enlightened those who sat in the region and shadow of death. It is that light which you have experienced and prompted you to make the confession, "thou hast the words of eternal life." And it was the light which urged you to make the emphatic declaration," Thou art the Christ the son of the living God." The Savior now steps forth, touches them, and in compassionate tones tells them to "arise, and be not afraid," As they raise up and cast their eyes about them, they beheld no one now "save Jesus only" though they had been dazzled with great splendor and had been overshadowed with a bright cloud ; all has now vanished. "Let us now go down. But tell the vision to no man, untill the son of man be risen again from the dead," Thus were we permitted to follow that little company, and suffered to witness things, that transpired there, until we forgot self ; and in the spirit we found ourself sitting in heavenly places, feasting on heavenly food, and drinking of the waters of life freely. While we were filled with these heavenly meditations, we felt favored very highly, and experienced heaven upon earth. But as we beheld that little christian band retrace their steps, a dark cloud instead of a bright one overshadowed us ; and we mourned. We looked upon the earth and with much sorrow saw that darkness ; yea gross darkness covers the land. The world loves darkness rather than light, because his deeds are evil. Many wolves in sheepskin clothing, point to traditions of men, negative the word of God, and establish a great abomination which maketh desolate. Heresies of the most lamentable and destructive nature are thus established ; ever denying the Lord that bought them ; claiming infalibility, the right to change the word of God and thus dictate to an allwise God. The truth is evil spoken of; and through covetousness, with faigned words, make merchandise of men's souls. Notwithstanding Peter, and all the holy men of old, so strongly vindicate to their Lord and Master. They point us to Jesus as the only Lawgiver, and possessing alone the words of eternal life.

My fellow christians, let us ever make good use of the key, (the new Testament Scripture,) to open the treasures of heaven, for it will finally lead to the paradise above.

MINISTERS are to a congregation what the eyes and ears are to man. Take them away, and there is but little accomplished. It is therefore the special duty of the Church to see that her ministers are kept in the best possible condition for ministerial service. Like all other things they are liable to wear out, when too much is laid upon them, and all should be very careful and not burden the ministers too heavily with temporal matters, that they may be the better prepared to accomplish that for which they are particularly intended. If you require them to spend their time and money in order to sow unto you spiritual things, think it not strange if they partake of your carnal things. Do unto others as you would that they should do to you.—J H Moore

Take care to be more taken up with the thought of God than of yourself. Use no forced labor to raise a particular frame, nor tire, fret, nor grow impatient if you have no comfort ; but meekly acquiesce, and confess yourself unworthy of it.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., Feb. 17, 1874.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

—The obituary of Eld. Henry Kurtz was unavoidably lost and only was found in time for this issue. We ask the pardon of the friends of the deceased, for so long a delay.

—From the different branches of the Church, we are receiving quite encouraging news in regard to its prosperity. There seems to be a general interest gotten up throughout the Brotherhood, and greater efforts are being made to bring souls to Christ than heretofore.

—Through the instrumentality of Mr. Place, book agent and general canvasser of this place, we succeeded in raising a circulation of about seventy copies of the Pilgrim among our citizens. This is quite as much as we expected, and feel to tender our thanks for their patronage, hoping that while they thus extend their sympathies towards us financially, we may in return give that which is spiritual and divine.

—A number of our agents complain that we are not careful enough in booking names. That we do make some mistakes is evident, but the trouble is not all with us as we have learned by referring to our lists. We would here say to our agents, be sure that you do not miss some of the names in transcribing your lists.

We have examined the lists sent us for the names that is claimed was sent and we could not find them, so we conclude that they were either missed by the agent or did not reach us. We wish it understood that we are making every effort to have the Pilgrim reach every subscriber, and therefore ask the exercising of a little patience towards us.

—We hope our patrons will make every effort to introduce the Pilgrim in places where the brethren have but a limited knowledge of it. Our ministers when travelling, by a little effort can do a good work for us. Please speak a good word for the Pilgrim as you pass along. A good word may do much to increase its circulation, and we hope be the means of doing some good. If there are any who are enough interested to distribute specimen copies while traveling at places where they might be appreciated, we will gladly supply them. Brethren please think of the good cause and do for us what you can.

—The Pilgrim Almanac. There has been repeated demands made upon us to offer the Pilgrim Almanac for sale, but we did not wish to do so until our patrons were first supplied. As our edition was large, we can still supply all new subscribers free and sell a limited number. We will sell them on the following terms: Single copy, 10 cents; 6 copies, 40 cents; 12 copies, 60 cents. We make this offer because there are many who wish both Almanacs but do not care to take both papers. Address

Pilgrim Office.
Box 172, Huntingdon, Pa.

—Subscribers are still coming in quite encouragingly. If all our agents and friends continue to labor for us our circulation will be largely increased, notwithstanding the panic seemed to be against us. Perseverence is the secret of success, and has done much for us and may still do much more. If all who are interested in our enterprise or the cause for which we are laboring, would go to work with a determination, we feel sure that one thousand subscribers could be secured in two weeks. We have some 600 single subscribers. These, on an average could get one subscriber each, and our regular agents could just as easily raise the 400. Brethren, will you try it? You cannot be engaged in a better work than in aiding to spread the Gospel, and this is a work in which you all can have a part. We need your sympathy, your prayers and your support. Please let us have it, and to God be the praise.

KEEP US SUPPLIED.

Everybody wants the Pilgrim made as interesting as possible. This is a very laudible desire, but it is not carried quite far enough. If all will go to work and help make it such, their desires can be granted. All prefer to read the news of other churches in preference to that of their own, but unless each one gives his own report others cannot read it. Let us have the additions to the Church in your own district, the deaths, the marriages, the ministers elected and advanced, the new churches built and all other items of general importance. We also desire a good supply of religious essays, such as are calculated to instruct, encourage, convince and convert the world. Our periodicals are the best missionaries that we have, therefore, let us gird them with a power that the powers of darkness cannot withstand. We are succeeding better than ever in getting a circulation outside of our own borders and we want our contributors to bear this in mind. We want to preach "the word," good sound doctrine, avoiding petty personalities, and the discussion of all subjects that may have a tendency to set the cause we are advocating in an unfavorable light before the world.

FOR THE POOR THE GOSPEL IS PREACHED.

"To the poor the gospel is preached."

The sun of the Baptist's glory had passed beyond its meridian power and was already being overshadowed by the greater light of which he was the forerunner. Of this, he told his ever anxious and admiring hearers "He must increase but I must decrease." What the Baptist's highest expectatoos were, is for us to conjecture in part, and part is revealed. That he had a jewish conception of the coming King seems evident from his actions and expectations.

He had faithfully delivered the great message. He saw, he believed and then doubted. He saw the wondering multitudes resort to hear his message and receive his baptism, he saw the Prine of Peace coming down the banks of the Jordan, and there receive the initiatory rite under his hands; he saw the heavens opened and the spirit descend and give the promised testimony. "This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased."

He believed and afterwards pointed his disciples to Him as the Lamb of God that taketh away sin—but now comes the test—the cloud of fire grows dimmer and sinks lower. The wandering crowds run after another, he decreases—is cast in prison. How strange! The great King has come, Israel's glory has at last arrived, but where the prophet--where the Elijah? In prison! How disappointed he must have been in the result of the coming of the King and Kingdom! At first perhaps he thought it was only an interval of preparation, and as soon as the new Kingdom would be established, Christ would assume His Kingly power and the captive would then go free. Days, weeks and even months pass away and yet he hears no cheering reports, but perhaps contra-wise, he becomes impatient, and delegates two of his disciples to go and inquire: "Art thou He that should come or do we look for another?" Why ask such a question? Did he not see the unmistakable evidence of His Kingdom, and did he not point Him out as the Lamb of God? There was evidently a misconceptioo of the nature of the Kingdom to be established. Art thou truly the King, or do we look for another to come and re-establish our Kingdom? No doubt this was a serious question to put to the Master whose sympathies flowed out, not only to his friends, but even his enemies were subjects of his tender mercy. We may well imagine that it was a difficult matter to determine on an answer to be sent to an inquiry of this kind, to answer it truly, and at the same time drop a word of hope to revive his drooping spirit.

"Go and show him again the things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up and the poor have the gospel preached to them." The blind seeing, the lame walking, the deaf hearing and the leper being cleansed, were all wonderful works and might go far towards confirming the doubting Baptist that he was not mistaken in the man, but these were all miracles that did not directly concern his circumstances. These things, though good enough in design, could never restore Israel; but when the tidings came, that to the poor the gospel is preached, he saw what perhaps we fail to see. In his preaching he already saw something that spoke ill for the promised Kingdom. He then learned that not many of the high, the rich and the noble were ready to receive the tidings, but with wagging heads and blinking eyes, the scribes, pharisees and hypocrites came as a generatioo of vipers. Their ever exacting greed had called them forth and when they saw the Baptist's sweeping power, they were ready to receive the formal rite and thus purchase for themselves good positions and high seats in the new order, but the poor came with purer and higher motives. They felt the power of sin and the pressure of the bands which the upper class had tied around them and were anxiously waiting this time for deliverance. If to these the gospel would be preached, he saw thousands of anxious souls ready to accept the glad tidings of great joy. These tidings were more strange to the wondering captive than the working of miracles. Such evidence was never before presented to establish the character of a teacher. He had heard of great men who endeavored to introduce new theories, but they were always for the rich, the high and the noble. Their missions were to men of distinction who had the time and inclination to seek after such things. Athenian like, seeking after the rare and new, but to the poor, this was the opening bud of a new life. It was bringing joy and gladness to his own class, which, when once organized, would constitute an element different to that which was then holding him captive. As Queen Esther was unhappy in her exalted position, because her brethren were to be destroyed, so was the Baptist, in his degraded and suffering condition, made to rejoice at the good news that to them, the Gospel was to be preached. If such news was intended to gladden the heart of the Baptist because his brethren in position were to have the Gospel preached to them, how should we poor sinners rejoice and thank God, when we have the blessed assurance that we are the poor to whom this message of salvation is to be delivered?

Let the feeble knees be strengthened, the desponding heart be gladdened, the needy and the hungry be encouraged, for to them the gospel is preached, salvation is proclaimed, and the bread of life in all its fullness offered.

It is truly inconvenient and sometimes appears distressing, to be poor in this world's goods, but when we consider our span of probation and that in our poverty we can gain for us an eternal mansion in heaven, we have every reason to thank God and take courage.

Then go dear brother, go dear sister and tell the poor captives that are now confined in the prison of satan, what Jesus has done, go tell them that the blind see, the deaf hear, the lame walk, the chains of hell are broken, the jubilee is come, and that to the poor the gospel is preached.

EPISTLE OF LOVE TO THE CHURCH IN FAYETTE CO. W. VA.

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us by his love unto a lively hope through the one faith delivered unto us whereby we expect salvation, love, grace and peace be multiplied among you, who dwell in Fayette Co., W. Va., and the region round about, unto whom this epistle may come, from one who in former times did minister in Word unto you as God gave grace, and who was administered to in need, through love but now dwelleth in a distant land, far separated in body but nigh in spirit through a zeal for the prosperity of Zion in the borders of that land. Hopes and fears, joys and sorrows were mingled together in the last cup we drank in the day and hour of our departure. Hopes that all would work together for our good bid me go in accordance with a chain of circumstances that opened around us, in which the hand of an Allwise Providedce was seen. It was predicted that if there be one watchman less the foes of the Church would make a more desperate effort to tarnish her name. Knowing the deceitfulness of satan we did harbor some such fears, but at the remembrance that it is written the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Church of God, and they that put their trust in God shall not be confounded, we had occasion to calm our fears, believing as we do, young David's armor will ever fit those that trust in God and fear not man, tho' he come as a giant of the Philistines. The hirelings of satan, as we learn, has not been idle, as proud boasters, presomptuous persecutors, and with hearts of malice, they would defy the children of God and do violence to the Truth. Even slander with her tongue of iniquity cometh forth to ride upon the wings of the wind. But the mouths of all must be stopped. The naked simple truth handled in the strength of God's might as manifest in the workings of the Holy Ghost, will gag them eventually to all eternity! Beloved, then truly believe in God, put your dependence in Him, trust Him in all things, and the cause of the Lord of hosts shall prosper.

In the many manifestations of love in the day of trial, we rejoice to know there is power in the Christian religion; how else could there be such tender ties woven in the human heart? Oh, the wonders of that love that has its center in a crucified Redeemer! The object of our love the same, no marvel if in Christ we are all one, and shall ever be one while there is virtue in the blood of Christ and power in Faith. We were no strangers to sorrow in that day; it had its place in the heart, but such sorrow only as cometh in separating from dear ones on earth. We took our departure with a fond hope we shall meet again and drink of that fountain that flows from the depths of love. Such love is a characteristic of the love of Jesus. While absent in body let us all be up and doing the work we have to do while it is called to-day. All have a work to do. Oh my beloved in the bowels of mercy and love, watch and pray, perilous times are coming. You may think you have opposing elements to contend with too severe to overcome, but forget not the weapons of your warfare are tempered by God, the hand of Divinity has shaped them and his power accompanies them ever on to victory. Here we have our open and avowed enemy that poisons the very air in which he moves; his name is infidelity. If here the Lord will give power to this word even this boasting enemy must fall in the grave with Tom Payne.

In conclusion we will say to you, ministers and deacons, ordained of God to minister in the Church, we must all stand before God, there to render a just account for our stewardship here, then how important we be mindful of our duties. Shall one poor soul, precious in the sight of God, be lost at that great day, that might otherwise have been saved had we all done our duty? Labor for union and love here that there may be union and love with us all in Heaven. And the members of the body of Christ,—saints of God—heirs of Heaven, O how we travel in anxiety and hope that you may all stand firm, be not moved by every fleeting breath that would wean you from the love of God. Children, begotten of the same Father, and breathing the same atmosphere of Divine love, shall we ever become estranged from each other? God forbid. We have worshipped together, prayed and sang together,—yes, and wept together here in this vale of tears. Shall not that same love more perfectly and in a more endearing manner unite us together in Heaven? Yes, there we will sing together in the strains of heavenly melody, but no tears, ah, no! No tears will be shed there. Oh the joys of that happy land! Some have gone on before, "the gate is open," others are waiting soon to enter Brethren and, sisters, you all will go over by and by; we too, hope to go the narrow way and meet the beloved there. May the grace of God and spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, now and forever.

J. S. FLORY.

Buffalo, Colorado.

Bro. Brumbaugh: Having occasion to write to you, I will also give a few tho'ts from this arm of the Church, not having noticed any correspondence from any of the members in relation to a series of meetings we had in the Perry Church, which includes the west parts of Perry and Juniati counties.

According to previous arrangements with brethren D. P. Sayler and J. D. Trostle of Maryland, Bro. Sayler came to us Nov, 29th, and Bro. Trostle a few days after. They labored with us about three weeks at three different points, with much edification and encouragement to the church, and the advancement of the cause of Christ. While they were with us eight souls became willing to put on Christ, and were immersed rejoicing in God their Savior and are now zealously engaged in the Master's cause. Since, one has been added, and we believe many more are seriously counting the cost, and will, ere long, get the consent of their minds, put on Christ, casting their lot with the people of God.

When we revert back to those seasons and feasts of fat things, when these veterans and standard bearers were amongst us, we feel to take fresh courage. It is indeed cheering when the old primitive landmarks are held forth in their native simplicity and purity. The result will only be fully known and realized when we will be separated from this earthly house of our tabernacle. We might say much by way of encouragement to those brethren about their late visit to us, but we saw several letters of correspondence which we think will suffice and answer that end fully.

THE PILGRIM AND COMPANION.

We are pleased to hear that the prospects of an increased circulation of the PILGRIM are so flattering and hope they may be realized. There is work enough in the world for the PILGRIM and Companion and the Church ought to support them both without any thought of consolidation. Let those who do not feel able to take both papers, take the one they prefer, but those who have the means should take both and do all they can to increase their circulation. One pleasant feature of our papers is, giving names of contributors, thus giving a personal interest to the composition. It is most interesting to hear from those whom we have known and from whom we are now separated. It is the duty of christian parents to provide good reading matter for their children. Young people will read something and if parents are not careful to select good books and papers for them they will read anything they can get, from the dime novel to the refined skepticism of some of our popular monthlies. There are many ways and means by which young people are led astray, but the most successful agency of the enemy of souls is the corrupt literature of the present day.

Let the brethren then use every means to increase the circulation of our church papers for they can be an influence for good. Many will read a good paper who do not read religious books Editors should not speak favorably, in their book notices neither should they advertise books or magazines that are tending toward infidelity. If we are consistent we should not recommend literature we would not like to place in the hands of our young children.

There are some old brethren here who are not miserly, who give liberally and never turn a deaf ear to the cry of the needy, who can not see the propriety of subscribing to the papers, since when they were young there were no papers published by the Brethren. They had their Bibles and in childlike simplicity they accepted and tried to practice its teaching. These papers they think are an innovation in the church. They are sincere in their opposition to all new things. With such, Editors should reason respectfully and present their claims with deference, and if we say their motive for refusal is covetousness, we have not that charity which "thinketh no evil."

BARBARA SNOEBERGER.

New Enterprise, Pa.

Dear Editor Pilgrim: Enclosed you will find some additional names to our club for the PILGRIM. We are glad to be able to say, that its patrons with us, are well pleased with its contents thus far for the new year, especially is its type adapted to the wents of our old brethren and sisters, and our humble prayer is, that it may continue such, for our periodicals have much to do in moulding peace, love and union in the Church, and may I not say its growth also?

We have recently been much encouraged by the zealous labors of bro. H. D. Davy during a brief series of meetings with us. We feel that Zion's borders were strengthened, if not enlarged. Our congregation became visibly dotted with a Felix, a Jailor, and may I not say that we had the Penteeostians with us also? However we had no additions. The only possible reason visible to us, brother D. P. Sayler very clearly words in the notes of his travels on a recent visit to Pa., "As the brethren always do when their work is just begun, they go off and leave it." Will not our dear brethren seek to correct this prevailing error?

Our last morning meeting was improved by the subject of Church government, and with it came the train of peculiarities to which the Church desires her members to be subject, and John Wesley affirms that both reason and revelation teach the doctrine. I, like Paul, was led to "thank God and take courage," on seeing the minds of our younger brethren so favorably wrought upon relative to the subject. May the Lord prosper the work with us, is the prayer of your humble servant.

CHURCH NEWS.

I left my home on the 24th of January, and went to Mansfield. There I met with Bro. Christian Wise, and he accompanied me to Bro. Samuel Martins. Bro. Wise remained there, and Bro. McMullen accompanied me two miles further to their meeting-house in Richland Congregation. A good turn out for the weather, had quite an interesting meeting. The next day (Sabbath) met at the usual hour, a good audience and good order. In the evening we met again, the congregation still increased with unusual attention, so much so that I felt that I should remain longer and the members were very anxious, but I had arranged my business so that duty called me home, and one of my children was not well. At these meetings I labored earnestly and felt that the Lord was present, and the members felt so awakened to duty that their own laborers, concluded to continue the meetings a few days. May the Lord bless the efforts made for the good of souls.

I again left my home on the 31st of January, and travelled about 12 miles in an open buggy, roads rough; arrived about dusk at friend Wm. Dannal's where I received kind attention; went a few rods to the meeting-house and met a good congregation. The brethren had been holding meeting from the 29th till that time, and when I entered the house the members were cheered up; and the congregation having been impressed with what they had heard, appeared willing to learn the ways of the Lord; therefore all was quiet and the brethren and sisters I have no doubt were earnestly engaged in prayer, and my feelings were, by a sense of duty, to labor and by the assistance of the Lord, labor was easy; the order and attention, seldom surpassed. Subject Matt. 25 in part 2 first parables.

Sabbath A. M. Subject 1 John 4: I. "Try the Spirits." The Lord being present his assistance was felt, and many hearts appeared to be touched. Order was the motto, and when the congregation was dismissed the people appeared loth to leave, and as I stepped from the stand one came with a broken contrite heart and extended his hand to me and said he wished to enter the Church by baptism. Then that joy that attends such occasions filled the members hearts and many wept for joy, while no doubt the angels of heaven rejoiced. We made ready and went to the water where I baptized him in the presence of many. We met again in the eveoing and I spoke from the latter part of the 28th chapter of Matthew, to a large and very attentive congregation; and during the services I saw many expressions of joy, while some was impressed that all was not well with them. Met on Monday, a. m., had a very interesting meeting, the members were much built up. I took my leave of several of them, went home with Bro. Wm. Daneell, took dinner and oear 2 o'clock started for home; left all their ministers at their posts like faithful soldiers to continue their meetings, arrived at my home 20 minutes before 7 o'clock, found all well, thanked the Lord for the same.

I wanted for nothing to make me comfortable while there; all went to show that that love which belongs to Christians was among the brethren and sisters. May the good Lord bless them and their neighbors with the congregation that met with us; and may they live faithful so that if we never meet on earth, we may in heaven where sickness, sorrow, pain nor death never enters but all is peace and everlasting joy.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

On the 10th day of January, at 12:55 p. m., I took the train, on a trip as far east as Huntingdon county, Pa., for the purpose of paying the members of parts of Bedford, Blair, and Huntingdon counties, a visit of love. According to the location of territory over which I had intended to travel, and for my convenience, I commenced preaching in what is called the "Snake Spring" branch, Bedford Co. Being too late for eveoing preaching I remained with the family of brother Henry Hershberger; the brother and some of the family had gone to meeting some distance, perhaps two miles, returning with the ever welcome report of a good meeting Brethren Jacob Miller, of Yellow Creek and Joseph Snowberger of Clover Creek branches conducted the meeting. After a good night's rest, I commenced my labors among the brethren, at 10 a. m., the 11, of January, in the big meetinghouse, also preaching in same branch morning and evening, until Tuesday at 10 a. m., giving them five sermons at two different places. On Tuesday the 13th, I was met at the Koonts meetinghouse by brother Leonard Furry, who conveyed me to his house for dinner, and then to Elder Jacob Miller's. This is what the brethren call the "Yellow Creek" branch still in Bedford county., preached first in what they call the Holsinger meetinghouse. In this branch I remained until the 17th, preached eight times at five different places. On Saturday the 17th, after dinner, Elder Jacob Miller, took me on his buggy and brought me to the "Clover Creek" branch, Blair county, arriving in good time for evening meeting, which was at the meetinghouse, near by J. W. Brumbaugh's. In this branch I continued until Friday evening, the 23d, preached thirteen times at three different places. On Saturday the 24th, at 12 M., G. W. Brumbaugh and wife, J. W. Brumbaugh's wife and youngest son, and myself, started for Cove Station, which is on the H. & B. T. R. R., arriving in good time for the train. After we were all on board, looking at the few passing sights, "Marklesburg," was called, reminding us that we must leave our comfortable seats to await some other orders, and the orders were given by B. Brumbaugh, son of brother Isaac. After putting the sisters with myself on the carriage, ordering me to drive, while he and brother G. W., and youngest son of J. W. B., took it afoot on the railroad track. This is called "James Creek" branch, Huntingdon county. Here I expected to see H. B. and J. B. Brumbaugh, editors of the Pilgrim. My expectation were not in vain, when arriving at the brick meetinghouse for evening preaching, they were both there, looking as good as could be expected. In this branch I remained until Wednesday morning the 28d, preaching six times in three places. Tuesday I spent my time with the Pilgrim family, in their new house in Huntingdon. This I consider a very good building and well adapted for the purpose for which it is intended, the dwelling and office is all under one roof. The building is good and attractive, but had it not been for the warm hearts that I found inside its walls, it would have been but a shell without a kernal. At this place and with this family I spent a very pleasant time. We had a whole day to do our talking in, and yet the time was too short, but so it is, when we are interested in the subject or subjects. Among the many were the following: a school for the general good of all, but especially for the brethren, and the consolidation of our papers. In the evening at 5 o'clock, we were reminded that we must wend our way toward the depot, which we did after a farewell and a God's blessing. Accompanied by H. B. and the young sister in the office, train being on time we soon arrived at Pleasant Grove, where we had preaching that same evening. Next morning Wednesday 28, I took the train for Saxton, where I arrived on time and was met by brother Dilling, who brought me to brother Hoover's, near by the brick Church, in the Hopewell branch, if I am right, in Bedford Co. Here I remained until the morning of the 30th, preaching four times at two different places. On Friday morning the 30th, brother Jacob Steel brought me to Piper's Run Station, where I had him farewell, waiting about thirty minutes for the train, which at length came along and in a very short time I was brought to Bedford, and being prospered on the road at 4:17 p. m., same day, I was privileged to greet the friends of my own native town and in a very short time, was in the midst of dear ones I had left almost three weeks before I met them in very good spirits all enjoying, with myself a common share of health for which blessing we cannot be too thankful. The meetings we had among the brethren, on this trip were what I thought could be called good meetings, well attended and good attention. My only prayer now is that God may bestow his blessing upon the labors, so that some good may result from the same, and you my brethren and sisters, among whom I labored in a great measure as a stranger, accept my thanks for the kindness you bestowed upon me, while I was among you, and may God bless you for it. Some acquaintances among the old and young were made and new faces added to the many, that death only can erase from the mind. In conclusion let me say.

"When shall we all meet again?
Oft shall glowing hope expire,
Oft shall wearied love retire,
Oft shall death and sorrow reign,
Ere we shall meet again.

When the dreams of life are fled,
When its wasted lamps are dead,
When in cold oblivion's shade,
Beauty, wealth and fame are laid,
Where immortal spirits reign,
There may we all meet again."

BRETHREN'S SCHOOL.

Friends of the educatinal movemeots among the Brethren, we invite your immediate attention. We can purchase the High School buildings at Martinsburg, Penna., for $16.000, which cost fully $22.000. All who are acquainted with the place will agree with me that it is one of the very best locations in the State for a Brethren's School. It is situated in the heart of a large and prosperous congregation, within a square of the Brethreo's Meeting-house, only two miles from their large house where was held the Annual Meeting of 1863, and only about one-third mile from the Railroad station. The building is a substantial, three story brick, 46x66, with a wing of 44x50, with basement kitchen and dining room, and will furnish accommodations for one hundred boarding pupils. There are three acres of ground with fruit and other trees. I will stake my reputation as a judge of such matters—which I will back up by a thousand dollar subscription, that this is a good place and opportunity.

We want $8.000 by April first. As the time is short will not the friends of education send in their pledges, stating what part they can pay by April 1st, and when the balance? I will be responsible for the pledges and money if not invested, and for the institution if it is purchased, until better security can be given. More next week. Suggestions and advice also solicited. Address me at Dale City, Somerset Co., Pa. H. R. Holsinger.

That we should have a school is very evident and we are glad that Bro. Holsinger is now making a move in that direction. That Martinsburg has some advantage as a location, we ready admit, but that it is the very best location in the state, we are not quite so sure of. The large congregation surrounding the place will be of no possible advantage to the enterprise unless it has its symphathies. How our Clover Creek Brethern feel on the subject we are not prepared to say, but we know of a small congregation that is a unit in favor of a work of this kind. Huntingdon has one of the prettiest natural location that perhaps could be found in the State. We have been consulting several of our building men and they assure us that a building of the above dimensions can be erected at a cost of $10,000 to $12,000. Our railroad facilities are very excellent in fact, all that could be disired. Our membership in the town at present is small but should we succeed in getting a school it would be but a short time until we could establish a church and, one too that would be in full sympathy with the important work. The locating of of our school is an important matter and demands considerable investigation.

We do not wish to be selfish by consulting our own convenience. If the brethren, at convention determine on Martinsburg or any other suitable location in preference to Huntingdon we shall withdraw our claims as we hope that whatever may be done may be for the general good of the church but we did not think of saying so much at present, may have some further developments by next week.

There is a meeting appointed at Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa. on the 14th of March to which all who are interested in the education of our youth are invited to attend. The object of the meeting will be to examine Martinsburg as a location for a Brethren's school or determine on some other suitable location, adopt measures to raise the necessary funds and other regulations that the enterprise will demand. Something more definite may be given next week.

FROM OERRO GORDA ILL.

Dear Brother:— Enclosed find $1.20, for which send the Pilgrim to Bro.———. He is one of those whom we call poor indeed. He is both poor and afflicted, and is, much of his time so ill that he cannot attend meeting. So the visiting brethren at our last council meeting, thought that the Pilgrim might be of some comfort and consolation to him in his hours of distress, and the required amount was soon made up. The Savior says; "The poor ye have with you always and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good:" Here the Savior gives us to understand that we can help the poor if we will and and we read: "He that hath pity on the poor leadeth to the Lord." Now brethren, there are some members in the churches that would like to read the Pilgrim if they were only able to pay for it. Some are sending their names in with the expectation that others will pay for it or else get it free. Our editors are good enough to send their papers to them, pay or no pay.

Now Brethren, this is not right as they cannot afford it either, they will lend a helping hand so I would say, all these who are blessed in basket and store, send in your mites and the poor list will soon be cared for and to make a begining I will enclose 25 cents for that purpose.

Yours truly L. F. Wagoner

Roanoke Woodford Co., Ill.

Dear Editors:—As I always love to hear from the different churches I will also give you an account of a trip taken by myself and Bro. Jacob Kindig, one of our co-laborers. We left home on the 30th of Jan. and made for Secor where I met Bro. Kindig, but the train was one hour behind time. By 1. p. m. arrived at Shenoa, met by Bro. Bear and was taken to his home, some 4 miles south east of town. From thence to the school house for evening meeting. The congregation was small on account of roughs roads but the attention was good.

Back again to brother Bear's, where we shared of their kind hospitality. On the 31, evening meeting again at same place, also on Sunday, the first day of February at 11 o'clock, and very good attention. Hope the good seed that was sown will make some good impressions on this dear people. There are only a few scattered members in this part, but they appear to be very zealous in the good cause of their Master and blessed Redeemer. Thence we made our way north 7 miles to brother Clinsman, who is a deacon in the Vermilion Church, but the main body of the congregation still lies some 12 miles farther north on the Vermilion river. No meeting at brother Clinsman's schoolhouse on account of the United Brethren, whose appointment was made before. The evening was very bad, with a snow storm from the East, no meeting held, as these prairies are much worse than it is in the East. Over night with Bro. Clinsman. The storm ceased and was quite pleasant on the 2d.

I would just say Bro. Clinsman was formerly from Germany, came to Pa. some 20 years ago, where he and wife were baptized by the Brethren. He has two daughters members of the church, and they all appear to be earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints. Meeting at night but the congregation not very large on account of the rough roads. On the 3d left brother Clinsman, his son taking us north to Bro. Paul Dale's. The 3d, evening meeting at the Georgetown school-house. congregation good,—hope the good Lord will help those dear people to receive the good seed that was sown, Thence north some 4 miles to Cornell, where we held three meetings. Things here are not just as we would like to see, their being some difficulties existing which I hope will soon be reconciled may the Lord help them. On the 7th brother Swihart accompanied us some 12 miles north to brother John Garvers where we held there meetings. Good congergation and good attention.

The people here generally are very proud but quite sociable and friendly. May the Lord help those to search the scriptures and put their trust in God.

We enjoyed our selves very much with Bro. Garver's family as he think agreat deal of them. On Monday, the 9th brother John, took us to Streeton, some 7 miles distant the train left 9,30 and at 1 o'clock got to Roanoke, one mile from home. Found all well, thank the good Lord for his kind care over us.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord we read of many of our co-laborers traveling and proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation to a dying people which we like very much and hope we shall continue to hear from our dear brethren and sisters through the periodicals.

May the good Lord help us to be faithful. GEORGE W. GISH

Editor Pilgrim: Dear sir, a few months ago I asked some of our brethren if they could give me your address and they could not. In the first No. of the Companion I saw it, and as my aged mother had lived in that part of the country, she said she would pay the price of the paper. On receiving the first, there were four Nos. and an Almanac. In looking over them, I noticed your plea for the poor, and that you had denied none and thought that some would come to your assistance. In getting through reading I thought if I done my duty I would help the editors supply their wants. The next morning as I was going out to buy up a drove of cattle, the thought came to my mind that I ought to help the editors on the poor fund, and the passage came to my mind, "Frst seek the Kingdom of God, and all things shall be added." I often think how wealthy brethren could assist in spreading the Gospel if they would use their means a little in that way, but when they say these are tight times, &c., I think it is a poor excuse.

Enclosed you will find five dollars, send one volume to Peter Brubaker, Marion, Douglass Co., Kansas, another to M. W. Metsker, Clinton, Kansas, and the remainder you may give credit to the poor fund.

J. C. METSKER.

We give the above, hoping that others of our dear brethren will follow the good example. There are hundreds of poor that would greatly appreciate reading the PILGRIM if they had the means to get it. Ed.

Brother Brumbaugh: I thought I would not take the PILGRIM this year from the fact I did not know where I would stop during the Summer. But as I have made up my mind to remain here this Summer, and as I am entirely alone, I have come to the conclusion to take it again. I consider it a great help to a person that has not the opportunity of meeting with his brethren and of hearing the Word preached. I am still trying, in my weak way and manner, to serve my Master, and the more I read my Bible, the more faith I have in the doctrine which our Brethren hold forth.

We have a beautiful country and I would be glad if we could commence a church here. If any of the ministering brethren should pass by here I would like to have them stop and give me a call. There is a Lutheran Church here unoccupied, and I think we can get the use of it. The church went down because the members could not pay the preacher, and he would not preach because he did not get his pay. Some of the members would not pay because others would not, and this caused quite a controversy between them, and the church went down.

SAMUEL MOYER.

Anamosa, Iowa.

FROM PLYMOUTH.

Dear Brethren We had a time of great refreshing in our arm of the church known as the Union District Marshall County Indiana.

The meeting commenced on the 28, evening of January.

Brother Billhimer was with us, preached 3 times, and then according to previous, arraugements, had to go home. his preaching was very effectual.

On Saturday evening Bro. George Cripe and Bro. Daniel Shively came to assist us and remained with us till Sabbath evening the 8th of Feb. Had very large attendance, and as good order as I ever saw. We hope the Lord, will bless the dear brethren for their labor of love, as there was 13 Baptised during our meetings and 2 reinstated. We do hope they well all prove faithfull to the end.

Yours in the bonds of Gospel love and affection.

JOHN KNISLEY

Brother Brumbaugh: I see in the present volume No. 2, that all who feel to help in the good cause are heartily welcome to your columns. I am glad for the privilege you offer. I am not a member of your church, but I pray by the help of God, to be before long. There are others that are better qualified for writing than I am, but I love to see the PILGRIM filled with productions from the brethren and sisters. May God help us all to look to him from whom all our help comes. He has watched over us from the earliest period of our lives down to the present time. A few days ago, my eyes were met by the funeral train going by, bearing one of our neighbor's wives to the grave. Poor man, left to mourn his wife's departure. How often have I wished to be happy with the Lord, but I must wait till my time comes. The PILGRIM affords me great comfort, and I am happy to see it come. God has said in his word, that all who are weary and are heavy laden and will come unto him he will give them rest. What a great promise this is? We can all partake of this promise, throw off the burden of sin and take God's yoke upon us. May we be as a city that is set on a hill, that cannot be hid and let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. Matt. 5: 14, 16. Pray for your unworthy friend.

J. J. MCMILLEN.

Dear Pilgrim:—Let me give you a little church news. We closed our protracted meeting at Syracuse. This was the second effort we made in the borders of Solomans creek church this winter, and the happy results of five weeks labor is, twenty-five were added by baptism and two more applicants, and we think many more will yet come. May the Lord bless the good work to go on until many more precious souls may be gathered into the fold and be saved on the gospel terms.

HOSTETTER—BOMGARDNER.—By the undersigned, at his residence, Mr. Henry J. Hostetter to Miss Esther Bomgardner, all of Lagrange Co., Indiana, Nov. 23, 1873. SAMUEL LUPOLD.

MAXEL—KOUGH.—By the undersigned Feb. 10, 1874, at the bride's residence, Mr. Alexander Maxel of Mt. Union, to Miss Lottie Kough of Germany Valley.

JOHN G, GLOCK.

DIED.

FISHER.—Near Sterritt's Gap, Lower Cumberland Church, after a lingering illness, our colored brother Mark Fisher, who had been a faithful member of the Church for about 12 years, aged 70 years, 2 mos. and 21 days.

During his affliction his companion was also very ill so that they could scarcely help each other. During her illness she became alarmed about her soul and had a desire to be baptized, but she could not be done any more, and said that this was her desire long ago, but felt timid in making application on account of her color. I am glad to-day that I never slighted the brother on account of his color.

FISHER.—On November 18, 1873, Mrs. Harriet Fisher, wife of the above, aged 58 years, 11 mos. and 28 days.

They both bore their affliction with christian fortitude. The children have certainly lost a kind father and mother. I suppose upon these occasions a good many colored people heard the brethren's doctrine than ever heard before. Funeral services by the writer and Bro. B. F. Nickey.

A. L. BOWMAN.

MILLER.—In Lagrange Co., Ind., January 26, 1874, of the infirmity or old age, Jacob Miller, aged 78 years, 1 month and 16 days. Funeral occasion by David Miller, he belonged to the Omish Church.

WHITMIRE.—On January 31st in Middleburg, Elkhart county, Ind., of croup, Harvey infant son of friend Jacob and Mrs. Whitmire, aged 4 mos and 4 days. Funeral services by Christian Plank in German and friend Girard in English. Text Matt. 4: 5 first verses.

ABNER BOMGARDNER.

Companion please copy.

HOSFIELD.—In the upper Cumberland District, of diptheria, on the 17th day of Dec. '73, infant daughter Emma May and Jonas Henry, oldest son of Brother Casper and sister Maria Hosfield. The daughter was 4 years 6 months and 5 days, old, and the son 12 years 2 months and 3 days.

The daughter breathed its last at 6 o'clock A. M., and the son at 11 o'clock P.M. Both were laid in one grave, a very sorrowful scene indeed. These children were sick but a few days. Thus in so short a time these parents were deprived of two of their dear children, it was truly a solemn occasion.

The son was about the age of Jesus when he remained in the temple being about his Father's business. So with this lad, he was religiously inclined when yet considerable younger, he believed in Jesus, who died for the sins of the world. In his short illness he made prayer to his heavenly Father. Towards the close of his life he confessed quite a willingness to leave this world. The loss truly appears to be great, but we have full confidence that the parents' seemingly great loss is the children's great gain. Services by the brethren from Mark 10: 13—16.

GOLLOWAY.—In the same district, on Jan. 30 '64., sister Elizabeth Golloway, wife of David Golloway, aged 52 years and 19 days.

She was sick only about one week. She leaves a sorrowing husband and four daughters to mourn their loss Oh may the good Lord make through this loud call a deep impression on the minds of all who yet remain in the bereaved family. We hope their loss may be the sister's great gain.

Services by brother Abr. Golly, from Gal. 5: 25.

KURTZ.—In Columbiana county, Ohio, on January 12, 1874, Elder Henry Kurtz, aged 77 years, 5 months and 21 days.

His remains were deposited in their last resting place in the graveyard near the Brethren's meeting house, about eight miles north east from Columbiana where the brethren spoke from Rev. 14: 12—13.

On Sunday the 11th father rode out to meeting yet, about a mile and a half, (Mill Creek meeting house), where he took an active part in the services. Though feeble he seemed to be about as well as usual until in the evening. Some time after going to bed he was attacked with severe pains in the arms and breast. He had several attacks during the night and sat up in the rocking chair the most of the time. In the morning he felt easier, ate some breakfast and then went into the room again. Some little time after, mother followed him to the room where he was sitting in the arm chair with a book in his hand, and his head leaning back, apparently asleep. When mother came to him she found that the spirit had fled. Thus did he realize his wish and we might say in a moment, in a twinkling of an eye. May we all be ready. H. J. K.

ROWBUSH.—Near Churchville, Augusta Co Va., Feb. 6, 1874, John Rowbush, aged 91 years, 5 months and 16 days.—The diseased was well acquainted with the brethren of Maryland in former years. When I visited him his conversation was generally about laboring for them as he was a miller by trade. He was followed to the grave by a large concourse of relatives and friends. The deceased was a zealous member of the United Brethren Church, and his funeral was conducted by Revs. Grimm & Walker. Thus we see one after another called away and soon it may be our lot to obey. JACOB ZIGLER.

BOWMAN.—Near Roanoak Ind., October 28, 1873, aged 4 years, 7 months and 5

Also in the same family:

BOWMAN—On Nov. 5th '73, Almira Bowman, aged 11 years, 2 months and 9 days.

Also another of the same family:

BOWMAN.—Anna Malinda Bowman, on Nov. 5th, '73, aged 22 years 11 months and 2 days.

And still another of the same family:

BOWMAN.—On Nov 9th '73 Sarah Ellen Bowman aged 10 years, 8 months and 18 days.

Also the father of the above children.

BOWMAN.—On Dec. 7th '73, aged 52 yrs. and 4days.

Disease supposed to be typhus fever; all of which died in one family within six weeks and left a sorrowing mother and three daughters to mourn their loss.

Funeral services, Feb. 8th, all at one time, by the writer, from Math. 24: 49.

LITERATURE.

THE WORLD TO BLAME.—By Waldorf H. Phillips. (Claxton, Remsen and Haffelfinger; Phil'a.) 12mo. price $1.50. For sale at Blair's.

This book contains a narrative, a story, the reading of which would not only interest, but make better the life, if not instruct the mind, of any one who would take the time to read it. It is not a story of any particular power, but it leads one on with a simple absorbing interest, from beginning to end. The writer of every story should have a purpose in the plot, which should teach some great or leading truth, or correct some folly or wickedness. The purpose of this book, is to create a sentiment against the use of intoxicating liquors, by showing the results to which such uses lead. We quote but a few lines containing truth worthy of careful consideration:—

"Rum and liquor have worked more ruin and done more harm than all the armies the world ever saw. Rum! the curse of civilization; the destroyer of the body and mind; the serpent of the home circle; the agent of the devil!"

With all the curses that are heaped upon the demon drink, still it goes on destroying whatever it touches. Oh! the suffering, the privation, the ruin, the death, physical and eternal, wrought by this worst enemy of mankind, this "the very spirit of hell on earth," no one can estimate, and naught but the "great day" can reveal.

——To-Day Printing and Publishing Co., Philadelphia, New York, Chicago and Boston, announce for publication a new subscription book, by the celebrated Max Adeler, to be entitled "Out of the Hurly-Burly; or, Life in an Odd Corner." It is said to be the best work of this most genial writer. It will contain about 300 illustrations, by Sheppard, Schell and other first-rate artists.

——The Riverside Bulletin, formerly published monthly, as the announcement sheet of Hurd & Houghton, and their "Riverside Press," has now become the editorial department of Every Saturday, occupying the last two pages of that handsome weekly of choice reading.

——Sunday Magazine for February, is, as usual, filled with choice articles. This number contains part third of "The Poetical Books of the Old Testament" by Dr. Alexander, and part second of "Sketches from Early Church History," by the Rev. Stephens. These articles alone are well worth the cost of the Magazine from month to month. The unpublished sermon, Thoughts on the First Psalm, by the late Principal Chandlish. D. D., one of his latest products will be read with peculiar interest. (Ishister & Co., London:—Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.)

——The Publisher's Weekly, published by F. Leypoldt, 37 Park Row, New York, is the official organ of the publisher's board of trade, and contains more information relative to new books, American and Foreign, than can be found in all the periodicals in the country. No one desiring to know everything about recent literature can afford to do without the Weekly. Price $3.00 per year.

——Col. John Hay, the poet, will be "sketched with pen and pencil," in the April Scribner's. (Publisher's Weekly.)

——BRIGGS & BROTHERS the famous seedsmen and florists of Rochester, New York, have placed on our table their January Quarterly, which is a very elaborate catalogue of their many seeds, bulbs and plants. It has a wondrous combination of brilliant colors displayed on the cover. The typography and engravings are beautifully executed on rose-tinted paper. This book, for it is a book, giving directions for the culture of plants, vegetables and flowers, is furnished in quarterly, at 25 cents a year, a price barely sufficient to pay for the ink, looking to the subsequent purchase of seeds &c., to remunerate them for the loss on this.

Their magnificent Parlor Chromo, for 1874, the work of C. F. Muntz & Co., is one of the finest floral chromos we have yet seen. It represents several vases of flowers standing upon a marble floor with a large mirror, in which are reflected the objects in front of it; a vase with gold-fish is also reflected in the mirror, the whole constituting a picture worthy of the highest praise. Price of chromo by mail $1.00. Mounted, by express $1.50. Send 25 cts. for the Quarterly.

——THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH is a most useful publication, devoted to a subject of vital importance, affecting the interests of all human beings, in every relation of life. We therefore commend it to the attention of every reader. As a first class magazine, it will pay in any family. The February number contains many important articles: among them, we would name OCCUPATION, as Affecting Health; Drink, Death-Rate and Pauper-Rate; Disease and its Treatment; Agnosiz - of What Did he Die? How to Get Well and Keep Well, an interesting Life Sketch, entitled A Terrible Lesson for Mothers; Doctors and Drink; The Candy Curse; Nutrition and Food; Accidents to Children; Intemperance in Women; Perversion—What is It? Answers to many questions, relating to life, health and kindred subjects. The subscription price is only $2.00 a year. Sample number, 20 cts. Address S. R. WELLS, Publisher, 389 Broadway, New York.

—From Phœnix, the great Western nurseryman, we have received two Spring Catalogues, and after a careful examination, we find their prices extremely low, and afford facilities for those desiring anything in his line, not to be met with, perhaps in the whole great West. He sells wholesale or retail, and sends by mail, express or freight. Persons wishing to purchase trees, vines and plants, should send for his Catalogue. Address F. R. Phœnix, Bloomington, Ill.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year, A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

FAITH'S PAINTINGS.

BY WESLEY.

From Pisgah's clear summit behold,
The glory-crowned plains of the blest;
What a halo of purple and gold
Fore'er on those green valleys rests.

What blissful effulgence pervades
Each nook of the landscape so fair,
In glory immortal arrayed,
Perfumed with elysian air.

Though Ceylons pure gardens emit
An odor exquisitely sweet,
And pleasure swift pinions may flit
To dwell in this charming retreat.

Earth's pleasures but faintly compares
With Heaven's unspeakable bliss;
The substance we'll find over there,
We have but the shadow in this.

What principle potent can paint
Such soul-cheering views to the eye?
Of earth-weary travel-worn saints,
As time's chilling tempests rise high.

Tis faith lifts the darkening vail
Which hangs o'er the eye of the soul,
'Tis faith brings the spice-laden gale
Which over our pathway does roll.

By faith we may gaze on the stream
That flows through the city of God,
Whose waves catch the throne's lambent beams,
And scatter its power abroad.

Does Heaven's rich beauty constrain
Thine eye all its glories to scan;
Earth's trifles henceforward disdain,
Have faith in the Savior of man.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

[For the PILGRIM.]

THE LAST DAYS OF PROMINENT INFIDELS.

Editors of the Pilgrim.—By your permission, I will, for the information and warning of your readers, give some extracts from the pages of history, of the sad ending of some prominent infidel philosophers, that they may thereby more fully appreciate the apostolic warnings: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

VOLTAIRE.

It is well known that this celebrated infidel labored through a long life to diffuse the poison of infidelity. In life he was pre-eminent in guilt, in death, in misery. He had been accustomed for years to call the Savior, "the wretch," and to vow that he would crush Him. He closed many of his letters to his friends with these words:—"Crush the wretch!"—yet such is the detestable meanness and wickedness of infidelity that during his efforts to destroy Christianity, he was accustomed to receive the sacrament and to attend to some other outward acts of religion that he might be able to deny his infidelity, if accused of it. Such was he in health; but dangerous sickness and approaching death, though they could not soften the hard heart of the hypocrite into real penitence, filled it with agony, remorse and despair.

The following awful description has been given of his last hours:—

"It was during Voltaire's last visit to Paris, when his triumph was complete, and he had even feared he should die with glory amidst the acclamations of an infatuated theatre, that he was struck by the hand of Providence, and fated to make a very different termination of his career. In the midst of his triumphs a violent bleeding raised apprehensions for his life. D'Alembert, Diderot and Marmontel, hastened to support his resolution in his last moments, but were only witnesses to their mutual ignominy as well as his own.

"Here let not the historian fear exageration. Rage, remorse, reproach, and blasphemy, all accompanied and characterized the long agony of the dying atheist. His death, the most terrible that is ever recorded to have stricken the impious man, will not be denied by his friends and companions in impiety. Not one of them has ever dared to mention any sign given, of resolution or tranquility, by the premier chief, during the space of three months, which elapsed from the time he was crowned in the theatre until his decease. Such a silence expresses how great their humiliation was in his death.

It was on his return from the theatre, and in the midst of the toils he was resuming in order to acquire fresh applause, when Voltaire was warned that the long career of his iniquity was drawing to an end. In spite of all the infidel philosophers who flocked around him in in the first days of his illness, he gave signs of wishing to return to the God he had so often blasphemed. He called for the priest, he ministered to Him whom he had sworn to crush, under the appellation of "the wretch." His danger increasing, he wrote entreating the Abba Gualtier to vist him. He afterwards made a declaration, in which he in fact renounced infidelity.

This declaration was signed by himself and two witnesses, one of whom was the Marquis de Villevieille, to whom, eleven years before, Voltaire was wont to write, "conceal your march from the enemy, in your endeavors to crush 'the wretch.'"

Voltaire had permitted this declation to be carried to the rector of St. Sulpice, and to the archbishop of Paris, to know whether it would be sufficient. When the Abba Gualtier returned with the answer, that it was impossible for him to gain admittance to the patient. The conspirators had strained very nerve to hinder their chief from consummating his recantation, and every avenue was shut to the priest, whom Voltaire himself had sent for. The demons haunted every access; rage succeeded to fury and fury to rage again during the remainder of his life.

Then it was that D'Alembert, Diderot and about twenty others of the conspirators who had beset his apartment, never approached him but to witness their own ignominy; and often he would curse them and exclaim: 'Retire! It is you who have brought me to my present state! Begone! I could have done without you all; but you could not exist without me! And what a wretched glory you have procured me.

Then would succeed the horrid remembrance of his conspiracy. They could hear him, the prey of anguish and dread, alternately supplicating blaspheming that God whom he had conspired against; and in plaintive accents would he cry out, O, Christ! O, Jesus Christ! and then complain that he was abandoned by God and man. The hand which had traced in ancient writ, the sentence of an impious and reviling king, seemed to trace before his eyes, "crush them, do crush the wretch! In vain he turned his head away; the time was coming apace when he was to appear before the tribunal of Him he had blasphemed, and his physicians, particularly Mr. Tronclin, calling in to minister relief, thunderstruck, retired, declaring the death of the impious man to be terrible indeed. The pride of the conspirators would willingly have suppressed these declarations, but it was in vain The Mareschall de Richelieu flies from the bed-side, declaring it to be a sight too terrible to be sustained; and Mr. Tronclin, that the furies of Orestes could give but a faint idea of the woes of Voltaire.

In these visits the doctor found him in the greatest agonies, exclaiming with utmost horror, "I am abandoned by God and man." He then said, "Doctor, I will give you half of what I am worth if you will give me six months life." The doctor answered; "Sir, you cannot live six weeks." Voltaire replied, "Then I shall go to hell, and you will go with me!" and soon after expired."

Thus ends the life of the infidel philosopher Voltaire, who, with others, conspired to sap the foundation of christianity, and crush its author, our blessed Lord, Jesus Christ, whom he had denominated "the wretch." How ignominious is his end! How loud the warning voice! How different dies the christian! He says, "I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I ave kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." For the Lord Jesus commanded his servants, to "Go unto all the world, and preach the gos- to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." St. Paul beleived and was baptized, and he kept the faith, and had the assurance of salvation with all them that believe and are baptized. Voltaire believed not; and had the assurance of damnation with all his fallen unbelievers. Though God for His great love wherewith he so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Blessed be his name. Amen. D. P SARLAR.

(In my next I will give you the death of Tom Paine.)

ILL-TEMPER.—A single person of sour, sullen temper—what a dreadful thing it is to have such a one in the house! There is not myrrh and aloes and chloride of iron enough in the world to disinfect a single home of such a nuisance as that; no riches, no elegance of mein, no beauty of face, can ever screen such person from utter vulgarity. There is one thing which rising persons hate the reputation of more than all others, that is vulgarity; but, dear me. ill-temper is the vulgarest thing that the lowest-born and illest-bred can ever bring to his home. It is peevishness in a home. It is one of the worst forms of impiety. Peevishness in a home is not only sin against the Holy Ghost, but sin against the Holy Ghost in the very temple of love.

THE LORD'S JEWELS.—In the year 1782, Messrs. Boemer & Cassange, regardless of expenses, completed a celebrated necklace which was composed of eighteen hundred of the most beautiful jewels to be found in all the wide earth. This necklace Louis XVI presented to the Queen. Not so when the Lord of Hosts comes to gather his jewels in. The beautiful, spiritual necklace that he shall prepare will be composed of the brightest gems of earth. For them the Lord has paid the debt. The whole universe will be ransacked in search of the gems, and not one will be left. What a blessed thing it will be if every family will see that they are represented in this necklace.—J. H. Moore.

I am sure that there si a common spirit that plays within us, and that is the Spirit of God. whoever feels not the warm gale and gentle ventilation of this Spirit, I dare not say he lives; for truly, without this, to me there is no heat underneath the tropic, nor any light though I dwell in the body of the sun. —Sir Thomas Browne.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

No. 5.

"I THIRST." } St. John, 19:
"IT IS FINISHED." } 28—30.

I THIRST.

1. Cause.—Much has been already said concerning Jesus on the cross. Around that cross men have been gathered to fear and tremble. Angels, no doubt, bowed to witness the scenes that transpired on Calvary's brow. Scenes! Yea the closing scenes of Christ's great mission in the flesh. The real cause of this expression of Jesus we believe was, that "every jot and tittle of the law" might be fulfilled. Many long years had passed away before the Psalmist's language, ("They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." Ps. 69: 21.), came to pass. But the word of the Lord is sure. Hence the Evangelist says, "that the Scripture might be fulfilled. He saith, 'I thirst." John 19: 28. This was the only thing that yet remained for the Son of God to participate in, whilst He was being offered on the cross, a sacrifice for sin. Here he tasted the bitter cup for the whole human family. "Now there was set a vessel, full of vinegar; and they filled a sponge, and put it upon hyssop and put it to his mouth." John 19: 28. Oh that bitter cup! The vinegar and the gall. Kind reader, think of Jesus on the cross. Think of what they offered him for his meat and His thirst. And further, remember that if you are refusing Him the best ascription of your hearts, you are withholding from Him the soothing cup of praise. If you are guilty of any of those wicked habits, of swearing, drinking intoxicating liquors, using vulgar and degraded language, stop at once, Jesus has tasted those bitter things from the sponge that you might not taste the bitter pangs thereof in hell. Offer not again to Him who has died for you those bitter words of your lips, which are so offensive in his sight and so unpleasant to the Christian's ear.

His thirst is quenched more by obedience to the word of God—His father—than from the bitter cup of which he partook.

2. Our Thirst.—We remember Jesus having said in that memorable sermon on the mount, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." Matt. 5: 6. Here is a thirst that Jesus informs us will prove a blessing. All persons, more or less, have experienced thirst, and also the comfort and delight upon receiving a cool draught of water. Many too have realized the comfort and consolation of partaking of the water of life everlasting. This water Jesus promises to give—give not sparingly, but pressed down, shaken together, and running over. "For they shall be filled." Jesus had on one occasion a very interesting conversation with a woman of Samaria on this subject. He spake to her of the water of Jacob's well in this wise, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again." John 4: 13. Thirst again because its nature is not to endure. But Jesus further says, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John 4: 14. This is the water that we all should thirst for, the water that has been prepared for all men. Behold how generous the Lord is, in giving to all who thirst. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price." Isa. 55: 1. Who could desire a more cordial invitation to partake of that which will make glad the soul. May God increase our thirst after righteousness May we desire more of the pure word of God, which is as the waters of life that, flow into our souls, quench our thirst and wash our sins away. Then eventually can we be numbered among those of whom it is said, "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters." Rev. 7: 16, 17. Yea saith he that sat upon the throne, "I will give unto him that is athirst of the waters of life freely." Rev. 21: 6.

Dear reader, have you made your peace with God? If so, well; if not, need, Oh! heed the parable of Jesus that we will now introduce for the purpose of setting before you the the true condition of those who will not come to the foot of the cross, and ask that they may receive. "There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. The rich man died and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me and send Lazaros, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame." Luke 16: 19—24.

Here is a thirst that will cause the subject to call plaintively for water, for it is said the rich man cried. This is a condition that would naturally come under Our thirst, if we are unwilling to receive the love of truth in our hearts.

IT IS FINISHED.

1. Its importance.—The importance of the completion of any great undertaking is truly worthy of note. Around the finishing point of any great scheme, stands success or failure. How intensely must the angels have watched the closing events of Jesus on the cross. They who rejoiced at the birth of Christ, being for the first time permitted to view the majestic plan of salvation. They who ministered to him after his temptations in the wilderness surely will bear him up now, lest he dash his foot against a stone. If they so rejoiced at the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem, how much more must they have praisd God in the highest when Jesus triumphantly finished the great work assigned Him. Jesus prayeth unto the Father, and declareth, "I have glorified Thee on earth: I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. And now, O, Father, glorify Me with Thine own self with the glory I had with Thee before the world was." John 17: 4, 5. Had Jesus failed to finish, all would have been lost. Where today? Yes, imagination inquires, where would we poor sinners be, and what would be our condition. Oh, beloved! Should we not rejoice that our blessed Lord was able to finish and that success crowned his labors, which were all given for us through love? The apostle speaks highly of the importance of finishing his ministry; says he, "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I received of the Lord Jesus." Acts 20: 24.

2. WHAT WAS FINISHED?

1. Those prophecies which were spoken concerning Christ's trials and sufferings on the cross. 2. Those prophecies concerning His life and mission among men as the Son of Man.

3. Its honor.—The honor that we present is the honor of God. As Jesus sought not His own honor and as the generality of men do now, and have done in all ages; but the the honor and glory of the Father, God, also highly exalted Him and and gave Him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow,

This great honor and glory is the result of His faithfulness in all things and the perfect completion of all things assigned Him. Now we will notice the dishonor of commencing and not being able to finish, one of Jesus' own illustrations. "For which of you intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost? Lest haply after he hath laid the foundation and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying, this man began to build but was not able to finish." Luke 14: 28—30. Here truly was shame presented to our consideration, in not being able to finish that which we undertake to do. He that would be honored of God, must complete the work in order to obtain the prize. The crown is not in the beginning, but whosoever is faithful unto the end shall be saved. James speaks of the finishing of sin and the shame and dishonor connected with it. He saith, "When lust is conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Jas. 1: 15. Truly this kind of sin is distressingly detrimental to the soul. Hence it depends much upon what we finish and how we finish in order to be honorable, and the honored of God. May God help you my dear reader, with myself, to finish honorably and uprightly, the work of our heavenly Father, being faithful in all things, whatsoever he has said unto us, that when our days on earth are numbered, we can realize within our souls, the language of the apostle, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8.

JOHN ZUCK.

Shady Grove, Pa.

THE ANTEDELUVIAN.

And as it was in the days of Noah so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man Luke 17: 26.

Truly a soleman thought when we reflect upon the Language of our text as above stated, to think that we shall have another time like unto the days of Noah, In the 12: chapter of Genesis we read, "And the Lord said my spirit shall not always strive with man and God saw that the wretchedness of man was great in the Earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was evil, and only evil continually, and it repented him that he made man on the earth. Old Soloman thought that God should be sorry for what he had done seeing the awful wickedness of mankind that of necessity he must destroy them from of the face of the earth seeing in them nothing good and that according to the plan of his arrangement, no good would grow out of their conduct, therefore he said, "I will destroy man whom I have created," and he did so, yet finding a few who found favor in the sight of God, he was willing to save. Thus as in all ages of the world the righteous are the favored class, therefore the word of God came to Noah warning him to build an ark for his Salvation, and the few righteous that were found with him, and we discover he was very particular in its construction so as to meet the approbation of God, otherwise it would not have answered the porpose in the event, it would not have rode safely over the water neither will ours unless we are very particular in patterning after the plan that God gave us. But because he built it as God directed and within the limited time given, he was ready for the emergency when it came, and all those who were heedless of the warning, the flood caught them by surprise like many in our day, thinking there is yet time enough the flood of destruction will not yet come and many, we fear, are taken by surprise and hurled into eternity unprepared, Faith is one of the principle ingredients to make us ready for coming danger, and when it has prominence in our mind, we will always be on the alert. Having confidence in the great I Am, we will always be ready to go at his bidding.

Now since he has reposed an extensive work upon his Church which is composed of members, or branches and some of which are embassadors, whose duty it is to pray the world in Christ's stead to become reconciled to God. It is their duty, Noah-like, to give the warning and the duty of the world to hear, and if they do not hear destruction will over take them as it did the Antedeluvions in the days of Noah. But, says one, how was that? The Evangelist. Luke 16th chapter 27 verse says, "They did eat, they drank, they married wives they were given in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark and the flood came and destroyed them all, not leaving root nor branch, man or beast, every, thing wherein was the breath life, was destroyed save the favored few who hearkened to the warning of God and after erecting the building according to the pattern, entered in by the door, God having gathered the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, creepings things of the earth and safely housing them in their place. Then when all was finished God himself closed the door of the ark. Now, poor mortal man powerless, without hope without mercy and without God in the world, the fulfilment of prophecy near at hand, what do you think dear reader, their thoughts were at this time? Noah in the ark, the door securely shut the lightening beginning to flash, the thunder to roar, the rain in torrents to fall, the earth opening and the water pouring fourth from beneath, water from above and beneath flowing together to speed the destruction of every thing that God created wherein was the breath of life, methinks, their feasting and revelry was brought to a sudden and unceremonious end. They then saw their condition, their cry for mercy could not be heeded, justice had finally come and they had to reap the reward of their doings. No doubt, their thoughts ran back to good old Noah's sermons in which he told them the flood would come, but he now was in the ark and could not hear their cries for mercy; he was now resting from his labors of an hundred and twenty years, safely in the ark, in the protection and guidance of God, while weeping, woe and misery were without until the waters passed over them and silenced their cries; yes all was now still and quiet as midnight darkness, but the moaning of the wind and the rushing of the waters.

And God remembered Noah and every living thing, and all the cattle that was with him in the ark, and God made a wind to pass over the earth and the waters assuaged, and after the lapse of a hundred and fifty days the waters were abated and the ark rested on the Mountain of Ararat. After remaining there stated a time. Noah removed the covering of the ark and looked and behold the face of the ground was dry, and he went forth he and his wife, his three sons and their wives, and all living creatures saved in the ark. And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them be faithful and multiply and replenish the earth. The earth began to be repeopled of whom Noah and family were the fountain head, who were found righteous and blessed, yet soon, soon wickedness began to appear again, threatnings and judgment seem not to terrify man or cause him to love God supremely. Coming down the declivity of time we again find wickedness so rampant that God would not look upon it with any degree of allowance, therefore he dispatched his angels to visit the City of Sodom and Gomorrah. An other illustration here given of the judgments of God upon man. We see they ate, they drank, they bought they sold, they planted and builed as unconcerned as the sinner now is, until the same day that Lot went out, when it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all? You see by there illustrations, that God never destroys the righteous with the wicked, neither can he, according to his wise arrangement, destroy any place until he has made provisions for the righteous that may be therein. While Lot was lingering in the City, Sodom, the Angel said unto him, Haste thee, escape thither for I cannot do anything till thou be come thither Lev. 17 : 22. The righteous are truly a favored people and always was from the days of Adam, down to the present time. Neither have we any evidence of the wicked being destoyed without timely warning and with all the warnings and judgments that has been brought upon man in the different ages of the world, it is astonishing how few heed the warning, comparatively speaking. In the days of Noah eight person's heeded the warning, in the days of Lot three made good their escape. Is it possible? Yes, so says Holy writ, and our text says "as it was in the days of Noah so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man," The Eveugelist brings up Sodom to illustrate the conditions of things when the Son of man comes One idea, is that the righteous will be, removed before the conflagration takes place. The Apostle says, "we which are alive and remian, shall be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." An other idea is the comparitive number, and still another idea is, their dreadful wickedness and loathsomeness in the nostrils of God Almighty that he would no longer bear with them.

We would suppose, with the increased wisdom and knowledge that we now have over the Antediluvians and Sodomites, that this assertion of the Evangelist could not possibly be, but, let us look at the picture again. A little over two thousand years after the flood the world being again repeopled the Son of man made his appearance to remodel the manner of worship, and aimed to bring the people into nearer relationship with God.

What did he receive for his services? A crown of thorns on his head and calumny heaped upon him almost every where. He said, a prophet is not without honor save in his own county and among his own kins folk and in his own house. So when he had accomplished his mission he was required to die on the cross as a Malefactor at the hands of such that he came to seek and to save yet with all brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel which brought to us greater facilties to a obtain knowledge of God. Now what use are we making of these increased facilties? We have in our time a sorry picture indeed, when we compare the conduct of the people with the blessed Gospel which Jesus brought to us, and sealed with his own blood. Eighteen hundred and seventy three years have passed away since he came to our world and perhaps only a few years more, and the world will be ripe for another purifying process, another renovation. Jesus said he would come again, not Lamb-like as he did before but with kingly power to take vengeance on them that know not God and have not obeyed the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Now if the comparisons which are given be fair ones, and we are nearing the time when they shall take place, "and we believe we are, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God wherein the Heavens being on fire shall be desolved and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new Heavens and a new Earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore beloved, seeing that ye look for such things be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace. 2 Pet. 2 : 14. We are ready to assert the inspired writer is correct, for in an other place he says, "when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth, and again except those days be shortened there should no flesh be saved, but for the elect sake those days shall be shortened." Sorrowful picture, yet true according to the word of God. Do not understand us to say there will be no pretensions to godliness for as time nears the devil will make all the effort in his power to deceive the very elect if possible and there is no better way than to get the people to take on them a form of pretended godliness and they will show more zeal than true followers of God, spend more money for the cause, build more costly edifices for worship. These things will be done to attract the simple minded and with a loud noise, attended with shoutings they will say, lo here is Christ or lo there, believe it not nor go after them? Dear reader, have you not witnessed these things? If so look out, your redemption draweth nigh. The warning voice of Jesus is take heed that no man deceive you for many will come in my name saying I am Christ and deceive, many but he that endureth unto the end the same shall be saved. GEORGE WORST.

CHUROH GOVERNMENT.

The highest court that Christ has fixed on earth is, a worshiping congregation called a church. If this be true—and no man on the authority of the Scriptures dare deny it—it is a subject worthy the serious attention of every Christian, to inquire what we are indebted for. The combination of churches under the government of any man as pope, patriarch, bishop, or under any set of men however chosen, constituted or invested with their power or name. "Associate yourselves, O, ye people and ye shall be broken in pieces!" Isa. 8 : 9. And until Jesus Christ in His own time shall break every image that is worshiped in ignorance and superstition, and roots up every plant that is not of the heavenly Father's planting, schemes to create power over the consciences of men, and plans tend to the aggrandizement and worldly honour of artful and designing men will not be wanting. Matt. 15 : 13. Missionary and Bible Societies and Theological schools will be instituted and richly endowed, for even wicked and ungodly men are made to believe by the abettors of these institutions of men, that for their money they can give them a part in the work of God. Such absurdity will open the eyes of sincere Christians, and the present delusion will be succeeded by a brighter and a clearer day. The time will come when every church, i.e., every worshipping congregation will know Jesus Christ as their only Head and they will be subject to no other. Where two or three (a very small church indeed), are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 15 : 20. When this shall take place the partition walls that priest-craft has built up to divide and subdivide Christians will be broken down; Christ will teach His people Himself, and as He is the light of the world," John 12 : 8; "The power of God and the wisdom of God, 1. Cor. 1 : 24; "The great minister of the Sanctuary and of the true Tabernacle which the Lord has pitched and not man, all the noise and nonsense about educating young men for the ministry will cease to perplex Christians; they will depend upon Christ's instruction in the case. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest." Matt. 9 : 37. "And will with all readiness of mind, resign the choice of minister to him who calleth unto him whom he will." Mark 3 : 13. And ordains them and sends them forth to preach." Mark 3 : 14. "Not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." 1. Cor. 2 : 13. Of these ministers that He will send, it will be observed that no one will ever lord it over his heritage. They will never take the oversight of the flock for filthy lucre; they will never be curious about their own accommodation, and their own hands will minister to their necessities. They will preach the word in demonstrations of and with powers. "With the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." 1. Peter, 1 :12, "and reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." 2. Tim. 3 : 2 O, happy and blessed day, when the Lord God Omnipotent, will take to himself His great power and reign, and His enemies will be scattered.

A PILGRIM.

A CURIOUS OLD MEMORANDUM

We have supposed that no record of our Saviour's life older than the New Testament was known to exist; but it seems that a venerable journal is carefully preserved in Nablous (ancient Samaria), in which the following item appears in the hand writing of one of the Samaritan high priests: "In the year from Adam 4281, in the nineteenth year of my pontificate, Jesus the Son of Mary was crucified at Jerusalem".

This curious and interesting record was shown by the present high priest who keeps it among the archives of his church, to Dr. El Kary, a Protestant missionary of Jewish descent and a native of Nablous. The doctor learned that the journals of the priests of the Samaritan synagogue are still in existence, dating back to fifty or sixty years before Christ was born. It was the custom, he says, for all the high priests to set down in their books any notable events that happend during their term of office. He also learned that the tenth Samaritan high priest was named Shaboth, who lived in the days of our Savior, and it was this Shaboth who wrote the record quoted above.

It will be remembered that Jesus visited Samaria in the early part of His ministry, when He first talked with the woman at Jacob's well, and afterwards stayed two days in the city, where He attracted public attention to His preaching, and won many followers. During those days Shaboth may have become personally acquainted with Him, and though far from being His disciple, he would naturally follow Jesus', after history and movements with considerable interest.

We gather the above account from the letter of an Eastern correspondent to the Advance (Chicago) who spent some time in Nablous, and received the statements from Dr. El Kary. —The Youths Companion.

A PICTURE OF NATURE.

Tis evening—in our silent meditations we drink in the picture of nature before us—the level plain reaches far out to our right to the base of the gently rising bluffs. The brown carpet of grass waves gently in the evening zephyr, here and there cattle are seen feeding at leisure upon the plain, while upon the distant bluffs, dark lines of buffalo may be seen ruminating. Upon the left the broad bosom of the Platt reaches far away to the south-west, the ice coat of mail in which the river is encased, glistens in the setting sun like a massive mirror. Westward the sun in all its glory, is setting as in the "lap of earth." A sheen of splendor paves a pathway between me and the horizon—times wheel is moving slowly now it seems but now the sun is setting—tis gone A beautiful day is at its close, gone forever. So 'tis with the golden day of life, then comes meridian noon and at last the evening comes and life has fled forever. Young man, learn to be wise that your life day may be the seed time for you that at its close you may reap a good reward—a golden harvest. J. S. FLORY.

THOUGHT.—The magnetic current may envade the globe upon a wire pathway in a few moments of time, but swifter than aught else travels thought. Space and distance is nothing in the pathway of human thought. To distant lands it speeds its way and the next moment the heart beats quicker with a thrill of pleasure—the cord of love or affection has been touched. Or, perchance, a sigh escapes the heaving bosom. The fountain of sorrow was touched by magic thought. The soul in its upward flight may fly millions of miles away through illimitable space yet in a moment it may remember seasons and friends on earth and hover in angelic guise around beloved forms and kindred objects. J. S. FLORY.

Temptations are a file which rub off much of the rust of our self-confidence.

—J Myers of Almeda California says, "We have plenty of rain in Cal. this winter and no doubt, will have good crops. I am glad also to say that, the Church is in a healthy and prosperous condition throughout the State, quite a number having been added to us by baptism."

—L. F. Wagener & others. Because your contributions do not appear soon, is no reason to suppose they are rejected Copy is all put into the MSS. box and used as needed. Some may lay a long time and yet be as much service as if published when received. Please exercise a little patience as nothing good shall be lost.

—Sister Kate Gambel of Cordelia Cal. says, that they have had an extremely wet winter but not too wet to insure a good crop. There is a bountiful harvest expected. Volunteer crops look splendid. Vegetation growing finely. Almond trees in bloom and things have the appearance of spring.

—Eld. D. P. Sayler commences, this week a series of articles on the last days of notable infidels. We ask for them a careful reading, as they will prove to a demonstration that infidelity is a hard doctrine to die in. It may do for life and health but for sickness and death it yields no consolation. "No rest, saith my God, for the wicked."

—Odd numbers of the Pilgrim will be sent to such as want them for distribution at the rate of one cent per copy. Those wishing them to distribute among their friends should send at once for 50 or 100 copies. We will give of as many different numbers as we have on hands. This affords splendid opportunities of having it introduced. Send in your orders and spread them broadcast over the land.

—The friends of education among the Brethren are resptetfully invited to meet at Martinsburg, Blair Co, Pa on the 14th of March. Important business is expected to be transacted and all who feel interested should try to be there. Come with a fixed purpose and matured plan, the meeting is to mean business and expects something to be done.

—Bro. Quinter of the Companion has decided to use money bequeathed to him for the purpose of publishing tracts and distributing religious information in sending the Companion to the poor and to others whom it is thought might be benefitted by reading who would not do it otherwise. We would be pleased if some good brother would donate to the Pilgrim firm for a similar purpose.

—We frequently hear persons speak of the strange freaks of nature more generally confined to the vegetable kingdom, but not unfrequently do we see them peeping out in the animal, principally in the mental developement.

This seems to be the case with our esteemed friend and poet "Wesley" who has been for some time, contributing for the Pilgrim. With our towering mountains, and rugged hills for a text book, the spirit of sublime inspiration as his pen propeller and a poetic development as a rhymer, he sallies forth from the humble wood chopping and gives to an unsuspecting world, strains of poetical thought that would do honor to men of much greater pretentions. His writings are not the result of high culture nor literary advantages but purely of poetic developement, as he informs us that he never has the least trouble in getting the number of feet or the rhyme. "Faith's Paintings" of this week will be read with pleasure by those who have a poetical taste.

Mr. Welch (Wesley) has published two small poems entitled the "Crowning Gift of Heaven" and "Christmas Poems." They are handsomely gotten up in pamphlet style and will be sent from this office, postage paid, at 30 cents each or the two for 50 cents.

If our readers wish to enjoy a religious poetical treat and at the same time aid a young man in a laudible enterprise. Send for the poems.

WHICH IS THE LARGER?

Our good brethren of the Companion in No. 6, present volume, seem to think that we meant the Companion in our remarks in No. 3. We would have them understand that such was a mistake, and that they were the ones that had forgotten to extend the courtesy that our fraternal relations should demand, as there was not a single Compainon came to our office until after the fourth No. was issued, as brother C. G. Lint can testify. This however we look upon as an oversight, but it shows clearly that our remarks in No. 3 had no reference to the Companion, as it did not come to our office at that time neither had we seen a copy of it until after No. 4 was published. We entertain the highest esteem and regard for our brethren of the Companion, and therefore do not wish, in any way, to disparage their work, and hope that henceforth they will not accept unintended comparisons. We contend that both of our papers are sufficiently large for the price, and that the Church ought to be satisfied until they are willing to pay for a larger paper, which we are ready to give just as soon as it is called for which we hope and expect will be before another year, as we now feel determined that the Church shall have a larger paper. Whether this will be a consolidation of the two weeklies or our own individual enterprise, depends on the dispensation of an Allwise Providence alone.

Since the brethren of the Companion have commenced measuring we hope it will not be thought imprudent for us to also take a measurement. We have done so with the following result: Companion, size of page, 8¾x6¾ inches=59:3-16 s.in. x16 pages=945 square inches. Pilgrim, size of page 14½x9¼ inches=154⅛ x8 pages=1073 square inches, giving 128 square inches more reading surface in the Pilgrim than there is in the Companion.

The Companion claims that they use smaller type, but whether that will more than compensate for our extra reading surface we do not care to go to the trouble of determining, neither does it concern us or anybody else, as size in type is a matter of taste. Some prefer small type on account of economy in space, while the aged prefer large, being more easily read. The merit of our periodicals does not depend so much on the space and number of words as the spirit heralded through them.

In our remarks we had reference to religious exchanges that were then coming to our office and intended no comparison with the Companion whatever, therefore we hope this will end such little unpleasantness and that henceforth when we have occasion to speak of each other it will be as co-laborers in disseminating the glad tidings of salvation.

A TRIP TO MARTINSBURG.

On Saturday morning last, we started for Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa., and when arriving at Cove station had the pleasure of meeting Bro. H. R. Holsinger, who was also on his way to Martinsburg. We crossed the mountain together and by noon arrived at the comfortable home of Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh. Bro. Holsinger's object was to make some investigation, relative to purchasing a school building which is now offered for sale at Martinsburg. In the afternoon he in company with Bro. J, W. B., went to confer with those who have the selling to do, and obtained all the information desired in reference to price, time of payment, &c. It is said by Prof. Cort, who has had charge of the school for several years, that the building cost $22.000 dollars, but it certainly should not have cost that sum. We have a building in Huntingdon, put up this summer, that is more than half as large that cost only $5000. The building, however is very well arranged for a school, and the location is a good one By some remoddling it can be made to accommodate from 75 to 100 boarding students, which would perhaps be large enough for our present purpose. We think this move deserves attention by all the friends of education among us and it is hoped there will be a fair representation at the forthcoming meeting. Let there be a general turn out and let every one come prepared to do something. Each one should have some plan by which this project can be carried out most successfully. We ought and must have a school for our brethren and their children, and if it should not prove expedient to purchase the building now in view, we certainly can agree to build one at some suitable location.

On Sabbath morning there was searching in the Clover Creek meeting house. Brother Holsinger gave us a very instructive lesson, and took as the basis of it, the first paragraph of the 19th chapter of John. Three classes of persons were represented. The first class is represented by the soldiers who sin without a conscience. They could put on Jesus' head the crown of thorns, and smite him with their hands without a feeling of sympathy; there was no conscience, no inward monitor that told them it was wrong. This class it apparently represented amongst us to-day. There are those whose hearts are so hardened that they can sin without any feeling of wrong and what a deplorable condition such persons are in! This thought was presented in a very forcible manner and we think made an impression on some minds at least.

The second class are those who sin against conscience, and are represented by Pilate. He found no fault with Jesus, and as he came forth wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe, he saith to the soldiers, "Behold the man!" Here he is before you; there is nothing in his appearance that indicates any malicious design; he is certainly a good man. These were certainly the convictions of Pilate, yet when the chief priests cried out "Crucify him, crucify him," he, notwithstanding his conscience told him it was wrong, gave his consent. Pilate might have saved Jesus from being crucified, but he suffered the feeling of right to become overbalanced by the cries of the chief priests and officers. The application is very apparent. There are, it is to be feared, many, very many, of this class. They have a conscience; it often tells them they are doing wrong, and their feelings and sympathies for Jesus are aroused, and like Pilate say, "Behold the man!" How innocent, how inoffensive he is; why should he be crucified? Yet when the enemy presents his temptations through the many pleasing and attractive mediums they, like Pilate, allow themselves to be overcome, and thus against the feelings of conscience crucify their Lord.

The third class is represented by the Jews who condemned him by their law. He made himself they say, the Son of God, and this they considered a crime worthy of death. This class then sinned with a conscience, that is, in view of their law they felt that he should be crucified. This class is also represented among us at the present time, and like Paul, they make every effort to subdue the children of God. Our mind was impressed with the subject and we felt that we had something good to take along home with us and we believe it should be the object of every minister of the gospel to teach his hearers, that is, impress some Gospel truth upon their minds. But enough of this. After service there was a council and we learned that they intend to build a new meeting house this summer and thus the good work still goes on

A LETTER TO BRO. JESSE Y. HECKLER AND FAMILY, MT. CARROLL. ILL.

My dearly beloved Bro. and Sister in the Lord. After seeing your letter in the PILGRIM on the New Year, my mind was stired up also to write you a letter through this medium. Not hearing from you for so long a time,and suddenly seeing your name in the PILGRIM, my poor heart was touched to think of by-gone days when we used to meet here together in the worship of our God, and often held sweet Communion together with our brethren and sisters here, but where are they now? A goodly number have gone to the Spirit world since last we met together, and I have no doubt they are singing the praises of the redeemed in the paradise of our God. Oh how my poor heart longs to be there in that peaceful rest of the redeemed. Yes, my heart often goes after those who have gone before. We have both got little lambs there and they are are waiting for us to come and share with them the joys of our Lord. Oh how good God is in taking away our children in their infancy to his glorious abode. It seems when we have part of our family there it is calculated to draw our affections there and we can have our conversation in Heaven more. Only Dear Brother and sister let us try to be faithful in the discharge of our duty, as we are living in momentous times, we see the love in many is waxing cold and the time has truly come that if it were possible even the very elect would be deceived. But let us take the admonition of the Savior, and watch for we know not in what hour the Son of man will come. Our little Church here is in middling good condition although we have our conflicts together. Satan often, often brings our courage low, but still we are trying to fight the battles of the Lord. We have had some very good meetings this Winter. Brother Lemuel Hillery from Iowa has been here for some time and has labored faithfully with us, also brother Daniel Longenecker from Adams Co.,Pa. There has been quite an impression made upon some and I think they will come out on the Lord's side. Last Winter the Lord worked among us, and nine souls came out for Christ and were baptized in the name of the Lord and are now (with but one exception) zealous in the cause of their Master. We have preaching every Sunday and social meeting every Wednesday evening which we still contend is very needful to keep us alive in Christ. I often wonder why it is that some of our brethren are not in favor of these meetings. I am certain that they are a means of keeping the church together and more awake to there duty, if they are conducted in the right order, in the fear of God and with an eye single to his glory. So I hope the Lord will keep us humble and the that we may all contend for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints because we see daily that the time indeed has come that men will not endure sound doctrine but are heaping unto themselves teachers having itching ears, and are not willing to have this man Christ Jesus to reign over them, but are truly lovers of themselves much more than of God although thy perhaps are professed followers of Christ, but by their works deny him. "Not all that say Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom, but those that do the will of my Father which is in Heaven. The Savior says, therefore my dear brother and sister, let us be careful that we may do the will of our Father which is in Heaven while we have time. So that when Christ, our great high priest, shall come, we may also appear with him in glory and may be so unspeakably happy as to meet in our Father's House where we shall meet to part no more, as the poet says, "Where congregations never break up and Sabbaths never end."In this world we are separated far from each other and may never see each other faces any more, but if we are faithful to the charge we have to keep we can meet to part no more. In this world we meet with many disappointments and trials on our way and often must weep but in that world all our tears will be wiped away. You You my dear brother and sister, have had many trials but I am rejoiced to see by your essay in the PILGRIM that you are still zealous in the cause of your master, and are still willing to fight the battles of the Lord.

Now I must close, hoping the blessing of God and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit may rest and abide upon you and your dear family, as well as upon the readers of the PILGRIM, and if you will try to answer this letter through the PILGRIM, perhaps others may be benefitted or encouraged, to go on, on their way to Zion. I am a constant reader of the PILGRIM and C. F. C. and Visitor, and I am well pleased with both of them at this time, and I do think our brethren and sisters should patronize them and contribute some sound doctrine for their pages, but no disputings, as I have been grieved to see these things which were not for the better but for the worse. I would also unite with you in saying to the contributors, have your articles all well seasoned with salt so that it may bring forth fruit unto everlasting life and to the honor and glory of God our Heavenly Father. Amen.

EQUAL REPRESENTATION.

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PA.

Your attention is respectively called to the propriety of dividing the District. Our District, in respect to number of Churches and numerical strength, is perhaps the largest in the Brotherhood. When the change in the Annual Meeting was adopted in 1866, it was recommended to the several States that they should be divided into convenient districts, and it was further allowed that when any State should attain to the number of ten Bishops they should be allowed three representatives on the Standing Committee. We believe that , our District could be more conveniently represented in District Council by dividing and holding the meetings at two different places. And any one that has given the matter the proper investigation, will acknowledge that we are entitled to a larger representation at the Annual Meeting. In all representative bodies there should be a fair representation. That is when power is delegated to individuals,and a given number at any place are allowed a representative, an equal number at another place should also be entitled to one. As we have no means of determining what the average number of members would be that are entitled to a voice on the Standing Committee as at present represented, in consequence of having no definite data in reference to the membership of the Brotherhood, it will perhaps be impossible to obtain an equal representation until this is obtained. But we think we can approximate very nearly to what we should have by taking the Ministerial List as published in our Almanacs as a basis of representation.

The list as given in the Pilgrim Almanac is Penna., 290, Indiana,175, Ohio, 155, Virginia, 100, Iowa, 95, Illinois, 92, Maryland, 48, and each of these States are at preseat allowed three members on the Standing Committee. Now if this is a fair basis to draw conclusions from, we can at once see that Pennsylvania has not what she fairly should have, or some of the other States have more than their share. Taking the next highest State on the list, Indiana, as an average, Pennsylvania should at least have five members of the Committee, and taking Maryland as an example of what the representation ought to be, she would be entitled to 18. Certainly no one can object to allowing her one more.

In regard to convenience we will see by examination that the District could be divided without any inconvenience to any part of it. The territory comprising the District is large and the Churches are nearly equally in number divided by mountains that would form very good boundary lines. We would propose that Antietam, Back Creek, Codorus, Falling Spring, Lower Conawaga, Lower Cumberland, Marsh Creek, Ridge, Upper Conawaga, Upper Codorus, and Upper Cumberland form one District, which might properly be termed the southern District of Pa. And that Aughwick, Buffalo, Clover Creek, Duncansville, Hopewell, James Creek, Lewistown, Lost Creek, Perry, Snake Spring, Warriors Mark and Yellow Creek, compose the other, to still be known as Middle or Central Districts of Pa. Every Church should represent yearly in some District Council, and we think the members of the Church in which the meeting is held are greatly benefitted thereby. They can thus see some of the difficulties that the meeting sometimes encounters, and the care that is taken to arrive at fair and impartial conclusions of the District and Annual Meetings. When the District is large and the Churches scattered, as ours is, those on the outskirts sometimes fail to represent,and the meeting is rarely held with them.

The only objection we have yet heard against a divide is, that it would add to the expense of the District, but we think if the matter is examined carefully, we will see that it will be a matter of economy, at least, of edification. It would of course necessitate the assembling of the members at two different places, but evidently the meetings would not continue as long as when the whole business would be transacted at one meeting. The travelling expenses of the Delegates attending the meeting would be greatly reduced as the distance would be made much less. We have made some calculations on this point and are convinced that there would be more saved in this way than it would require to defray expenses of the additional Delegates to the Annual Meeting. The brethren, especially the ministers of the District, associate and travel together more freely in about the way we propose to divide the District, as there are some subjects that would then properly come up as business before the meetings, such as appointing the time for Lovefeasts and arranging for assistance at the same,as the whole District could then have their meetings in rotation, and there would then be no interference in respect to time, and there would need be no neglect in regard to help. These are the considerations that would weigh in favor of dividing, but as we merely intended to call attention to the subject, we now leave it for consideration, hoping these suggestions will be received as they are given, from a sincere desire to advance the Master's cause and the growth of His Kingdom.

CONSOLIDATION PROTESTED.

H. B. Brumbaugh Dear brother, I occasionally hear the idea of the consolidation of our perodica'ls advanced. Being well aware that anything that I may say for or against it, will avail nothing; yet as a brother I claim the right to record my earnest protest against any further consolidation. What is the consolidation of the Gospel Visitor with the Christian Family Companion more than the discontinuance of former? The G. V affixed to C. F. C. is all that remains of it; and a further consolidation would be the affixing of the P. and the Brotherhood would have one paper, which the members will be obliged to take or have none, whether they like it or not. A want of writing talent in the Church is urged as a reason for consolidation. Brethern, this would be a poor way to increase, or enlarge the talent needed Encourage, and bring it out, is much better. There is much talent dormant in the Church which, by proper encouragement, could be brought out,and to do this, and not to suppress it, is the better way.

Some brethern and sisters too, who could, and would write. did they not fear the sharp criticisms their writings are subjected to, sometimes, even by the editors themselves, who ought to encourage rather than discourage that upon which the success of their paper depends. To exclude from the paper all communications not orthodox in their character, no one will, or dare find fault with our editors; it is not only their province,but the bounden duty to do so, but to admit everything notwithstanding its heterodoxy,and then follow it up with sharp cutting remarks, comments and criticisms, will keep out, and scare away all timid members. Avoid this, and encourage the weak and in a few years at farthest you will have more contributors than you can find room for.

We have in our Church District a sister that would read the PILGRIM if she had it I will pay for it. Enclosed find $1.50 send it to her at Double Pipe Creek Md, and oblige your brother.

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN.

And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him, but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. —Matt. 12 : 32.

Dear Pilgrim: As you honored my last essay by giving it room in your columns, I again offer a few thoughts upon the above quotation.

Every person will at once see that there is a difference between speaking against the Holy Ghost and speaking against Christ. If you will look at the connection you will see that the Pharisees had been charging Christ with being in league with the devil. "Now," said the Redeemer, "you can call me a devil, and say I cast out devils through the prince of devils, and yet be forgiven. but when my Father comes, by his spirit, and bears testimony that I am his Son, and you reject that testimony, for that sin there is no forgiveness. One is speaking against Him in the absence of light, and the other is speaking against Him under the clear evidence of his divinity. I understand this to be the distinction between speaking against Christ and speaking against the Holy Ghost.

I know there are various opinions about the unpardonable sin. Some suppose it could only have been committed by those who saw Christ's miracles, and heard his instructions from his own lips; by others that the unpardonable sin consists in falling from grace, or that it requires a true Christian to commit the unpardonable sin.

I shall answer as clearly as I can, four questions. First, what is the unpardonable sin? The process by which this sin is committed is very simple; it is to continue to say No, no, no, to the offers of mercy, until he is a sinner let alone or given up by the Holy Spirit. When thus left, conscience no longer exercise its functions, and the Holy Spirit no longer applies the truth.

When this state is reached, the soul is usually calm and quiet. The individual can then sleep well, and go on with his business, without much trouble about his soul's salvation the conscience is then at ease, the Spirit light and gay, he did not, does not, will not, know or feel that he is doomed.

I believe that the Pharisees did finally succeed in committing this sin, and, if you will go with me, we will see how they managed to do so. We see in their case, from first to last, a willful and a continued rejection of evidence. No matter how plain and conclusive the evidence Christ gave them of his divinity, they said, "Away with it; Away with it!"

Look at a few instances of this rejection of light. The sisters of Lazarus sent for Jesus when their brother was sick,

Jesus waited until Lazarus had been dead four days, then went to the grave, in the presence of a large number of these men, and, when the stone was removed, Jesus said, "Lazarus, come forth," and he raised up and stood wrapped in his grave clothes, Jesus said, "Loose him, and let him go."

This miracle was laid before the Pharisees, as if to ask them. "Will you now receive Jesus as the Christ"? They reply, "Away with the evidence!" I ask of my readers, do you not see in this a willful rejection of light? But they had not committed the unpardonable sin yet, God is long suffering.

By and by a girl about twelve years of age died, and was laid out in an upper chamber. Jesus went into that chamber, and said "Maid arise," and she was restored to the rejoicing family. "Pharisees, will you now embrace me as your Savior" "Away with him! Away with him!" But, it was not yet too late. After this a young man died, and was being carried on a bier to the grave; Jesus approached that bier, and said, "Young man, arise," and the young man arose, and was restored to his friends.

This, evidence of Christ's divinity was also rejected, and Jesus still waiting to be gracious. The Pharisees heard that Christ was a little out of town, preaching and they sent officers, carried with them chains and handcuffs to bind him if necessary, but after listening to him a few minutes they were deeply affected, and returned without him. The Pharisees inquired, "Why have ye not brought him?" "Never man spake as, this man," said the officers, why did not the Pharisees say, "Officers, if you think he is the Redeemer of lost men, we will weigh the evidence"?

But no; they say, "we will not receive him if even our own officers are converted to him;" they cry, "Away with him!" O, the deep depravity of the human heart; yet they had not rejected half the light that we have but there was mercy for these men yet.

Christ was brought before Pilate to be condemned, but, after a fair examination, Pilate said, "I find no fault in him; I will, therefore, release Jesus unto you."

But they cried, "Not this man but Barabbas." Pilate, therefore, went back into the hall, and asked him if he was the son of God.

Jesus satisfied him of his divinity. Then Pilate took a basin of water, and washed his hands in their presence, and said. "Take ye him and crucify him; I find no fault in him." The Pharisees said "His blood be on us and on our children." then Pilate delivered him to them to be crucified, and the soldiers led him away.

After he was nailed to the cross, a very affecting scene followed, which gave clear evidence of Christ's divinity, As the blood streamed from his side and feet, Jesus cried, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" the great veil or curtain of the temple was torn from top to bottom, and the sun seemed to muffle its face for three hours over the dying Jesus; the graves were opened around Jerusalem and so fully did the Father vindicate the Son, that even the captain of the guards smote upon his breast, and said, "Surely this was the Son of God."

Christ here evidently saw the sword of divine wrath raised to strike murderers down, and cried, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." That is, "Father, my murderers have not all the evidence of my divinity I am going to give them."

They went to Pilate, and said (O, what bitterness against Christ!), "We remember that deceiver said, if we put him to death, the third day he would rise again; now we want a guard, in order to make him secure until three days are past, that we may prove him to be an impostor." A bevy of Roman soldiers was furnished, and Christ's dead body put in a new tomb, and guarded from Friday night until Sunday morning

Then the Father seemed to say to one of the angels, "you can now go and roll away the stone." The angel flew to the sepulchre, and rolled back the stone, and sat down upon it I think with folded wings, and doubtless said in his heart, "How much depends on the resurrection of that body." While the angel sat looking upon the corpse, the Saviour arose, as if it had been from a sweet nights rest, and walked out in the presence of the soldiers. The soldiers went to the Pharisees and told them that Christ had done as he had said; that he had just arisen from the dead in their presence. This was soon hushed, and the soldiers were paid large sums of money to swear that his disciples had stolen him away while they were asleep. All this evidence they rejected, and still could be forgiven.

One more proof of Christ's divinity was to be given them by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit after his ascension. This was done ten days after his departure, in a wonderful manner, adding three thousand to the Messiah's kingdom in a single day. The Pharisees, by rejecting this last evidence, together with all that had preceded, seemed to fix the black seal of death upon their souls O, the doom of the sinner when God has given him up. Then he is a sinner let alone.

Second Question. I will now notice very briefly, the inquiry, What persons can commit the unpardonable sin? If what I have just said is true, then any one who can deliberately reject the offers of mercy, and say No to Christ's invitations, is in danger of being left by the Holy Spirit to perish, Our danger is greater than the Pharisees was, because we have more light than they. All the evidence they had of Christ's divinity we have, together with the accumulated evidence of eighteen hundred years.

Third Question. How does this sin show itself after it has been committed? Generally it shows itself in one of two ways. One is, by calling out the malignity of the heart against Christ and his people. In this state, nothing torments the sinner more than the talk of religion, nothing seems to be too severe for him to say against it. But the most ordinary way in which this sin shows itself is, by shutting up the heart in indifference, so that the one who committed it has no feelings on the subject, no fears, no trouble; has no idea that he has committed this sin, but is perfectly calm and easy. The terrors of the law cause no alarm. Christ's claims on him do not move him. In fact, no view of religion troubles him; he is at ease; he is not, as many suppose, in great distress for fear he has committed this sin; full of gloom and fearful forebodings, fearing it is too late for him to be saved. It does not show itself in this way, but on the contrary, removes fear; he is a sinner let alone

We often find persons near death without religion, and yet without fear. If asked a few minutes before death if they would like to have a Christian pray with them, they say no; or if they would like to have the Bible read to them they do not wish to see the Bible. Ask them if they are not afraid to meet God, they say they are not in the least; they are ready to meet him any minute. In this state, there is great reason to fear that the sin in question has been committed. But I must answer the fourth question Why cannot this sin be forgiven as well as others? If the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin, why not from this? It is not because the person is a greater sinner than others, but because he rejects the only remedy God has for his sins and continues this rejection untill he is a sinner let alone; then conscience does not exercise its functions, and the Spirit ceases to apply the truth, and he must perish. You remember the fiery serpent that came among the Israelites. When it struck a man it was certain death; no remedy could be found; every person stung died. Moses went to God for a remedy. God said to him, Take a piece of brass, of shape and size of the fiery serpent, and raise it on a pole, and when any man rich or poor, old or young, cries out "I am stung"! tell him to look at that piece of brass. That was Gods remedy, the only one in the world. All who looked were cured. Every one knows the brass could not remove poison, but was a type of the Redeemer on the cross. "As Moses lifted up the serpent, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." Suppose a man to cry out, "I am stung, but will not do anything unless I can give a reason for it." He will not look at that piece of brass for a remdey, but rejects it, and puts it under his feet, and then prays for help, God would say to him "your disease is incurable, for the simple reason that you have rejected the only remedy that can remove the poison." So the sinner has only to reject the Gospel of Christ and the offers of mercy until the grieved Spirit takes his departure, and God has given him up; then his sin is unpardonable, because he has rejected the only way by which God can save him.

BRETHREN'S SCHOOL AGAIN.

Since our last, we have been to Martinsburg. Have examined the school buildings, and have had an interview with the proprietor and the agents, and also with a number of the brethren residing there. All agree that it is a good location, and that there is a bargain in the offer. And now we have appointed an educational meeting, to be held at Martinsburg, at the Brethren's meeting-house, on Monday March 16th next, all the delegates and friends to assemble on Saturday previous, (14th.)

The object of this meeting will be to effect an organization of the friends of education among us, and to take such steps towards the establishing of a school as will afford the facilties to our children for acquiring an education, such as the meeting may think advisable. Should a better location be proposed and agreed upon, we will heartily concur, as we have nothing in view save the prosperity of the cause of light and knowledge.

Now, brethren and sisters, go to work, and let us make the proposed meeting a success. Where it can be done let home meetings be held and delegates be elected and sent, and instructed. Let pledges be secured and sent along, as well as contributions to pay contingent expenses. Do not wait for special invitation; but go at once to work, remembering that in this enterprise we are all equally interested.

The following is our favorite plan for the support of the school, but we will cheerfully yield to anything that will be thought better by those who have had more experience:

Let one hundred brethren subscribe one thousand dollars each. This will make a fund, or endowment, of one hundred thousand dollars. We would require about one fourth of this amount to secure buildings and furniture, and run the school the first year. Each stockholder would therefore, be required to pay one-fourth of his subscription, or two hundred and fifty dollars, during the first year. For the balance, (seven hundred and fifty dollars,) a bond or mortgage would be taken, upon which only the interest would be demanded annually. At each annual settlement a dividend would be declared or an assessment made, according as the school would be prosperous. We confidently believe that after the fifth year the dividend would exceed the interest.

I will be one of the hundred, whether the school goes to Martinsburg or anywhere else, as elected by the proposed meeting, or any other organized body of the school friends.

Let us now put forth our best efforts.

Correspondence upon the subject respectfully solicited from all who are friendly to the enterprise.

Brother Brumbaugh:—In closing my last contribution of Church news I promised "more anon," having in view a contemplated report of our series of meetings then arranged to come off at the Beech Grove meeting house on the 14th inst. Said meetings have now had their beginning, their middle and their ending.

They began on Saturday and ended on Monday. One, two, three, four—and the series was concluded. Only a slight trespass on the rule laid down by a certain elder, who, considering the holding of a series of meetings an innovation not to be countenanced, had, to use his own expression, "put down his foot not to have more than three meetings in succession at any one place in his district."

But no such "putting down of the foot" was the cause of our series of meetings terminating so prematurely. Unfavorable roads, and failures on the part of ministerial labor was the cause. The former was unavoidible—the latter was—well it was like many other things that come to pass—it was not as it should have been—not as it might have been nor yet as it could have been, but for all there was "nobody to blame."

Brethren Moses Weaver and Conrad Kahler of Canton, Ohio, and D. M. Witmer of Ashland, Ohio, did have preaching, and without a doubt, many wholesome truths were uttered and it is to be hoped that much good will result from the faithful labors of those worthy brethren during the short time they labored among us; for although none expressed a willingness to forsake sin, and bear the yoke of Jesus, we feel satisfied that those of us who had long since covenanted with God, had occasion to renew our covenant vows with Him to live more and more faithful. As a season of refreshing for the Church, our meetings were a success. As a series of meetings it was evidently a failure. But others have failed likewise, why not we? Fraternally,

E. L. Yoder.

Brother Brumbaugh.—As we love to hear from the different arms of the Church and much love to hear of their prosperity, I thought I would give a little sketch of my labors. I left home on January 30th, went to Eel River congregation, preached at the Brethren's meeting-house at 7 o'clock p. m. Next morning I took the cars for Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.; was met by brother A. Appelman and others, and conveyed to the splendid new church, preached day and and night until February 9th when the meeting closed. Bro. Daniel Shively from New Paris, colabored with me while there and we felt that the Lord was with us. We enjoyed much of the Holy religion of the Redeemer. While there we had the pleasure of seeing 13 souls come out on the Lord's side and were buried with Christ in baptism, and 2 reclaimed. This church seems to be in a very flourishing condition. All the members seem to be alive in the good cause, and are dwelling in unity. We never visited a congregation where there seemed to be a better feeling among the brethren than here. No backbiting or faultfinding. O, how pleasant it is to meet with such brethren and sisters; it gives me a foretaste of heaven! May the good Lord bless all the dear brethren in the Union congregation for their untiring zeal and love manifested toward us while in their society. Bro. J. Knisely is their Elder. Bro. Appleman and William Cook and another whose name we have forgotten are the ministers here, and all seem to work together. When the parting hour came that we had to leave them, and return home, we saw many faces with tears, and received many words of "God bless you,' &c. I will ever remember when we left those dear people, and hope many more may come and go along yet before it is too late. Geo. W. Cripe.

Dear Editor:—As I have become a reader of the Pilgrim and seeing many good articles written, I thought I would write something too. We had a series of meetings that now are over and we could sing with truth,

> How loth I've been to leave the place,
> Where Jesus shows his smiling face."

We had a season of refreshing and impressions were made that will not soon be forgotten, and we are glad that the brethren paid us a short visit. We were much rejoiced and will now take new courage, seeing that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. J. D. Trostle, D. Longenecker, and D. F. Good, were with us and they were not afraid to go and see the old fathers and mothers that stand out of the church. They gave them a visit of love and we would be very thankful for more such visits. We hope that some of the brethren as they pass this way will stop and preach for us if they can only give us one meeting. The meeting commenced on Jan. 3d, and continued until the 13th. We had 8 meetings in day time and 11 at night. A. Sister.

Mummasburg, Pa.

Brownsville, Md., February 13, 1874.

Dear Editor of Pilgrim: Once more I venture a communication for insertion in your columns, not that I wish to be classed with contributors, but as an appreciation of the unmerited kindness of my friends in Warren Co., Va., amongst whom I dwelled for a short time 27 years ago. I was then a youth of 15. With me as well as with those who were my companions, were those days of tranquil delight. Twenty-two years ago I paid them a short visit. In the intervening time, many changes had been wrought. Their kindness and pure affection then, wrote them indelibly upon the tablet of my memory, and knowing that the whole truth had never been promulgated there, it came in my mind to visit them once more, though for an entirely different purpose, viz. to know nothing among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified, but knowing myself to be, (in the language of Moses) slow of speech and of a slow tongue, I solicited the labors of Bro. E. W Stoner, of Union Bridge, Carroll Co. Md. Being refused, I repeated my request, presenting some convictions that there was a call to help the spirit perfect the good work of God, for it is conclusive that the spirit was not designed to do the whole work of salvation. If so it had not been necessary for the Apostle to say to the believer, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," and again there would have been no use for the Savior to have said to his disciples, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." My second appeal was not rejected, the propositions being materially changed. The time being proposed by Bro. Stoner, (who proved to be a powerful auxiliary,) accordingly on the fourth day of the week, being the third day of the second month, A. D. 1874, we left my home in Brownsville, brother Stoner having come the evening previous, where we had an evening appointment.

At 9:50 a. m. we took the train for Weverton, from thence to Harpers Ferry, again changed cars for Strasburg where we arrived at 1 p. m. There took the Orange & Alexandria & Manassas Gap R. R. for Front Royal, arriving at 1:40 p. m., the nearest point by Rail Road to the place of destination. We were met by cousins, Wilson R Brown and George Updike, who took us to the home of the latter, a distance of ten miles, where we were kindly received and our every want supplied. In the evening quite a number of relatives collected,—spent the evening very pleasantly, had no preaching.

4th. Morning pleasant, tarried in the pleasant home of George Updike until afternoon. Visited aunt Nellie and cousin Amon Updike, mother and brother of George, who, Martha-like, were lavishing their kindness upon us. Evening came, hitched in a two horse sled and went to meeting—my time to preach, used as a basis of the few remarks the 17th verse of the 22d chapter of Rev., had quite a large congregation, lodged with cousin Amon.

5th. Morning pleasant, visited cousin Frank Updike, spent an hour pleasantly, His wife is a member of a Baptist Church, known there as the Christian Church, pastor, N. J. Morgan,—resides in Winchester Va. Then went to cousin Marcellies Rudissillers, met a number of relatives and friends, spent some time in social conversation, some in singing the sweet songs of Zion, dined together. Afternoon went to old uncle John RudissilEer's where we took tea and tarried until time for preaching, Went again to South River school house for public worship, congregation not quite so large but very attentive. Sermon by brother Stoner from 1 Peter 3:12. After meeting lodged at cousin Newton H. Beggerly's.

Friday morning 6th, cloudy and snowing a little. We went to Henry D Beggerly's where we were met by George and Eveline Updike where we expect to dine together. Afternoon, continued snowing, did not go to our appointment but remained over night with aunt Sophia and cousin Henry Beggerly, her son. Cousin John Atwood called upon us and spent the evening with us. He is a member of the new school Baptist Church, exchanged views upon the Scriptures, found him convinced that Feet-washing Is a command of the Master, spent the evening pleasantly.

7th. Has ceased snowing but is still cloudy. Last night slept in a cold room and had a chill, am feeling better this morning, went to preaching at same place, text, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" My time to preach. After meeting went again to Amon Updikes' for dinner and then started for Rudolph Brown's, in company with George Updike and Wilson Brown, son of Rudolph. These two friends furnished us with horses &c., during our stay among them. After supper went to meeting at the Jacksonsvill school-house text Matthew 16:24. Returned to Rudolph Brown's, his son Wilson and daughter Francis Collins and her husband bestowing upon us every kindness

8th. Sunday morning pleasant, meeting again at same place at 10 o'clock. Sermon by brother Stoner from 1 Cor. 1:2. Much interest manifested and some impressions made. After meeting went to Samuel Updike's for dinner with cousin Wilson and a number of others, spent the afternoon very pleasantly with the family. Evening met again for worship, text Matt. 20:6, attentive congregation, went to Charles W. Collins, son-in-law of Rudolph Brown, to lodge.

9th. Pleasant, went to cousin Geo. Updikes for dinner, and to cousin Feildon Updike's for tea, fared sumptously on wild turkey. In the evening met again at the school house where we first held meeting. Bro. Stoner preached a telling sermon from Gal. 6:7, to a large and attentive audience After meeting one made application for membership, went to cousin Hilliary Rudisillers, were kindly welcomed and comfortably lodged.

10th. After reading the accustomed Scripture and laying down the order of the Gospel for Church discipline, we went down to the wate side, where the administrator and candidate kneeled together in prayer. After prayer they both went down into the water in the presence of many witnesses. The subject was a man of middle age; his name is Noah M. Allen. One enquired why it was that there were not thousands of such people in that country. Now we can give the first grand reason, they have never preached there before. After baptism Cousins George Updike and Wilson Brown presented us with a good horse upon which we rode to Frontroyal, put up with cousin John Brown, were pleasantly and kindly entertained.

11th. Morning pleasant, sun shining beautifully. Visited some friends, and at the request of J Brown we visited the cemetery, returned to the house took leave of the family. Accompanied to the depot by our friend J B——. Twelve o'clock bade our friends farewell and soon moved off toward our homes, arrived at my house 8:30 p. m. Brother Stoner stopped over night, next morning took the 11 o'clock train for Hagerstown. We were loth to give him up as our being together was very pleasant, at least on my part.

Now what is to be done with our brother whom we have left without Church fellowship, and no church nearer than twelve or fifteen miles in Page Co., Va.? Hope the brethren will see to him. There is a wide field there. Truly the harvest is great but the laborers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He may send forth laborers into the harvest.

C. W. Castle.

I append the closing of a letter from sister Stoner. After compliments and domestic news she concludes by saying, "I do not know what more to write to you that would be edifying at present, but will close and in doing so would say, don't be uneasy or troubled about us at home, the Lord will provide, but that you with our brother may go forth boldly defending the cause of our blessed Master, that you may not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, that sinners may be awakened, that saints, if any, may be edified, and that you yourselves may be comforted with a consciousness of having done your duty. The children join me in love to papa, so farewell." B. A. Stoner.

QUERY.

Will some brother or sister please tell me through the Pilgrim, who the two witnesses are, spoken of in the 11th chapter and 3rd verse of Rev. "And I give power unto my two witnesses and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth." A. Wood.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

LITERATURE.

THE GOLDEN CITY.—By B. F. Barrett, 12mo, cloth, $1.50. (Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia.)

This book will be of special interest to the followers of Emanuel Surdenburg; and it is so thoroughly infused with sincerity and purity of purpose, that it must command the respect, even, of those who do not agree with the sentiments expressed in the book, and have no sympathy with the teachings of the "New Dispensation," and the New Jerusalem Church, which the author attempts to explain with such earnest enthusiasm. Its motto or text is appropriate to its theme;—"And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass."

This same author has written "Lectures on the New Dispensation;" "Letters to Beecher on the Divine Trinity;" "The New View of Hell," and "Letters to Beecher on the Future Life;" all of which, with the above volume will be sent on receipt of $5.00. For sale at Blair's.

THE CHILD'S CHRISTMAS SHEAF, FROM THE BIBLE FIELD.—By Rev. Edwin A. Abbott, M. A. Revised from the London Edition. Illustrated. (Hurd and Houghton, for American Tract Society.) For sale at Blair's. 16mo., price $1.00.

This is a delightful little book for children, beautifully printed on fine tinted paper, and appropriately bound. In workmanship it bears evidence to the characteristic taste and skill of the house issuing it and their "Riverside Press." Of its contents it seems almost needless to write since it purports to be but a "Sheaf" taken from the fertile "Field" of Bible Truth—The Word of God, but, in reality seems a shock of shelves. It is divided into two parts—'Good Voices' and 'Parables.' The author in his preface says, "The whole world has good voices. Everything in the world, not only things that speak aloud, like men and women, and birds and beasts; but all things,—books and pictures, clouds and stars, the flowers in the garden, and the stones on the road, all have good voices, and all have something to say to you," but nevertheless says that "the best voice of all is the voice of the Book called the Gospel." These voices echoed from the great voice may teach the child to listen to its teachings.

——Scribner's for March opens with a continuation of the "Great South," by an attractive and profusely illustrated paper on The Mountains of Western North Carolina. These papers have, since their commencement in this magazine added greatly to its value, as they not only describe, but illustrate a portion of our country about which comparatively little has been known especially in the North. Dr. Robinson discourses in the same number, of the women of the Arabs; and there is an interesting bit of history in the account of the Heiress of Washington. Papers on John Stuart Mill are finding their way into all the leading periodicals, and here are two which possess special interest. It would require a whole page of the PILGRIM to describe, fully the attractions of this sterling magazine and St. Nicholas also published by the Scribner's, which has now for five months been the enjoyment of the young folks. The March number of which opens with a very useful article on Edward Jenner the inventor of vaccination, accompanied by an engraving of his statue. It would be impossible to give a satisfactory description of this number of St. Nicholas which stands without a rival, and improves with each issue. It cannot be too highly recommended.

——Atlantic for March contains Ralph Keeler's remarkable narrative of how O. Brown escaped from Harper's Ferry which will have a special interest from the circumstances, fresh in every one's mind, of Mr. Keeler's sudden end, and Mr. Howells adds a personal tribute to his memory. The two serials, Prudence Palfrey, and Mose Evans are continued. The Humorous and Picturesque articles are specially entertaining. The Poetry is as usual of a high class. The Essays are upon subjects of scientific and social interest. This magazine and Every Saturday have certainly lost nothing by the late change to the "Riverside Press." The latter has the early chapters of a serial, "Far from the Maddening Crowd" which is attributed to George Elliot. Any person subscribing for Every Saturday will not fail to know if a number should be missed, as it will be looked for with anxious expectation of the pleasure it is sure to bring.

——The Tribune Extra, No. 0 contains Prof. Proctor's six Lectures in Astronomy, lately delivered in New York, with illustrations; also a full report of the lectures of Prof. Louis Agassiz at Penikese Island last Summer, upon educational subjects. Price pamphlet edition, 20 cts. Tribune edition 10 cts., sent post-paid.

——We know of no paper, as a general newspaper, for circulation all over the country, equal to the Semi-Weekly Tribune, "Founded by Horace Greeley" and now continued by "The Tribune Association." New York. The price, $3.00 per year, or $2.25 with the PILGRIM, is within the reach of every one desirous of having a good newspapers; and this one comes twice a week, making 104 enormous papers in a year, almost a library in itself.

——After a long absence the Republic has again found its way to our table. In entering upon its second volume it has enlarged its sphere, and added improvements. It teaches a knowledge of the principles and practices of our great Government.

——Hearth and Home still continues to bring its usual amount of entertainment, every week. It has adopted the wise plan of giving fewer illustrations and more reading matter. Every department is under the managemet of persons of ability.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

[For the PILGRIM.]

TRUE WORSHIP.

BY WESLEY.

I stood upon the threshold
As the sexton rang the bell,
Its mellow music softly
On the summer breezes fell.
And as it sweetly summoned
Rich and poor to worship God,
I scanned each comers' bearing
As within those halls they trod.

The first, a haughty beauty
With a score of gems bedecked,
Came through the sacred portal
With an air of self-respect.
Magestically sailing
Up the broad capacious aisle,
She sank upon the cushions
With a modest saintly smile.

As one by one they entered
And assumed their wonted place,
I fancied various motives
Beamed from out each earnest face.
But now a scene desired
Caught my furtive roving eye;
A man of humble manner
Slowly entered with a sigh.

His clothes were coarse, the garments
Of a rustic son of toils,
Who walked the earth unnoticed,
And escaped its bitter broils;
And reverently kneeling,
In an isolated nook,
His prayer arose to Heaven
As he clasped the Holy Book.

Ah! where was now the lady
With her proud and haughty mien;
'Twere good for her to witness
Such a mortal-humbling scene.
But no, she gazed intently
On the fascinating sights,
Produced by the surroundings
'Mid the flash of many lights.

But God, methought, was heeding
But the poor man by the door;
While seraphs smiled approval
On the never fading shore.

BEARING THE CROSS.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

The heavier cross, the nearer heaven,
No cross without, no God within;
Death, judgment, from the heart are driven
Amidst the world's false glare and din.
O! happy he with all his loss,
Whom God hath set beneath the cross.

The heavier cross, the better Christian;
This is the touch-stone God applies;
How many a garden would lie wasting,
Unwet by showers from weeping eyes.
The gold by fire is purified—
The Christian is by trouble tried.

The heavier cross, the stronger faith;
The loaded palm strikes deeper root,
The vine juice sweetly issueth
When men have pressed the clustering fruit;
And courage grows where dangers come,
Like pearls beneath the salt sea foam.

The heavier cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are;
If wind and sky were always fair,
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

The heavier cross, the more aspiring;
From vales we climb to mountain crest:
The pilgrim of the desert tiring
Longs for the Canaan of his rest.
The dove has here no rest in sight,
And to the ark she wings her flight.

The heavier cross the easier dying:
Death is a friendlier face to see;
To life's decays one bids defying,—
From life's distress one then is free.
The cross sublimely lifts our faith
To Him who triumphs over death.

Christ crucified! The cross I carry,—
The longer may it dearer be;
And lest I faint while here I tarry,
Implant thou such an heart in me,
That faith, hope, love may flourish
there,
Till for my cross the crown I wear.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

[For the PILGRIM.]

ORIGIN OF CHRISTIANITY.

Apart from the little book called the New Testament, we have but very little information concerning the origin of Christianity. The famed Roman writers, who lived near the close of the first century, and the beginning of the second, only mention it as a new religion. Those were Tacitus, born A. D. 55, Pliny in 62, and Suetonius 70. They were talented men, and would, no doubt, have been able to give a complete historical account of the life of Jesus, the Apostles and the Church, had they thought it worth while to use it. Suetonius, in his life of Claudius Ceasar, whose reign began in A. D. 42, and continued about eight years, there is one sentence which may refer to those disturbances which were caused by the persecutions of the Christians by the Jews. He (Claudius), expelled from Rome the Jews, who were continually raising tumults at the instigation of Chrestus. In his life of Nero, he says: "The Christians, a sort of men of a new and mischievous superstition, were severely punished." These were Christians at Rome and were punished because they were Christians. Tacitus in his "Annals" from the death of Augustus, A. D. 14, to the death of Nero, A. D. 68, after having narrated the burning of Rome by Nero, says: "Therefore Nero, to get rid of the rumor of his guilt, substituted as the criminals and punished with the most excruciating tortures, those persons odious for shameful practice, whom the vulgar called Christians. Christ the author of that name was punished by the Procurator, Pontius Pilate in the reign of Tiberius; and the deadly superstition, repressed for a while, broke out again; not only through Judea—the original seat of that evil—but through the city (Rome) also, whither from every side all things honorable or shameful flow together, and come into vogue. First some who were arrested, made confession; then by the information from them, a great multitude were found guilty, not so much of burning the city as of hatred of the human race. Even in their dying they were made sport of,—some covered with skins of beasts that they might be mangled to death by dogs; others nailed to crosses; others condemned to the flames, and when the day went down they were burned for illumination in the night. Nero had offered his own gardens for that spectacle, and gave at the same time a circus exhibition, going about himself among the rabble, in the dress of a charioteer, or actually driving a chariot. The consequence was, that although the sufferers were wicked and worthy of extreme punishment, commiseration was awakened, as if they suffered not from any consideration of the public welfare, but for the gratification of one man's cruelty.

The writer of the above could, no doubt, have told us a great deal more upon the same interesting subject The lives of the Apostles, if he had taken the pains to inquire, might have been written by him, much light could have been thrown upon the earthly surroundings of the writers of the New Testament. He might have told us of Paul the prisoner of Rome as the boy of some eight years, it is not possible that he may have been present at the trial, and may have heard his father and mother talk about the noted Prisoner from Judea. He may have seen with his own eyes, the burning of the "eternal city," he may have witnessed what he describes. He may have heard a great deal of the destruction of Jerusalem and the razeing of the temple, according to the predictions of Christ, as well as of the one million of Jews that then perished by the famine, sword, fire, and crucifixion, and the hundred thousand that were sold as slaves. He may have witnessed the volcanic eruption of Vesuvius that buried the city of Herculaneum and Pompei a depth of eighty feet, with fiery lava The few sentences we have from him have been brought down to this generation from an enemy of Christ, testifying of the faithfulness of the Christians of his day. SERIES OF MEETINGS.

I humbly submit a few thoughts on the above named subject believing them to be principles underlying the successful operation of these meetings.

1. The object. This is an important point for consideration. Nothing is likely to succeed without an effort, neither are efforts likely to accomplish much without an object in view. The man who arranges his labor with regard to the accomplishment of some special object or objects, will accomplish much more than one who goes about his work hardly knowing what he wants to accomplish —commencing many things and completing nothing.

A series of meetings should have for its primary object, the conversion of sinners. To accomplish this, the Church in the first place must be in union. Where there is envy and strife, want of charity and vital godliness among the members, the influence of preaching will be in a measure quenched, be it ever so powerful. All must work together with this special object in view; the ministers arms must be supported.

2. It should be borne in mind that the sinner is to be taught, and that the minister is to teach him. Care must be exercised that the lessons do not become disarranged. A child must first be made to feel an interest in its lesson before it can be taught. It must learn to spell before it can be taught to read. It must learn the alphabet before it can be taught spelling. To preach baptism, feet washing and nonconformity to the sinner as a first lesson, would be like attempting to teach a child to read before it knew its alphabet,—to assign it a lesson in algebra before it knew the multiplication table. For this reason the same minister or ministers, that commence the meetings should remain to conclude them. It is far better to have but two ministers to carry on the meetings, than have new preachers every other meeting, and certainly no one can commend the plan, if plan it can be called, that will bring together six or eight preachers during the first few days of the meeting, and have none to continue longer.

3 These meetings generally do not last long enough. How often do we hear it said "there were some good impressions made, and if the meetings would have continued a little longer some might have been made willing to forsake sin." "What a pity." Yes it is a pity to cease striking just when the rock is ready to break. The strokes are all lost unless a few more are added, and yet there are none to deal the blows, that will complete the work and make it a success. "What a pity!" "What a pity!" But can nothing else be done to remedy this evil than merely to exclaim "What a pity!"

4. Finally, it should be remembered that the Lord will hold these meetings only through our instrumentality. Therefore it is required of us to give the matter our attention. If it proves a success give God the praise; we have only done our duty. If it fails let us blame ourselves and not the Lord.

A QUERY.—If all the popular preaching and religious cant of the present day, were thrown together, and sifted, would there be grains enough of real genuine religion found to cover one half page of Pilgrims Progress? Who will answer?—J. S. Flory.

THE DEATH OF TOM PAINE.

Horrible is the end of the unrighteous generation. This unhappy man is well known to have been one of the most malignant enemies of Christianity. He was an avowed infidel in principle, and an open profligate in practice. He lived apparently full of dread of the future, though a stranger to that repentance which is unto life. The following account of the concluding scenes of his life, is from the pen of Dr. Manly, a respectable physician who attended him in his last illness.

"During the late part of his life, though his conversation was equivocal, his condition was singular. He would not be left alone night or day. He not only required to have some person with him, but he must see that he or she was there, and would not allow his curtains to be closed at any time, and if, as it would sometimes unavoidibly happen, he was left alone, he would scream and hollow until some person came to him. When relief from pain would admit, he would seem thoughtful and contemplative, his eyes generally closed, and his hands folded on his breast, altho' he never slept without the assistance of an anodyne. There was something remarkable in his conduct at this time, which comprises about two weeks before his death, particularly when we reflect that Thomas Paine was the author of the "Age of Reason." He would call out during his paroxisms of distress, without intermission, "O Lord help me!—God help me!—Jesus Christ help me!—O Lord help me, &c., repeating the same expressions without variation, in a tone that would alarm the house. It was this conduct, that induced me to think that he had abandoned his former opinions, and I was more inclined to that belief when I understood from his nurse, who is a very serious, and I believe a pious woman, that he would occasionally inquire, on seeing her engaged with a book, what she was reading, and being answered, and at the same time being asked whether she should read aloud, he assented, and would appear to give particular attention. I took occasion, during the night of the 5th and 6th of June, to test the strength of his opinions respecting revelation. I purposely made him a very late visit; it was a time which seemed to suit my errand, it was midnight. He was in great distress, constantly exclaiming in the words above mentioned, when I addressed him in the following manner, the nurse being present: Mr. Paine, your opinions, by a large portion of the community, have been treated with deference. You must be sensible that we are acquainted with your religious opinions, as they are given to the would; what then must we think of your present conduct? Why do you call upon Jesus Christ to help you? Do you believe in the Divinity of Jesus Christ? Come now, answer me honestly. I want an answer as from the lips of a dying man, for I verily believe that you will not live twenty-four hours. I waited some time at the end of each question; he did not answer, but ceased to exclaim in the above manner. Again I addressed him, Mr. Paine, you have not answered my questions, will you answer them? Allow me to ask, do you believe? —or let me qualify the question—do you wish to believe that Jesus Christ is the son of God? After a pause of some moments, he answered, "I have no wish to believe on the subject." I then left him.

He was also visited by a Quaker who was in the practice of visiting the sick, for the purpose of offering them consolatin. He said, he never saw a man in so much apparent distress. He sat with his elbows on his knees, and his head leaning on his hands; and beside him stood a vessel to catch the blood that was oozing from him in five different streams like spider-webs—one from the corner of his mouth, one from each eye and one from each nostril. This friend endeavored to get him into conversation, but was only answered by horrible looks and dreadful groans. He was also visited by a preacher of the Methodist order. His object was, if possible, to get from him the truth in his dying hour, in relation to his future prospects with eternity. But all he could get from him in answer to his questions, was awful groans which seemed to unnerve the whole system. This man was with him until he drew his last breath, and his immortal spirit had fled. And thus died Thomas Paine, the author of his baneful 'Age of Reason.'"

So dies not the Christian. When the time of his departure comes on he feels," though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; and thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." But he being full of the Holy Ghost, looken up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the Glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God'

PASSING AWAY.

Nothing should engage the human mind more than these two little words, passing away. It is astonishing with what rapidity life passes, how the seconds, minutes, hours, days, months and years, follow each other in rapid succession. When we take a retrospective view of the past few years, how many do we thus remember who then were with us, but are with us no more; they have passed from earth to witness the revelations of eternity, their smiling countenances that we so often beheld in the Sanctuary and other places, are now asleep in death's cold embrace. It seems indeed but a short time since we all felt the buoyancy of youth, the influence of paternal love, the sweet counsels of friends and relations who now sleep in the narrow confines of the tomb. Fearful mortality! Man is truly compared to the summer flowers that snap in the morning breeze, and his life to a vapor that appeareth for a little season and then vanisheth away. Oh, then, if all eternal things must perish, and Heaven and earth pass away, is there anything that the mind reflects upon that will not pass away? Methinks there is a voice that whispers so gentle to the ear,—the soul, yes the soul, the immortal part of man will never die. It must live through all the ceaseless ages of eternity, either in the habiliments of bliss or in the place of torment where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. Oh! thrice happy are we if we have obeyed the holy mandates of King Jesus, when we can but entertain the glorious and happy thought that our names are inscribed in the Lamb's Book of Life, and that we shall dwell among the happy throng who are replenishing themselves with the Bread of Life, surrounding the throne of the Majesty on High, with the perpetual song of Inspiration say, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for those that love Him." Oh then, dear brethren and sisters, you who have vowed allegiance with me to our King Immanuel, let us not get weary in well doing because trials and temptations intercept our pathway, but let us keep close to the Lord in prayer, ever looking to Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. And you who are neglecting so great salvation, O come to Jesus. Let me kindly entreat you to meditate upon these words—passing away. Do you really mean to pursue a rebellious life against your Savior, and thus idle away your precious time for the sake of gratifying your lusts? O how terrible will the approach of death be to those who are careless and unconcerned!

Dear unconverted reader, you may not wish to reflect upon such a dark and gloomy picture, you may be anticipating long years of worldly pleasure, but alas, how soon may death issue his irresistible summons, and if unprepared for an inheritance with the righteous, you will have to hear the dreadful declaration, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Oh! how can you bear this horrible declaration from the lips of Him who suffered and died upon the cross that you and I might become the happy recipients of His Kingdom?

Then make haste and come to Jesus, secure a mansion at the right hand of the heavenly Father's throne, so that when the Judge comes he may bear the Book of Life with your name enrolled on its fair pages. Yes dear brethren, sisters and friends, we are rapidly passing to to that great judgment day, therefore let us have our lamps burning so that when the Bridegroom comes we may be ready to meet Him, and that none may be found as the foolish virgins.

"And must I be to judgment brought,
And answer in that day;
For every vain and idle thought,
And every word I say?"

PRACTICAL CHRITIANITY.

"Ye are the light of the world. Matt. 14: 14."

The disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ are expressly declared by their Master, as "the light of the world." Truly a beautiful emblem for fallen humanity, and a position to be desired; but at the same time also an important and responsible one, which we will briefly consider in this essay.

Inasmuch then, as the immediate disciples of Christ, the representatives of the Church of God, are the light of the world, so should we be, brethren and sisters, who claim to be delivered from the power of darkness and made to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. Jesus, our exemplifier saith, "I am the light of the world." In him was light and the light was the life of man. Light co-existed with God from eternity, and in the creation of the world, everything in the gloomy void was enshrouded in darkness, and the Lord said, "Let there be light, and it was so." Hence light, visble light, emanated from God, and if we be the children of light, we must be born of God, and created in Christ Jesus unto good works. Herein is life eternal by the acceptance of Jesus as our light through a living faith, evinced to the world by being obedient to all his commandments. Now then we are the light of the world, and we are requested to let our light shine before men that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven. Here lies the importance; here rests the responsibility. Brethren and sisters have you ever considered the importance of the matter? Do you not know that the world looks upon us as shining lights? Can you not see that the children of darkness require of you as followers of Christ, to be Christ-like? Have they not a right to ask of us that our conversation, our deportment, and our every action in life are in imitation to his example? If then the light that is within us becomes darkness again, what an amount of mischief may be done; not only the blood for our own guilt, but also of others that we may may mislead by our inconsistent life, will be required at our hand.

The Christian's journey, or the journey of life may be compared to a voyage on the great ocean, which is ever considered to be attended with much danger, on account of the rocks, shoals and quicksand along the shore, hence the world when they know of such dangers existing, have very wisely erected light-houses on elevated places where a large light is continually burning to guide the mariner from being shipwrecked. A man is stationed there to keep that light constantly burning, which is a very responsible station, for if he suffers the light to die out, and the vessel is wrecked and lives lost, the blame and responsibility rests upon him, unless he can show that it was unavoidable on his part. To the child of God is the spiritual light-house, yea, the beacon light for his fellow men to look upon as an example in his life's voyage in order to land safely in the haven of eternal rest. But if that light becomes darkness, or is set under a bushel, and on that account his fellow men are wrecked on the rock of Satan and launched into hell, who is responsible? Echo answers, who? O, that every brother and every sister would anxiously inquire, is it I? O, let us remember that we were sometimes darkness, but now are we light in the Lord. Let us therefore walk as children of light, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. It is lamentable to see so many that have set out to serve the Lord, and when they are called by the wicked world to suffer a little loss for Jesus, or suffer persecutions, or afflictions, they compromise their christian principles and resort to the world, which is under the power of darkness, for advice which will be sure to lead them from their paths of duty. Deplorable is your lot, and extremely hazardous is your condition in contending and quarrelling for your right, when worldly treasures only are at stake, and on the other hand, the salvation of your immortal soul forfeited. God wants principle, steadfastness, vital godliness, not alone the form of godliness, but also the power thereof. The fruits of the spirit of God must manifest itself in our mortal bodies which is in all godliness and righteousness and truth, proving what is acceptable to the blessed Lord. Many sleepless nights, will it cause the faithful watchman on the walls of Zion, to see the faithless, the sluggard and dilatory members, by their inactivity, or inconsistent life hindering the progress of the Church and the success of the Gospel, instead of promoting the cause of King Emanuel of the Lamb. Well might nel. We want practical instead of formal Christianity.

Finally, my brethren, my sisters; be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole ar mour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, and against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; there fore "let us walk in the light of God."

THE BAPTISM OF JOHN.

"The Baptism of John. Whence was it? from Heaven or of men?" Matt. 21. 25.

Such was the question of the Saviour, on a certain occasion, to the chief Priests and Elders, but they evaded an answer, neither did the Saviour give an answer, and in vain we search the whole Book, finding no direct answer, and we are fully convinced from circumstances around us that a large part of the Christian professors of this day are equally unwilling and perhaps unable to give a direct answer.

Several years ago, in an argument with a friend on infant baptism, we proposed to him the same question. Neither did he give it an answer but evaded it by walking away.

Does any one suppose that the Saviour asked a question that could not be answered? From our knowledge of the Saviour and the nature of his mission here on earth, and the then sur rounding circumstances, we think it very easy to answer, and if they had answered it rightly they would by the same answer, have answered their own question, proposed to them at the same time. As already stated, we find no direct answer in the whole Book, but think if we examine into the question we may be able to find a very certain, satisfactory and indirect answer to all who accept God's word as it is delivered unto us.

The baptism of John, we find is a very prominent circumstance in the records of the gospel, fully recorded by the four Evangelists. Mark saw proper to commence his Gospel, with "the voice of one crying in the wilderness." So we see that the preaching and baptism of John was at that time received worthy of its importance to the cause of the Kingdom of Heaven. At a time when God's chosen people had nearly all fallen into idolatry, and the true worshipers of God dwindled down to a few, just then the world was startled with "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," and so impressive was that voice that all classes of people from Jerusalem, all Judea and all the regions round about Jordan went out to hear him. It appears the whole country was in an uproar about this wonderful man. Not only was his preaching wonderfully impressive but his peculiar personal appearance and manner of life also attracted their attention, So that all that heard and saw him were convinced that this was a prophet. The evangelist Luke also gives an account of the more than ordinary circumstances attending his birth, so that when we take a view of the man we see that the Saviour could justly say that he was a prophet, yea, and more than a prophet, and of them born of woman there has not risen a greater than John the baptist. The evangelist John in introducing him said "there was a man sent from God, whose name was John." This we think is evidence sufficient that John the baptist was born and chosen by special divine arrangements to preach and to baptize.

So this fully answers the question in the affirmative that he was sent from God, and that his baptism was from Heaven, and as such it was then accepted by the people in general. But the "pharisees and lawyers rejected the council of God against themselves being not baptized of him." So it was then and so it is yet.

USE NOT IRONY.

For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? 1 Cor. 14: 8.

The result of careful and prayerful meditations and observations upon our parental obligations, was an article given on the subject of Connivance, and the subject of the above heading is the result of the same subject continued. Objections may de taken to this application of the above text, but remember, dear reader, that it is so much of "all Scriptures, which are given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works." This considered, I may perhaps apply the text against various forms and shades of irony. First we will notice a habit seemingly cherished by some parents who tell their children to do that which they mean positively they should not do. "There you step over that cup of seeds and spill them," or when you let Jim have oats, you stroke the half bushel, you blockhead, and when Jim Pane comes after that clover seed you pile on as long as it will lay on," and when that little bright-eyed Luella asked her mother one muddy morning which route to take for school, the lane or the meadow, "O! of course the lane." I have seen poor children in perfect suspense, doubtful of the meaning of their parents words of demand or reproof, and indeed trembling for fear to act lest they oppose the design. Oh, blessed children! The most precious gift that Heaven could bestow after giving us the King Himself, next is those of whom the Kingdom of heaven is composed. How then may we deal with them so as to restore them back again to their Donor as pure and as fit for His use as when he gave them, of which the Psalmest says "Blessed is the man that hath his quiver full of them; they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate." 127: 5.

Jocose irony is second only to lieing of the baser order of lies. A person who cannot be known or understood on account of his jesting, saying things he hardly means, and meaning what he does not fairly express, is I opine, a dangerous person to deal with in real affairs, for likely, nay, more than likely, he will afterwards propose a misunderstanding in the former agreement, referring to his jokes, which you may expect will terminate your affair in the midst of difficulty. This order of irony I claim is the result of the former order of paternal irony, above spoken of. In conclusion I desire to acknowledge the indirect application of the text. But is not such a course as the above, a giving of uncertain sounds, where certain sounds are necessary, and in better place even for our own benefit? Will not such a course of paternal dealing provoke to wrath, and discourage our youth? Will it not impair our influence over them, which if wielded for good is man's mightiest power, and highest privilege? And if unhappily, the principle should be imbibed and become a besetting sin, developing itself as above shown, and its wretched subject be conscious of all these facts, must it not leave very irreverent impressions reflecting upon the progenitors of such a progeny?

Under such circumstances, "Who shall prepare himself to the battle?" Or who has discouraged and confused the forces? When we feel the responsibilities of parents resting heavily upon us, many similar thoughts present themselves. Many other traits in parents there are which an observing mind can reflect largely and deeply upon. Too free and undue indulgences, for instance, may be very ruinous to our offspring, while exceeding and uncalled for restrictions may be equally harmful. Hence the necessity of a cultivated discretion in regard to the culture and nurture of our youth, the care of whom is not second to that of our own souls.

LOVE.

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ. Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famines, or nakedness, or sword?—Romans 8: 35.

Dear brethren in the one faith, by the grace of God I will adduce a few thoughts upon the word Love, as I claim that love is the main spring in the religion of Jesus Christ. The apostle in his letter to the Gal. 5: 22, tells us that the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, &c. and the same apostle writes to the Roman brethren, 8: 6, and tells them that to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Christ tells us not to judge any man but by their fruits we shall know them, and as love is the fruit of the spirit, it is perhaps not so hard for the true child of God to discern, at least the fruits, since the apostle John says, "Love not the world neither the things of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the father is not in him" Could the apostle have advanced any plainer words by which we can know the true love of God which is not of this world. One might say, are there not more then two kind of love, since the apostle says, "Love not the things of the world. For instance, one may set his affections on a well finished and richly adorned mansion, another one on fine stock, another on some other object, and claim different kinds of worldly love. I claim they all originate from one source—the world, which passeth away with the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever, and in this will (God's will) we read that he that loveth not his brother whom he can not see, how can he love God whom he can not see? O dear brethren and sisters, let us cultivate all the christian graces, which will enable us to exclaim with the language heading this article: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ." Brethren shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword, or are we established, confirmed, and persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in imprudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

LIGHT ON THE SABBATH WANTED.

The above question has been asked, and here is what I have to say. God made all things and said they were good. The day of the week has never been changed, but continued to its intended purpose. By comparing Christian life at the time of Christ and the apostles with the present, we find that the spirit of fault finding existed in each age in reference to the Sabbath, and the fault finders were on the opposite to Christianity. Read John 9: 16. and call to mind the taking up of the bed and walking, the healing of the withered hand &c. Christ and the Apostles spake of the Sabbath, but when the Holy Spirit directed the Apostles how to speak and write, as God taught his ancient people, so we have a record when we come to the Christians for an answer. Rom. 14: 5—6 also 10—13 verses; Col. 2: 16—17: Rev. 1: 10.

Christ arose on the first day of the week, appeared to five groupes of his followers on the same day, and the next first day met in company with eleven. Read John 20, from 11th verse to the end. And after several days had passed we find the Apostles assembling on the first day of the week to break bread, (but broke it after night. Acts 20: 7) i. e. when Christians began to be settled upon a fixed day of worship and rest, offering the first part of their time to God, as Christ said "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." And we have a fixed point in surveying that when the monument is found all other positions must yield. So hear what the Apostle says in Heb. 10: 25. In the Old Testament we learn how the Lord's people met and done. So in the New Testament we have a record that the first day of the week was set apart for meeting, alms giving, prayer, instruction, and communion. So if we follow the foot-steps of the Apostles we are safe.

I have said that Miller, who set a time or day for the world to come to an end was an imposter, and some men say he was as near correct as Jonah. But Jonah preached the truth, just what the Lord told him to preach, then the people repented and God withheld the judgment, but he never told any man to set a day for the end of the world, but told his Son to tell the people that no man knew it. So Jonah was true and Miller false. May God open the eyes of men to see the truth and receive it.

DISCIPLINE OF TRIALS.—It is not the things that we call best that make men; it is not the pleasantest things; it is not the calm experience of life; it is life's rugged experience, its tempests, its trials. The discipline of life is here good and there evil; here trouble and there joy; here radiance and there smoothness, one working with the other; and the alternations of the one and the other, which necessitate adaptations, constitute a part of that education which makes a man, in distinction from an animal, which has no education. The successful man invariably bears on his brow the marks of the struggle which he has undergone.

GOOD, kind, true, holy words dropped in conversation may be little thought of, but they are like seeds of a flower or beautiful tree falling by the the way-side, borne by some bird afar, haply therafter to fringe with beauty some barren mountain side, or to make glad some lonely wilderness.

Almanacs will still be sent to all new subscribers whether they take it the remainder of the year, or a year from date. Some of our agents are doing finely as our list is growing quite encouragingly. Keep the good work on the move as we are always pleased to add new names, which may be received at any time during the year.

JUSTICE.

Love Mercy and do Justice is an adage that it would be well for us all to consider. There is nothing that seems so unfortunate in us as a biased judgment. It unfits us to love mercy which stands as a barrier against justice. Love is the mother of justice and when there is no mother there can be no children. Our minds were somewhat stirred up in regard to these things in receiving the different calls made upon the Church for aid in building houses for worship &c. Of course we do not pretend to be acquainted with the circumstance of those who make the calls, but supposing them to be equally worthy it would seem that some of our brethren love mercy more than they do justice. While some calls are responded to pretty liberally others are wholly neglected. Sometime ago we received a letter from Bro. A. J. Correll stating that they had only received $2.75 or $3.00. This appears discouraging when we consider that we have thousands of brethren who could spare $1.00 each and never feel the loss of it.

It may be argued that these calls are becoming too frequent, but when we consider the great object of life and the utterlessness of money unless devoted to a good cause, it occurs to us that we might spend a hundren fold more in aiding our isolated and needy brethren to build Church houses and be greatly blessed in the deed.

There is one thought that we would wish to impress upon the mind of every brother and sister, and that is, all the money or possessions that we now have are not our own, but it is the Lord's. It is borrowed capital and the more we have of it the greater are our responsibilities and the more we owe to our Lord. This money is given us for the purpose of accomplishing good with it and just as short as we come in doing this, so far short we will be of doing our duty, or of making proper use of our Lord's money. There are hundreds of places throughout the brotherhood that need houses for worship which which never can be built unless assisted by the general brotherhood, and we are abundantly able to do it, and if we love mercy and do justice we will not feel that we are doing our duty until a more practical move is made in this direction.

Every Conference district should make arrangements to build a house each year within its limits, if a place can be found that a house is needed. This can be done if all the churches will do their share without being felt by any. Brethren and sisters, don't forget that you are using the Lord's money and that you will be held accountable for the principal with usury. When the Lord calls for a little to support and build up his cause, do not give grudgingly but willingly, knowing that he loveth the cheerful giver.

THE GRANGES.

The following from the Herald of Truth, so fully agrees with the position the Brethren have taken in regard to that and similar organizations, that we adopt it as expressing our own views and also that of the Church, hoping that it will be accepted as an answer to a number of queries sent us concerning the above subject. The Granges no doubt had, and perhaps still have, a good object in view, but in this, like in all other things, there are extremes. The railroad monopolists, in some cases, have run into extremes in oppressing the producer, but is there not an equal danger of the Granges running into the other extreme, and thus paralyzing the progress and enterprise of the nation? Railroads accomplished more for the producers than any other one thing that has ever been invented, and from the benefits resulting therefrom, millions of producers now count their wealth by thousands. Aside then from the religious aspect of the move, we are inclined to doubt the plausibility of their claims fearing that an extreme on the part of the Granges may be more fatal to the prosperity of the nation than the one against which they are now protesting.

The above is the name of an organization which is becoming quite prevalent all over the country. The object of the organization is ostensibly to oppose Railroad corporations and other monopolies. Farmers and mechanics all through the country have grown into the belief, and no doubt with good reason too, that Railroad companies are charging too high freights upon grain, merchandize and other goods, and business men are taking too large profits in the sale of their merchandize, and thus rob the farmer, the laborer and mechanics of the means of accumulating wealth as fast as they otherwise might, and that in many cases these large profits make it absolutely burdensome upon the laboring classes.

Impressed with this idea men have written, and talked, and labored until a great excitement has been raised; meetings are held, speeches are made, in which railroad companies and business men are denounced, and censured, and the feelings of the quiet, peaceable communities aroused; branch societies are organized in every township, which propose to take the matter in their own hands and do their own business, and pay only a small percentage for the work, adhering together, and patronizing only such men as are favorably inclined towards their organization and its objects.

This, as far as we have been able to learn is the object of these organizations. We have no objections to the people trying to be economical, we recommend economy; we have nothing to say against people using all fair, honorable and honest means to gain a livelihood and accumulate property; this is the privilege of every man, though he should ever keep the glory of God in view as his chief purpose, and avoid covetousness. We do not find fault with a proper effort made to obtain the lowest possible rates of fare and freight, and to obtain goods at the cheapest price. In this special case also we have nothing to say to those who are outside of the church and the christian profession. We do not speak from selfish ends, for the organization does in no way affect our business, but we look at the matter from a scriptural and religious standpoint, and from this standpoint we speak, for we find that our brethren in different places are uniting with these organizations, and thus yoking themselves unequally with unbelievers, and putting themselves into a position which cannot be pleasing to God. And for this reason we feel that it is our duty to speak a word of warning unto all brethren who may be in danger of being misled by the leaders of such organizations.

The associations thus organized are secret organizations, having, as we are informed, their signs and passwords, their rules of order and ceremonies. The organization is divided into degrees, and each degree, as a matter of course, must have its special Order. This fact alone would make it improper for any brother to be a member of the Granges, as our church rules strictly prohibit every member from belonging to any secret organization. If a scriptural ground be asked for such a church rule, I would simply say, 1. That Christ teaches a free, open, public doctrine, the benefits of which shall be not only to the few who upon the judgment of men are considered as worthy to have the honors of the organization bestowed upon them, and also who are able to pay the necessary fees, but upon all who are willing to submit to the divine law.

Secondly. A secret organization generally if not always, requires very severe and unscriptural oaths, which the followers of Jesus cannot take, inasmuch as all oaths are forbidden by the gospel.

Thirdly. By uniting with a secret organization a man binds himself to men that are not Christians; atheists, drunkards, men of the disreputable character, dishonest and such like, and the Scripture tells us that light has no communion with darkness, Christ with Belial, or the temple of God with the temple of idols. Read 2 Cor. 6 : 14—18.

Now then, the reason why our brethren should take no part with Granges is simply 1. Because it is a secret organization, and that which is good need not be hid, nor kept secret. 2. The promises or oaths required of them are inconsistent with the doctrines of Christ. see Matt. 5 : 33, 38. 3. In uniting with the organization we enter into a league with a promiscuous class of men, believers and unbelievers, men who swear, and drink, and whose lives are in no way governed by the principles of religion (We do not say that all men who join the Granges are bad men; but that there are enough men of this character among them, no one can doubt for a moment) and such a union with all kinds of irreligious men, is strictly forbidden, for the Christian must have no communion with the unfruitful works of darkness. 4. Now these organizations by exciting public opinion, holding excitable public meetings, lead step by step to actions, and means which are unbecoming to a nonresistant follower of Christ; they are laid by men who use moral suasion as long as moral suasion will accomplish their purpose; but when this fails other means will be resorted to, and in this a conscientious follower of Jesus will be led to bring reproach upon the name of Jesus and cause it to be evil spoken of.

These organizations, as a matter of course, are laboring to raise public sentiment against railroad companies and speculators, and when fully organized and established the principle means will be political influence. Candidates for office must be members of Granges, all members of the society must vote for these chosen candidates, and in the legislative assemblies these must make their influence felt by adopting measures favorable to the object of the associations. Thus the present Granges are only laying the foundation of a scheming political party, similar to several parties of like character which have existed in years gone by, in the country; and where is the humble follower of Jesus that can keep his conscience void of offense under the influence of and in confidential union with such parties?

For these reasons we hold that our brethren should not unite with these organizations, and also because our Conference have passed resolutions against them. Let us indeed be a light in the world, and not a stumbling block, in the church.

A VISIT TO AUGHWICK.

On Saturday of last week we started en route for the place generally known as Germany Valley, to attend a series of meetings. We soon arrived at Mt. Union where we met brother J. B. Garver, who conducted us to his home. Here we spent a short time very pleasantly, and then took the E. B. T. R. R. for Aughwick Mills. From here we had over two miles to walk to the place of meeting, and as we had all afternoon to do it in, we concluded to stop a while with our aged brother Eby. Here we stopped when on a similar mission about ten years ago, and, what a change! Man is truly as the flower that bloometh in the morning and fadeth at night. With this brother the night is at hand; the flower is faded and seemingly, almost ready to drop; his work on earth is nearly ended, and now a few more days and the soul will cross the dark Jordan and be at rest. We spent a short time very pleasantly with the aged brother, his companion and daughter, and then plodded onward; arrived at brother Lutz's, where we were made to feel at home by the marked kindness manifested towards us. In the evening attended services in the meeting-house. On account of very bad roads there was not a large turnout, but such as were there no doubt came alone for the purpose of worshiping God. Sometimes when everything is favorable it may be that there are those who come with some other object in view, but when people come up through rain and mud to the house of worship, it is an evidence that a higher motive prompts them than mere custom or some worldly consideration. Brother Jacob Spanogle of Philadelphia and Peter Myers of Spring Run were the ministers present besides those of their own congregation. The services were opened by singing the first hymn in the book, and the first verse of the first chapter in the Bible was taken as the basis of the sermon. "The nature of God" was the central point in the subject and was certainly very appropriate for the beginning of a series of meetings.

After services we went to the home of our aged brother Andrew Spanogle, and found him very much superannuated, so much so as not to be able to remember and recognize those by whom he is surrounded. This is nothing more however than can be expected of a man of his age. The conditions essential to a good memory, are lost, and consequently it is impaired. There is not that frequent association of ideas or vivid conception of them that there was in former years, and consequently the mind is impaired. In age there is a gradual failure and decay of the powers of perception; the ear fails to report what is said, and the eye what is going on around them, and consequently, as memory is dependent on prior conception, a diminished activity of the one, brings about the diminished activity of the other. This as nearly as we can remember is the theory of mental philosophers for the failure of memory, and our brother, it seems to us, is an example that illustrates it clearly.

We made another observation while with him, that has given us some thought. Things that occurred in his early days, he remembers very distinctly and can relate incidents that occurred then verbatim. In fact he lives in the past. He is entirely unobservant of his present surroundings, because he cannot apprehend them, but the companions of his youth, and the most stirring events of his most active years, deeply interest him, and are remembered as though they had occured yesterday. This then brings up the idea of spending our youthful days in a way that we, in after years, will not have to regret it. The well known tendency of the mind to revert in old age to the scenes and incidents of early life surely presents the importance of a well spent life, and a mind stored with such recollections that will cast a cheerful radiance over the past, and brighten our future hours of gloom and despondency, when we are shut out from the world around us, and life is drawing to a close. O, how dark the latter days of those must be who have spent their youthful days in wickedness! Surely we should guard well the avenues of thought and feeling against anything we would not like to meet again. But we believe that our aged brother dwells in the past with pleasure. His life has been one of usefulness, and now this reverting of memory is the only source of his enjoyment. In the mind's picture gallery, there are, no doubt, some paintings of a high order, and upon these he can look when he will. How important then that we in our youthful days fix something pleasing on the canvass, and hang the picture in the soul's inner chamber to look upon in old age.

But we are becoming too prolix. On Sabbath morning there was services again, but on account of the inclemency of the weather there were but few in attendance. We were addressed by brother Jacob Spanogle, and, although the congregation was small, we had a good meeting. In the evening, services again, and this time there was a better turn out, and much interest manifested. In the morning we started for home. The brethren intended keeping up the meeting for some days providing they could obtain some ministerial help. Brother Myers and Spanogle both intended to leave that day. Brother D. F. Good, of Franklin county was expected to be present as well as several others but failed to come. Whether the meeting was continued, and with what success, we have not learned.

THE WORTHY POOR.

The following, we have from Daniel Miller of Lima Ohio. His views may seem a little contracted by some, yet nevertheless there is a point in it. Tobacco, smoking and chewing come on the list of luxuries or nonessentials, and therefore should not be indulged by such as cannot afford it, especially by such as are dependent upon others for alms. We labor hard for our money and are sending a large number of PILGRIMS free to such as we believe to be worthy poor, but if we felt assured that those poor were spending $10 or $15 per year for tobacco we would feel like demanding from them our $1 50 as we believe they could send that amount and be the better off for it. The poor have our sympathy and we are willing to do all for them by way of supplying them with the PILGRIM, that our circumstances will allow, but while we do this we hope that all such who are able and willing to spend their money for things that are purely for self gratification will also feel able to pay us for the PILGRIM. The following is what our brother has to say:

"I wish to say a few words about the poor fund for the PILGRIM. It looks as if all members that are too poor to take a religious paper, should be supplied with it by those who are able to pay for it, but there is one thing in the way with me. In most cases where I find members who are not able to pay for the PILGRIM, they spend five or ten times as much a year for tobacco. I was a perfect slave to it for 25 years, but I thank the good Lord I have not tasted it for over 14 years. I now propose to give $1.00 for the benefit of some poor member who is not able to pay for the PILGRIM, and who does not use the filthy weed and uses economy in other respects. If you know of any such let me know and I will send you the money."

We have a large number of poor on our list and no doubt some of them at least, would answer to the description of our brother, but we have no knowledge of any special one that we can point out. If any of our churches have poor of the above description they can send them along and for fear that there may be too many such it would be better to send the $1.00 along with it, as we could make use of several hundred for this purpose, to a good advantage.

THE DEATH WARRANT OF JESUS CHRIST.

The following ancient manuscript from the Pocket Manuscript Book of J. S. Smedley was sent us for publication thinking it might be of general interest to our readers, which we trust it will. It seems strange that a sentence so utterly devoid of Godly fear could be pronounced against so divine a personage, but those who have endeavored to follow his foot steps have received even worse from dignataries who professed to be followers of him whom they crucified in the persons of his "little ones."

Among the manuscripts which were probably burned in the recent conflagration of the Archiepiscopal Palace at Bourges in France, the most remarkable was the order for the execution of Jesus Christ, which was the personal property of De La Tourd Auvergne.

The order runs thus:—

"Jesus of Nazareth of the Jewish tribe of Judea, convicted of imposture and rebellion against the divine authority of Tiberias Augustus, Emperor of the Romans, having for this sacrilege been condemned to die on the cross by sentence of the Judge, Pontius Pilate, on the Prosecution of our Lord Herod, Lieutenant of the Emperor in Judea, shall be taken to-morrow morning, the 23rd day of the Ides of March to the usual place of punishment, under the escort of a company of the prestorian guard. The so-called King-of-the-Jews, shall be taken out by the Stranean gate.

All the public officers and subjects of the Emperor are directed to lend their aid to the execution of this sentence.

[Signed,] CAPEL.

Jernsalem, 22od day of the Ides of March, year of Rome, 783."

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

HUTCHISON, KANSAS.
February 15, 1874.

To the Editor of the PILGRIM and the Church. I have received three or four copies of your paper which I am well pleased with, and have formed acquaintance with several of your church members who I find to be good and faithful friends in time of need. I am not a member of your Church, but I don't know what I would be if I had a chance. There are none of your ministers here, but I hope this will not always be the case, for there is quite a number of the same kind as myself here, that would likely cast their lot with you if they had the opportunity to do so. It appears that all our preaching here is done principally for the money, and without it there is not any sermon, not that I am opposed to allowing the word of God sustainance, or the ministers what is right, but I am bitterly opposed to making beggars on God's credit, which is the case nine cases out of ten. There is work to be done in this part of the country in the spiritual field, and I hope some one of your ministering brethren will come here and locate. This is a good place for a man to make a living and a pleasant place to live. I will give you some of the particulars of the country and of the climate.

This is a new country and there are goood chances to get land. There is any amount of government land here which can be had for a trifle. Any man or woman twenty-one years old, can get 160 acres of good land for $19. Then if he wants more than 160 acres, he can take 160 acres as a timber claim, which will cost the same as the above, $19, and if you wish you can buy rail-road land. It ranges from $2.50 to $8 per acre on eleven years time at seven per cent interest, and a reduction for improvements made inside of five years.

The climate is mild and the soil productive. Stock live out nearly all winter and keep fat. The soil is of a black loamy nature, and beats any land in production I ever saw, and I have been in five differeat States; Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and this country exceeds them all for raising grain. We can raise corn, Fall wheat, Spring wheat, oats, barley, rye, and everything that is adapted to the Western country. Everything in the vegetable line grows well in the gardens.

Now I hope some one of your ministers will come and locate here, which will induce the members to settle in this country. I am satisfied if any would come they would locate at once. There is quite a settlement here, but there is still room for more. I am somewhat interested in your Church, I would like to see the origination and doctrines of your Church, and the Minutes published in the PILGRIM. If we cannot hear the Word of God preached we would like to have the Minutes to read.

I hope all that desire cheap homes will come and see this country, as I wish it it be settled up by good and industrious people. This country is but two years and a half old, beautifully located north and south of the big Arkansas River. This is what is called the big Arkansas Valley. We have one disadvantage, have no timber, but there is plenty set out which is growing finely, and some of it is three inches in diameter, but we don't need much timber only for building purposes. We use stone coal for fuel which we obtain for $9 to $9.50 per ton. There are companies prospecting for coal in different parts of this country, and they say the prospect is good. There has been several small veins struck, but not sufficient to pay to mine.

We have some few buffaloes here and sometimes the main herd passes through. We have lots of antelope and some deer, and quite a lot of rabbits. There is lots of cedar 75 miles from here, and some cottonwood and elm within 20 miles.

If any of the ministers or members want further information I will be glad to reply to them. If they will write to me they can have all the information that I am capable of giving. Remember me in your prayers and if I never meet any of you in this country, I hope to meet you in a better land. Truly yours,

JAMES L. GILLILAND.

Dear Brethren: This is the first year that I have taken the PILGRIM. I have now had the pleasure of reading the five first numbers and can truly say that it is giving myself and family much good reading, such as is intended to feed the souls of the hungry and aid the children of God on their way Zionward, and also direct the anxious inquirer into the old paths of our fathers who sealed the holy doctrine with their own blood, died for that faith which we must all possess if we wish to seek and find that life which is to come. It gives us much better reading than the common newspaper of the day, and affords us the happy privilege of learning of the welfare and prosperity of our brethren and sisters thro'out the Brotherhood. It brings to us both good and sad news. In it, we are informed of the departure of many of our brethren and sisters who have gone to the other shore, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. They have fought the good fight and finished their course, henceforth their is laid up for them a crown of life which the righteous Judge shall give them in the great day of the Lord. When our blessed Master was here, his premise was, "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am ye may be also." What cheering words are these that fell from the lips of Him who had no sin and in whose mouth no guile was found, and who has all power in Heaven and on earth?

Let us think for a moment what the good Lord has done for us in sending his Son into this world. Yes dear friends, let us think of the glory he had with the Father in the high and lofty habitation, in the realms of glory. But when he could look upon man who had sinned and who had degraded themselves that there was no remedy to be found in heaven or on the earth whereby man could be saved or brought back to the favor and friendship of our God unless he would come into the world and die the death upon the cross, we can hear him say: Father if they cannot be saved without I suffer, let me go. Yes Father, I love them, I want them saved. He comes, and behold we find him in that despised city Bethlehem, no house or Inn but the oxen's stable. He was rejected by the proud and rich, and we find him preaching to the poor and rich, but only the common people heard him gladly. Again we hear him pray, Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me, nevertheless, not my will but thine be done. If the sinner cannot be saved, let me suffer.

We can behold him wearing the crown of thorns bearing his cross. We see him give way under the the mighty load, now they lay him upon the timber, begin to drive the spikes, he is lifted up between the heavens and the earth and they begin to drive the spikes through his feet. Ah, dear friends, let us think for a moment what pain, what agony of suffering did our blessed Master endure, and yet in all this he could look down upon his enemies and say, "Father forgive them for they not what they do." Was there ever such love as this? He has now gone to prepare a place for those who love, serve and obey him, and how sad it is to see so many that are careless and unconcerned about the Savior, who are declaring by their words and actions that they will not have Jesus to rule and reign over them. But brethren, let us remember the sinner at a throne of grace, for we are told that the prayers of the righteous availeth much.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The following amounts have been received since our last report to aid us in building our meeting-house. We can truly say that we are thankful to those kind brethren, sisters and friends, as we received some, and that from a distance too, who said that they were not members. We are thankful to all, and hope that the good Lord will abundantly bless you all for it. The contributions are as follows:—

Geo. Wise	5.00
Caleb Secrist	5.00
Jonathan Leffler	.30
Abraham H. Cassel	1.00
M. J. Zillers	1.00
John Walright	1.00

I think it is abot a year ago that we made a call on the Brethren in the C. F. C. for four hundred dollars, which we found ourselves in debt, when we had our meeting house up, roofed, weatherboarded &c. We then borrowed the money and settled up We then felt ourselves exhausted and expected that the brethren would help us to meet the above amount. Now some of our dear brethren have aided us very liberally, but still you see we are behind a little over three hundred dollars. Are there not some more of our brethren who could throw in their mites and send them to us? Brethren, we do not ask you to give $2., $3., nor $5.; as some of the above brethren and sisters did, but send us any amount from $1. down. Now those of you who are well circumstanced, do not let yourselves be dunned again for a few cents which you will never miss, and think how much it may relieve us. Do not be afraid that we will get much over the above amount. If I receive but one dollar over, I will not apply it to anything but what the church at large may direct.

If there are any more who feel like aiding us, enclose your mite in a letter and send to

H. SPIENER,

Hills Dale, Indiana Co., Pa.

Dear Pilgrim: We had an interesting and profitable meeting in Gettysburg Pa, by brother Jacob Trostle of Maryland, who came to us very unexpectedly. He had been up the Valley preaching and on his way home, came by this place. He arrived on the evening of the 19th, and on the following evening had services in the Methodist Church which was filled with an attentive congregation. We enjoyed quite a refreshing season during the meetings and believe many lasting impressions were made. We believe that Bro. Trostle's visit will be the means of doing much good, and hope the Lord will abundantly bless him for his labor of love.

MARRIED.

BAKER—REPLOGLE.—By the undersigned at the residence of the bride's parents at Waterside, Bedford county, Pa., bro. F. S. Baker to Sis. Susannah Replogle of Waterside, both of Bedford county.

LEONARD FURRY.

DIED.

SCHNECK.—Near Three Rivers, Mich., on the 14th af Feb., 1874, brother Samuel Schneck, aged 72 years.

He lived with his companion for 40 yrs, and was a consistent member of the church of the brethren, 16 years a faithful visiting member. He was a good example before the world and was much beloved by all. He left a sorrowing widow and children to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse from Rev. 14: 13—14., by Henry Gephart and Samuel Lupold.

EATINGER.—In Van Buren district, Langrange county, Ind., at brother George Mummert's, a little girl they had taken to raise named Emma Jane Eatinger, aged four years, four months and twenty-three days. Prior to her sickness, she was a bright and intelligent child and appeared to bloom for a long life, but a disease preyed on her little body and laid her cold in death.

Shortly before her death she called all the family, one by one, around her cradle and said she wanted to see them all, and then said she was going home and reached out her little hand with a smile on her cheek and bade them all good bye. Then called brother Henry Gephart and gave him good bye also. She then asked for water of which she drank heartily, and ate some apple when her tongue became silent, and soon her spirit took its flight to that upper and better world on high. This may seem strange to a great many that a child so young would talk so, nevertheless it is true. Funeral discourse from 1. Peter 1: 23—24, to a large congregation in the Methodist church in Van Buren, by Henry Gephart and Samuel Lupold.

MILLER.—Of Clay township, Langrange county, Ind., Jacob Miller, an old member of the Old School Amish Church, died Jan. 29th 1874, aged 78 years, 1 month and 16 days. Left a wife and many relations to mourn their loss. A large congregation of friends and neighbors were addressed by David Miller of the same order, from John 3: 18 to end of chapter.

BRUMBAUGH.—In the Clover Creek congregation, Blair county Pa., on Jan 30th 1874, Brother John B. Brumbaugh, aged 59 years, 11 months and 21 days.

The deceased was a son of our old and much esteemed brother David Brumbaugh of James Creek congregation, Pa. His disease was slow consumption, from which he suffered some seven years. His Funeral services were attended to by Elder Jacob Miller of the Yellow Creek congregation, in German, and by G. W. Brumbaugh in English. Text, Heb. 9: 28, 29.

MASON.—In the Cold Water congregation, Butler county Iowa, on Feb 23rd 1874, sister Francis C., wife of brother Geo. Mason; and daughter of brother Joseph and sister Sarah Rife, aged 33 years, 7 months and 29 days. Funeral attended by the writer and others. The sister has left an affectionate husband and six small children and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but not as those who have no hope, as she lived a consistent member, and died in the faith of immortal glory.

JOHN F. EIKENBERRY.

[Companion, please copy.]

WHITMYER.—Killed by the cars in Chicago, Ill. On Feb. 17, Jacob, oldest son of friend Jacob, and Maria Whitmyer, aged 22 years. His body was also sent back to Langrange county, Ind., and interred on the 19th inst., in the same graveyard. On the 16th his parents received a letter when he was in good health, and was having a gay time in Chicago; but on the 17th a dispatch came, informing them that he was a corpse. Oh how horror-stricken the parents must have felt. May this be a warning to all of those who put their dependence in some future time, and may they solemnly reflect that they are fast hastening down to their graves, and probably, unprepared. How solemn and awful would it be if they could not be admitted into that glorious kingdom which is prepared for all who love God and keep his commandments, but have to sink never to rise. A. BOMGARDENER.

SHOOK.—In the Cold water congregation, Floyd county Iowa, on Dec. 28th 1873, sister Mary consort of brother Abraham Shook, dec'd, (some 11 years ago) her age was 68 years, 2 months and 1 day.

Funeral from 1. Cor. 15: 57, by W. J. H. Bauman and the writer, to a congregation, in our new stone meeting-house. Sister Shook was a mother in Israel and was worthy of imitation. J. F. EIKENBERRY.

TILFORD.—At Grand Rapids, Michigan, Anna, wife of John Tilford, aged 25 yrs., and 10 months. Her remains were sent back to Langrange county, Ind., where her interment took place on the 19th, and her funeral services attended to by friend Girard, Methodist minister. Text, 90th Psalm. The deceased belonged to the United Brethren Church.

HOFFECKER.—at the same place on Jan. 31st'74., of a lingering disease, sister Susannah Hoffecker, aged 49 years, 1 mo. and 6 days.

This subject suffered very much pain during her illness, until she gave up the ghost. She bore her affliction with great patience; she leaned upon Jesus, for she looked for a city which hath a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. She leaves a husband, who has been afflicted for years, and two daughters to mourn their loss yet to the sister we hope great gain. May the good Lord sustain the bereaved family in their affliction.

DANIEL KELLER.

SPLAWN.—In the Hamilton congregation Davis county, Mo., on Feb. 15th, 1874, David S., son of brother Isaac and sister Elizabeth Splawn, aged 6 months, less 1 day. Funeral discourse by Geo. Witwer, from Job 1: 21.

Another tender babe has gone,
To share those joys above;
To wait for you who now do mourn,
To bask in Jesus' love.

Weep not, your loss is his gain,
His troubles are all o'er;
Prove faithful, you shall meet again,
On Canaan's happy shore.

THE FAMILY

'TIS SWEET TO KNOW.

J. S. THORP.

'Tis sweet to know ther's a robe and palm
And crown, that waits for me,
When Christ again to earth shall come,
With immortality.

'Tis sweet to know the city of God
Shall soon from heav'n descend,
And scatter its glory abroad
Through years that ne'er shall end

'Tis sweet to know that life and light,
Shall in that city reign;
That there shall come no shade of night
Neither sorrow nor pain.

'Tis sweet to know when we meet there,
Sin ne'er can part again;
But in the country, bright and fair,
With Jesus we shall reign.

'Tis sweet to know the saints of God
Shall there immortal be;
They'll rove those fields by th' crystal stream
In the shade of life's tree.

'Tis sweet to know though death and care,
May cloud our journey here,
In a little while we'll rest o'er there
'Mid eternity's cheer.

A HAPPY HOME.

The following article we clip from a newspaper published at New York, and contains thoughts that should be carefully preserved and practically used by every family tha desire to make home happy. Thousands are sadly mistaken when they presume that wealth is the "chief corner stone" of happiness.— J. H. MOORE.

Several miles out from the city, just in the edge of a village, stands a white house with green blinds. A pretty cotage home. Many a time have we opened the gate, passed into the yard where the young wife had trained roses to climb and pinks to spread as they gave beauty and fragance to a place which had become a workingman's paradise. Of a Saturday night there was indeed no place like home. No more happy place than this home, at least. It was like basking in the mellow sunshine of God's smile to visit here and behold what love, affection, industry and confidence could do toward making life beautiful beyond words.

The owner of this cottage home was not a rich man, but no man had greater wealth. He was an honest man. His eyes were like the cushions on which angels bear infants to heaven, so soft, gentle and full of tenderness were they. His heart ever seemed more like some beautiful thought budding into flower than the arena wherein struggle human passions, so well had he controlled himself as did our Brother the waves when they obeyed His command to be still. He lived to concentrate his life—to make home the dearest and the sweetest place on earth, and the rectitude of his life spread sunshine all over and about the dear ones who awaited his coming. What God the great chemist had joined together, no silent yet powerful influence had put asunder, for our friend and the pure woman from whom he drew so much inspiration lived in the doorway of that beautiful belief that Home is Heaven when Home holds none but loving hearts.

Day after day our friend labored at his trade. Like the father of Jesus, he was a carpenter. He built houses for others and used the reward of his skill and labor to beautify his home. Thus he put his money to greater interest than any miser ever yet received or Shylock could demand He studied and worked. He built himself into a magnificient manhood. He trained his intelligence, which is immortal, toward Heaven, and frittered not himself away in fretfulness, dissipation or fault finding with his station or condition in life. He turned his strength to profit—his life to success—his vines to beautify his life and home. He planted contentment, and bounteous was the harvest of happiness he reaped for he was dearly beloved by a loving wife and three beautiful children. His wife was loving because she could not help being so. Mated, as well as married, their lives went sweetly on like wedded rivulets singing their way to the sea.

Their children were beautiful. They were conceived in love and born in the garden of complete confidence. While the weaver was at work in his mysterious chamber, there were no storms, no fits of ugly passion, no lowering skies, no crossing of purposes and filling of hearts with agony to the tangling and twisting and wraping of life threads in the unborn, so the little ones who came into the world were beautiful and dearly loved blessings. Would that we knew words in which to convey ideas. Oh! that we could sit with all who are waiting to be parents and tell them how love beautifies, and unkindness to her who is to be a mother, mars, scars and distorts the innocent till they come into the world laden with the seeds of misery for their after lives on earth. When men know what men should know, and women live as women should live. every child born to earth will be born to happiness. But not of this now.

Our friend was an honest man. He dared be true to himself. He dared to be true to his manhood. He dared to be true to the woman he loved. Few are the men so brave as he. His home held him by night as did his duty by day. He lived, not to add to that insane throng which mistakes excitement for happiness, but to aid his wife and his children to develop and grow in that strength of heart and soul which gives us positions in the ranks of those who are God's companions in the Gardens of the Golden eternal.

When the laborers of the day were over, he hastened to his cottage home. He was welcomed on the way by those whose little feet ran to meet, whose little lips did sweetly greet him. He was not too proud to play with his little ones. He was not too dignified to love his wife. He was not so great as to make his home ones unhappy in the shadow of his selfish ambition. He was a workingman, untitled on earth, but wearing on his heart the garter of the knighthood of God. He loved his children and they loved him, because he was good and his presence was the balmy air wafting them on to lasting and everlasting happiness.—Pomeroy.

A THOUSAND BOYS WANTED.

We find in the New York Observer the following admirable suggestions to our youth, so many thousands of whom are waiting for remunerative employment:

There are always boys enough in the market, but some of them are of little use. The kind that are always wanted are—

1. Honest.
2. Pure.
3. Intelligent.
4. Active.
5. Industrious.
6. Obedient.
7. Steady.
8. Obliging.
9. Polite.
10. Neat.

One thousand first-rate places are open for a thousand boys who come up to this reasonable standard.

Each boy can suit his taste as to the kind of business he would prefer. The places are ready in every kind of occupation.

Many of these places of trade and art are already filled by boys who lack some of the most important points, but they will soon be vacant.

One has an office where the lad who has the situation is losing his first point. He likes to attend the singing saloon and the theater. This costs more money than he can afford, but somehow he manages to be there frequently.

His employers are quietly watching to learn how he gets so much spending-money; they will soon discover a leak in the money drawer, and detect the dishonest boy, and his place will be ready for some one who is now getting ready for it by observing point No. 1, and being truthful in all his ways.

Some situations will soon be vacant because the boys have been poisoned by reading bad books, such as they would not dare to show their fathers and would be ashamed to have their mothers see.

The impure thoughts suggested by these books will lead to vicious acts; the boys will be ruined, and their places must be filled.

Who will be ready for one of these vacancies?

Distinguished and useful ministers, skillful physicians, successful merchants, must all soon leave their places for somebody else to fill. One by one they are removed by death.

Mind your ten points, boys: they will prepare you to step into vacancies in the front rank. Every man who is worthy to employ a boy is looking for you if you have these points.

Do not fear that you will be overlooked. A young person having these qualities will shine as plainly as a star at night.

We have named ten points to go toward making up the character of a successful boy, so that they can be very easily remembered. You can imagine one on each finger, and so keep them in mind; they will be worth more than diamond rings, and you will then never be ashamed "to show your hand."

THREE BAD THINGS.

There are three things all young people should strive to avoid. Bad thoughts, bad words and bad deeds. A bad thought is like poison in the mind, and the longer it remains there the more injury it will do. The bite of a serpent, or a mad dog, is not more deadly. Strive then to keep all bad thoughts out of your mind; fear them, shun them, fight against them, and earnestly pray to be kept free from them. Bad thoughts usually lead to bad words, and bad words will surely bring him that uses them into great trouble. They creep through the ear into the heart, and lead us to break God's commandments; hence you must carefully close your ears against bad words, and flee from those that use them as you would from a pestilence. Bad deeds follow bad thoughts and bad words. Bad thoughts entered into the heart of the first boy that was ever born and the result was that he killed his brother. Keep bad thoughts out of your mind and you will be sure to use no bad words, and if you use no bad words, you may be kept from doing bad deeds. Quench the first spark and you will save the house from being set on fire. Subdue the first evil thought and you will be sure to do no bad deed. Good thoughts are the source of every thing else that is good; therefore keep good thoughts in your mind, and you will not be troubled with those three hurtful things, bad thoughts, bad words, and deeds.

DANIEL MILLER.

MANNERS.

Manners are more important than money. A boy who is polite and pleasant in his manners, will always have friends, and will not often make enemies. Good behavior is essential to prosperity. A boy feels well when he does well. If you wish to make everybody pleasant about you and gain friends wherever you go, cultivate good manners. Many boys have pleasant manners for company, and ugly manners for home.

We visited a small railroad town, not long since, and were met at the depot by a little boy about eleven or twelve years, who entertained and cared for us, in the absence of his father, with as much polite attention and thoughtful care as the most cultivated gentleman could have done. We said to his mother, before we left her home, "You are greatly blessed in your son, he is so attentive and obliging."

"Yes," she said:—"I can always depend on Charley when his father is absent. He is a great help and comfort to me." She said this as if it did her heart good to acknowledge the cleverness of her son.

The best manners cost so little, and are worth so much, that every boy can have them.—Children's Advocate.

OBEDIENCE.

A company of boys were playing very earnestly one day, and were evidently enjoying themselves finely. One, in particular, seemed to be the leader of their sports, and his whole heart was in the play.

Just as he was proposing a new game, and instructing his comrades about it, a neighboring window was thrown up, and a sweet, gentle voice called:

"Charley, your father wants you."

The window was closed at once, and the gentle lady immediately withdrew, not even stopping to see whether Charley heard, much less to ask him if he was coming.

The boy was so busily playing that it seemed doubtful if the mother's quiet voice would reach his ear, but she knew her boy, and the words had hardly escaped her lips before everything was dropped, playmates and play forsaken, and Charley was within doors, in answer to the call.

I think I have seen a boy somewhere who does not obey quite like that. Do you know what his name is?—Little Christian.

MURMUR at nothing; if our ills are irreparable, it is ungrateful; if remediless, it is vain. A Christain builds his fortitude on a better foundation than stoicism; he is pleased with everything that happens, because he knows it could not happen unless it had first pleased God, and that which pleases Him must be the best. He is assured that no new thing can befall him, and that he is in the hands of a Father who will prove him with no affliction that resignation can not conquer, or that death can not cure.—Colton.

LITERATURE.

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT: or, Doctrinal and Practical Meditations on the nature and work of the Holy Ghost. By Rev. Samuel Cutler, (Rand and Houghton, for American Tract Society, Boston.) 12 mo. cloth gilt, red line edition, $2.00. For sale at Blair's.

This work is by the author of that handbook for Christians published a few years since entitled "The Name above Every Name" containing a text for every day, with a meditation, and selected poetry for every week in the year, on the Scriptural titles of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. This book is on a similar plan, relating to the nature and office of the Holy Spirit, and cannot fail to enable the earnest Christian reader to depend more and more on the agency of the heavenly Comforter for that wisdom, holiness and peace which emanates from, and which makes its possessor more like unto God. The book is admirably gotten up, appropriate for the "pure gold" it contains. "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of Life."

—Oliver Optics Magazine for March is an excellent number. It contains installments of three serials, adapted to the juvenile mind, but not wanting in interest to those advanced in years. They are full of adventures and exciting incidents, and are appropriately illustrated. The rich variety of other contributions makes an attractive table of contents. Each subscriber at $3.00 per year receives the beautiful "Pastelle" picture, "The coming wave." (Durkee & Foxcroft Managers, Boston.)

—The success of the Daily Graphic has been so signal, that the publishers have yielded to the urgent demand of their patrons, and the public, and issued a Weekly Graphic, which comes forth embodying every element of success—merit and cheapness,—$2.50 a year with a gem of a chromo free. (Graphic Company, N. Y.)

—Old and New for March contains much good reading, some striking poetry and some seasonable and instructive papers on social subjects. One of the poems is a meditation among the tombs at New Orleans, which is interesting notwithstanding the gloominess of the subject. The editor in his introduction to the number presents the recommendation, that it should be made the regular business of the churches to conduct, each in its own district, the "outdoor poor relief" business, which is a matter worthy of serious consideration. Several papers of public interest are given in this number. (F. B. Perkins, Business Agent, Boston.)

—Popular Science Monthly for March, if such a thing be possible, excels either of its predecessors in the attractiveness of its contents. No periodical in the country is so interesting to the scientific student, and lover of progress. This number contains a portrait, biography, and account of the autopsy of Prof. Agassiz; an article by Prof. Hitchcock upon the world before the introduction of man; articles selected from various foreign sources—"Alternations in the Intensity of disease;" "Disposal of the Dead;" "Physiology of the Passions," &c. Every article is good, and of scientific value. The most striking papers in this number are Prof. Rood's lecture upon "Modern Optics & Painting," the new theory of the variations of the facial angle, by Dr. Dexter, and that on the "Phyriology of the Passions," which gives the true theory of sensation &c., as obtained from the recent experiments and deductions. (D Appleton & Co. New York.)

—A new Magazine, The Great Western Monthly, has been started lately in Philadelphia, Pa., which has a large field open for its influence. We will give the character of the work on receipt of the Nos. (Great Western Pub. Co.)

—The Schoolday Magazine would form an excellent class reading book in schools. (J. W. Daughaday & Co., Philada.)

—In the Phrenological Journal for March, will be found an interesting paper on the late Siamese Twins, also Mr. Waite, chief justice of the United States, with much other interesting and instructive reading, the fact is whatever new and progressive is always found in this wide awake Journal. Among all the Magazines that come to our office, there are none received with a better grace than the Phrenological Journal. (Published by S. S. Wells, 389 Broadway. New work, at $3.00 per year.)

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 130,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

COMMISSIONED OF GOD.

—BY—

WESLEY.

My heart was sad and burdened.
And cares full constant flowed;
As musing I proceeded
Along the lonely road.

All nature sought to cheer me,
The songsters in the trees,
Poured forth their sweetest carols
Upon the summer breeze.

The flowers cast their fragrance
Athwart my gloomy path;
In vain they strove to lure me,—
I trod the vale of death.

My soul imbibed the waters
Of sorrow's bitter stream;
I fancied hell was real,
And Heaven but a dream.

Oh how I longed to enter
Some less uncertain state,
Where mortals are not laden
With guilt's depressing weight.

While thus I felt the arrows
That pierce the wayward heart,
A voice said, Oh! so softly,
"Choose ye the better part."

Encouraged thus, I lifted
From earth my tearful eye,
When lo! a form of beauty
My vision did descry.

His robe the lily rivaled.
That blooms in Eden's bowers;
His breath the spicy essence
Of twice ten thousand flowers.

Whilst from His person issued
A stream of glorious light;
That day's full glare exceeded
As noon-tide does the night.

As to me he extended
His lacerated hand;
I felt my gloom departing,
As 'neath a fairy's wand.

Then falling down before Him,
I kissed His sacred feet;
While words of sweetest import,
My list'ning ear did greet.

The joys that greet the faithful
Hard by the golden throne,
He said should swell my bosom
If I His cause would own.

And if my feeble powers
Would celebrate His praise;
A crown should grace my forehead,
Throughout eternal days.

A harp attuned by angels,
He placed within my hand;
And bade me sing of Jesus
Throughout my native land.

And when the dark-winged angel
Shall bear my soul away;
I'll sing when night's dark shadows
Ne'er blot the face of day.

THE TRUE RICHES.

I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich. Rev 3: 18.

John, that beloved disciple, saw in a vision, while on the Isle of Patmos, the lamentable condition of the Church at Laodicea; and was requested to write to them and apprise them of the danger they were in. This Church, no doubt, was established upon the same basis that the other seven Churches of Asia were, and since we have no evidence to the contrary, we may reasonably conclude, that they observed the commands laid down by the great Law Giver. In short, they had the form of godliness, but not the essence thereof, because they were found to be in a lukewarm condition, and did not manifest that zeal which actuates the Children of God. They were rich in their own estimation, and said they were increased with goods, and were in need of nothing; yet they did not possess the true riches, that emanates from God. Therefore, "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire," which is an emblem of the true riches, which have stood the test for eighteen-hundred years, through the fiery ordeal of persecution, and has not in the least changed its brilliancy, unto the present day.

It has however, been so successfully counterfeited by the combined efforts of men and devils, that it is sometimes hard to detect, except when fiery persecutions arise, when it will vanish away like dew before the morning sun. It is an easy matter to be a Christian in the eyes of the world, when all goes well. but the heart of man is deceitful, and wicked above all things. This spurious coin, which the world terms "religion," has been so artfully modeled and remodeled, and sown broadcast over the world, that all can be accommodated in their own peculiar way. It is no uncommon thing to hear it said that, a man is justified in doing as he believes; and this sentiment has become so popular, that the so-called Evangelical Alliance attempts to consolidate the different sects, that by so doing they may bring forth a Goliah who will defy the armies of the living God, and teach for doctrines, the commandments of men, and need we wonder, for the enemy himself has has put on the garb of righteousness? O, then, Brethren, let us be on our guard, and not loiter by the way, but double our diligence in the Master's cause, that we may not be found in that lukewarm condition, which is so grievious in the sight of the Lord, for nothing but the pure and undefiled religion, will stand at the coming Day. Then let us make no compromise with the enemy, but be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might, and put on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, powers, and against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places, for the enemy with all his host, stands ready to make a charge at our ranks, and take us captive at his will, but if we stand firm upon that rock Christ Jesus, we shall be able to come out conquerors, and more than conquors through him that loved us.

PRIDE.

When I view the subject of pride in the Gospel light I am constrained to believe that it is one of the great evils of our day, and a device of satan, the adversary of the soul, by which man is drawn away from his Creator and from the path of duty and rectitude. We learn from the sacred pages that it is an evil that proceeds out of the heart of man, and I truly believe it is made manifest in many and various ways, which I will not here denominate. However we also find that pride is not of the Father but of the world, and consequently must also perish with the world. If then the pride of life proceeds from the heart of man and belongs to the world, it is at once evident that it is an abomination in the sight of God. For it is said in the word of truth that God knows the heart, and also, "that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God." We should also give an ear to Paul's letter to his Roman brethren where he says, "and be not conformed to this word; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. And again, "Mind not high things but condescend to men of low estate." We can nowhere find in the book of divine revelations that God delights in pride, but on the contrary it is said that he will resist the proud. but give grace to the humble. If such then is the case I can arrive at no other conclusion than that the true followers of Christ must deny himself of all the vain and foolish fashions of this world, for he will find no room on his narrow way to indulge in pride under any of its different aspects. He should even abstain from the very appearance of this great and growing evil. I have said growing evil, from the fact that I do believe it is continually swelling, and that in the Church. But no wonder, because we will occasionally hear brethren and sisters argue the case and say that it matters not so much how we dress if only the heart is right, so as not to pride with it. This I consider unphilosophical reasoning, from the fact that I candidly believe that the appearance of the outward man will harmonize with the inner man. So then let us who profess to have put on Christ shun this growing evil and put on the whole armour of light, and let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works, and thereby glorify our Father which is in heaven. We are not to put our light under a bushel but on a candle-stick. We should be very cautious in this respect, see that we do not become detrimental to the cause of Christ, for I do believe that pride is a hindrance to the progress of the Church of Christ, and therefore should be more strongly and firmly opposed by those who have the oversight of the Church. In conclusion I will yet say that I truly believe, if every member of the Church would strictly adhere to his baptismal vow, wherein he renounced satan with all his pernicious ways, that pride would be a stranger in the Church.

THE WIDOW'S CANDLE.

A poor widow in her penury allowed herself the luxury of a half-hour's candle-light after her toilsome day was done; and this was that she might read her precious Bible, Experience had taught her how far it would burn in a half-hour. So it was her custom to light it for a few moments, and read such a portion as she thought she could remember; then to blow out her light and think over what she had read. So she continued until the mark on her candle was reached.

Such meditations, joined with humble prayer, could not fail to extract the pure honey from the honey-comb. The joy of the evening's feast more than made amends for all the day's ills. She lived the truths she had thus made her own; and was truly "mighty in the Scriptures."

We can never gain the Gospel gold except we delve for it. Careless reading over a chapter or two will never secure it. Better one verse with meditation, than the whole book read thoughtlessly.—The Christian.

NEVER be sorry of a generous thing that you ever did, even if it was betrayed. Never be sorry that you were magnanimous, if the man was mean afterwards. Never be sorry that you gave. It was right for you to give, even if you were imposed upon. You can not afford to keep on the safe side by being mean.

We cannot see the twinings
In God's long cord of love;
We cannot trace the windings
By matchless wisdom wove.
E'en as a skein, when raveled,
Still holds the bidden end,
So love's mysterious windings
Around our footsteps blend.

As the earth is but a point compared with the heavens, so are earthly troubles compared with heavenly joys.

Temptations are a file which rub off much of the rust of our self-confidence.—Fenelon,

To the natural man, Time is the substance, Eternity the shadow; to the spiritual man, Eternity is the substance, Time the shadow.

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousnes is righteous, even as he is righteous.—1 John 3 : 7.

The person spoken of in the text by the pronoun He is the Lord Jesus Christ, who Himself was, and continues to be the righteousness of God, for he was made of God unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. The old saxon word for righteous was, right-wise; that is, right and wise. The word means just, according to the divine law, and when applied to persons, it denotes one who is holy in heart, and observant of the divine commands in practice. The righteous in Scripture, denote the servants of God, the saints. Righteousness is purity of heart and rectitude of life; conformity of heart and life to the divine law, as used in Scripture and theology, (in which it is chiefly used), is nearly equivolent to holiness, comprehending holy principles and affections of heart, and conformity of life to the divine law. It includes all we call justice, honesty and virtue, with holy affections, in short, it is true religion. (Webster.) All these traits of obedience were perfect in the Lord Jesus; for "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation to all those who obey him." And now, all that do righteousness, are and will be righteous, even as he is righteous.

Looking at him as an example for imitation, we find him declaring that he and the Father are one; and that he came not to do his own will, but the will of the Father who sent him; and that the words he spake were not his but the Father's, who had given him a commandment what he should speak, and what he should do. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting. There is no instance on record that he ever refused to do his Father's will. When it was the Father's will that he should become poor, that the lost would through his poverty be made rich, he emptied himself of all the glory he had with the Father and became poorer than the birds of the air, and the foxes of the forest. When it was his Father's will that all righteousness should be fulfilled in his baptism, he went down into the flowing stream of Jordan, and coming up out of the water the Heavens were opened, and the spirit in the bodily form of a dove lighting on him, while the voice of the Father acknowledged him to be his Son in whom he was well pleased. And when it was the will of the Father that he must undergo the anxiety of a bloody sweat, and the ignominious death of the cross, he merely in earnest prayer, asked the Father if it were possible that that bitter cup might pass from him without his drinking it; nevertheless not my will but thine be done. In obedience to his Father's commands, and will, is he righteous. Even so now, all who are one with him, being children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and who are baptized into him, put him on, and become obedient to him in all things; walking in all his commandments and ordinances blameless, are righteous, even as he is righteous.

It is said in the Scriptures that Zachariah and Elizabeth his wife were both righteous before God. How were they righteous? By walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. So let us walk, searching the Scriptures to know what the commandments and ordinances of the Lord are, so we may walk in them intelligently, beginning with the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, repentance from dead works, faith in God and baptism. That is, after repentance and faith, to be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; three actions to make one evangelical baptism, as three separate and distinct persons in the trinity make and constitute one God. As St. Ambrose says, when we are baptized we are three times dipped that the mystery of the trinity may more fully appear. A mystery however the worldly wise know nothing of, but is revealed unto the babes in Christ, even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight; for which we thank God and take courage. Being thus evangelically bro't into the Church of God, and in it keep, and observe all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless we do righteousness, and are declared to be righteous, even as he, Jesus is righteous. And God by the prophet says, "Say ye to the righteous it shall be well with them, and to the wicked that it shall be ill with them." Solomon beautifully portrays the final ending of the righteous and the wicked. He says, "Then shall the righteous man stand in great boldness before the face of such as have afflicted him. When they (the wicked) see it, they shall be troubled with terrible fear, and shall be amazed at the strangeness of his salvation, so far beyond all that they looked for. And they repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit say within themselves, This was he whom we had sometimes in derision, and a proverb of reproach: We fools accounted his life madness, and his end to be without honor: How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints, therefore have we erred from the way of truth, and the light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the sun of righteousness rose not upon us. We wearied ourselves in the way of wickedness and destruction; yea we have gone through deserts, where lay no way, but as for the way of the Lord, we have not known it. What hath pride profited us? or what good hath riches with one vaunting bro't us? All these things are passed away like a shadow, and as a post that has teth by."

Here dear reader you have the righteous and the wicked truthfully set before you. Will you hesitate which of the two you will choose to be? If you cast your lot with the righteous you may endure the scoffs of the wicked for a little while, but the end will be grand. But if you choose to go with the wicked to enjoy their false and delusive pleasures for but a very short season, you will have to endure your own repentings, groanings and anguish of soul for ever. Then in the language of Moses to his father-in-law, let me invite you to come and go along with us and we will do you good; for the Lord has spoken good concerning them that do his righteousness. The Brethren are the only people who will help you to do all righteousness; with them only can you do, keep, and observe all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord. Come then and go along with us and we will do you good. We will encourage you in repentance, and strengthen you in faith. When you weep we will weep and pray with you; we will watch with you, we will love you, and baptize you with the true and evangelical baptism. We will wash your feet and have you do the same for us; we will eat the Lord's Supper with you, and you with us. We will break the bread and drink the cup of the Communion of the body and blood of Christ with you; we will greet you with the brotherly kiss of charity. In short we will help you to do all the commandments of the Lord as taught in the Scriptures, and so help you to do all righteousness that you may be righteous even as Jesus is righteous, and be saved. Then

"Come give us your hand, and the Savior your heart,
And trusting in Heaven, we never shall part;
O, how can we leave you? Why will you not come?
We'll journey together, and soon be at home.

WOMEN'S WHISKEY WAR.

No doubt some of the readers of the PILGRIM have heard more or less in regard to the crusade of the women of Ohio, especially here of southwestern Ohio, against the sellers of intoxicating drinks. The crusade began about the beginning of the New Year and continues with unabated interest at many places, while at others the saloons have all been closed. Up to about a week ago, in 24 towns, out of 184 saloons, 109 had been closed and 75 remained open; and out of 26 drug stores, which have been reputed to sell liquors, 22 had ceased to sell and 4 continued. This shows that in 24 towns, 131 places where liquor was constantly sold several months ago, have been closed—closed not by the strong arm of the law, but in obedience to public sentiment which is stronger than law. Napoleon trembled before the one but disregarded the other, even tho' all Europe were to issue writs upon him. It is claimed by the women that the law has been tried ever since the liquor trafic has cursed the land, and that it has proved a failure, and now to protect themselves and to save their own brothers, sons and husbands, they have taken the matter into their own hands, and mean to use their own weapons. And no one doubts their sincerity; though it was at first prophecied that this movement which seemed to spring up like a mushroon in a night would as quickly pass away. The rum-sellers at first looked upon it as a good joke; but if I mistake not, they have changed their minds, and now their chief concern is how they may effect a combination to defeat the women; or in case they can not do that, where they may find a soft place to fall.

Let it not be supposed that the women of Ohio are greatly excited over this new reform, or that they go about their work in a boisterous or imperious manner. So far as my observation goes, nothing could be farther from the truth. I never saw calmer or more serious faces than those I have seen kneeling on the rough pavement and singing the solemn songs of Zion in front of the saloon and the drug stores of this place; and I may add that I never heard a more solemn appeal made to any sinner to turn from the error of his way and be a man than I heard an elderly Quaker lady make to the rum-seller of this place. The man (Oh! it seems to me ought to call him some other name) stood, however, in his fine clothes and three story silk hat, as unmoved and self-satisfied as though he were king of all he surveyed, and as though these tearful faces had merely come to bow before him and there do him merited reverence! This same man has, I am told, the offer of all the whiskey and other strong drinks that he can sell within the next year gratis if he will only hold out. How the wicked band together when their craft is in danger!

I was present at a novel court trial yesterday. The court room was jammed with eager listeners, at least one-half of which were women. The doughty rum-seller of one of the towns of this county sued about 120 women of his native village on the plea that they were a nuisance and had interfered with, and almost destroyed his lawful and legitimate business. He presented a host of affidavits from his "customers" setting forth his grievances in as strong a light as possible and laying the damages at $1000. Truly selling "tobacco, cigars, ale, beer and wine from the pure juice of the grape" must be a profitable business when it is not interfered with by "praying and song-singing women." Listen to the tramp, tramp of the 600,000 drunkards who annually go down to dishonored graves, and then answer, is it a profitable business? But a sight of this great army of inebriates would give us but a faint idea of the cost of intemperance did we not look into the homes and hearts made desolate and miserable by this great scourge of the nation.

But to return. The above case was ably argued on both sides, but I have not the least doubt but that the ladies (women, I think they prefer to be called at present) will come out victorious. The decision will not be given until one week hence. This is the second case of the kind that has occurred since the crusade began. Whether the law will be more effectual in hindering the women from carrying on their great moral reform, than it was in stopping the trafic in liquor remains to be seen.

HAPPINESS IN HEAVEN.

What can we say of Heaven? We know little, and cannot tell even that little. But we will venture to affirm that if Heaven were now laid open to our view, we should no longer be fit to dwell upon the earth; our minds would be so engaged with the rapturous scene, that everything else would sink into insignificance, and every other engagement would be neglected. The present order of things would be deranged and the beings to whom it was presented, would be rendered worthless. If the spirit of the Queen of Sheba left her at the sight of Solomon's glory, and Jacob fainted when he heard that his son Joseph was alive, and the sound of the wagons had so great an effect on him, how could it be possible to behold the Heavens and live upon earth, However with all our deficiencies we are not totally ignorant of the happiness of Heaven. This much we know, small vessels do not hold so much as large ones, notwithstanding all may be full.

In Heaven we shall see our fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, and our dear little ones that were taken from us. We loved them here. How much more when we behold them smiling, shining cherubs. Husbands and wives, parents and children, ministers and people, kindred and friends, will there meet to part no more forever. And as we have no right to suppose that our memories will fail us, what can prevent us from knowing each other. Peter, James and John knew Moses and Elias. Paul told the Thessalonians that they were his hope and joy, and crown, at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.—1. Thess. 2: 19. Surely then he must know them.

Jesus to give his followers the best of comfort in the worst of times, assured them that in his Father's house are many mansions. Heaven is a house, not a tent that is put up only for a few days; neither is it a house made with hands, that with its builder must shortly crumble into dust. The Savior calls it his Father's house, and we all know that His Father is the Father of every believer. In Him and His house is their home. The way to get up high is to come down low. Those who patiently bear contempt from wicked men, shall be respected by God, and all good men. Though the Lord be high and independent of all his creatures, he is not unmindful of them, he never forgets their cry. Guard against pride as a thing unbecoming, a disgrace to your profession, and a dishonor to your Savior. Though the proud may despise the humble, yet the Lord has respect for them. Though the Lord be high above all, though his being and perfections exalted him infinently above every creature, not only high above all that they can have, but above all they can conceive concerning him, yet hath he respect for the lowly; He is the high and lofty one, higher than the highest, yet he is not so high that he cannot stoop so low as to respect the lowly. He is so well pleased with them that he deigns to bow over the battlements of Heaven to cast a gracious look upon them, and even while he has Heaven for his throne, and the earth for his foot-stool, he overlooks both to look and smile upon them. He hath respect for the humble penitent, and accepts of him, while he looks at the proud afar off. Those who scorn to be beholding to the grace of God, expose themselves to the scorn of the God of grace, but those who humble themselves to bear the cross shall be exalted to wear the crown. The surest way to become rich and honorable is to become poor and contemptable. The humblest sinners make the brightest saints.

Say, Christian, is not the love of God in Christ Jesus the source of all present grace, and the security of future glory? Surely this ought to sink us low and keep us humble, yet it should excite hope and keep us rejoicing in the Redeemer. When we come before God it should be in our rags, and not in our robes. The proud hypocrite justifies himself, but God justifies the humble sinner.

What have we to be proud of? It is impossible for a proud sinner and a holy God ever to be reconciled, for God resisteth the proud. The first step toward Heaven is humility. Humility makes men look like angels. but bigotry makes them look like devils.

GODLINESS.

Man's character is made up of various attributes and motives, which, though in the main are good of themselves, are often turned into improper channels. Men being blinded by their ambitions, and lusts, have miscalled good, evil, and evil, good. In trying to improve upon God's plan, or striving to make pure, plain, practical religion grand and imposing, they have introduced many needless formulas, foolish rites, and sinful ceremonies. True godliness is the quality of being godly, or as Paul defines it, it is denying ungodliness, and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world.

Thus we see that godliness of itself, does not consist in performing certain outward ceremonies nor adopting some man-made creed, though these things may, by some, be falsely called by that name. Paul, in writing to Timothy, mentions a class of persons "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," and forther says, "from such turn away." The question here suggests itself first. What is godliness? It is a quality of character which is alone attainable by a strict obedience to God's law, and which does not naturally belong to man, but will be imputed unto him through faith in Christ Jesus.

Godliness cannot be mistaken, as it gives by its fruits abundant proof of genuineness. It is meek, long suffering and charitable, enabling men so to let their light shine before their fellows that they may see their good works and glorify their Father which is in Heaven. Second. What is the form of godliness? The form of godliness in the sense of our text might be thus defind: "Having the form or appearance, without the substance or essence, external; as formal duty; formal worship." Webster. Complying with certain requirements, such as attending worship, partaking of the sacraments, public exhortation or prayers belong to the form and not the substance of religion.

The Pharisees were punctilious in these matters. Hear our Savior's words to them, which are fully appreciable to modern formalists: "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat; and swallow a camel. Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup, and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess." Matt. 23: 23—25.

The form of godliness is not to be entirely annulled, for all things should be done" decently and in order, "and these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone." Some forms, as the Lord's supper, &c., are divinely appointed, yet men, who abuse God-given, moral and mental attributes, have misused his ordinances and misinterpeted Scripture.

This brings us to the 3rd and last question, what is the power of godliness? The power of godliness is that strength which is given all who seek it by complying with the requirements of the gospel through faith. It gives to man the moral ability to know that which is right, and supplies strength to perform all duty, no matter how great the opposition or persecution which may arise. It subdues inherent evil, conquers the carnal mind, and softens the hardened heart, making every thought purpose, and action subservient to God's law and will. It has supported the martyr's, the suffering and tempted in all ages, and causes men to rate all things dross for the sake of Christ. It comforts in sorrow, strengthens in trial, and conquers sin, satan, and all opposition, helping men to lead consistent, holy, calm, lives amidst abounding iniquity, disturbances and contentions. It keeps us from sin, saves us in this present evil world and gives us no assurance of reward in that to come.

It was this wonderful power which led Paul to beautifully write, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ; shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or the sword: For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 8: 35—39.

There are those, who by their liver deny the power of godliness, and we are bidden to turn away from them. Let us then obey the command, "Be ye separate," "peculiar" serving God with a full purpose of heart, praying for light and wisdom to avoid error in theory or practice. Let us beware lest we cling to certain forms, or perhaps certain points of doctrine, neglecting the weightier matters of a pure, practical, active piety that will make us work for the cause of truth and for the salvation of sinners. God help us to keep unspotted in these trying times, then when Jesus comes we shall not be ashamed, but shall reap the fruits of Godliness in a world without end, free from pain, solicitude and sorrow. Sinner will you come and join those whose names are written in the book of life? If so, forsake evil-doing, turn, to Jesus, believe, live godly, and all will be well.—The World's Crisis."

LOVE.

Love!—the master passion of life! the grand, the beautiful dream whose echo-tone follows us as hidden music down the journey of life, whose memory is a never-forgotten poem, filled with the rarest and sweetest perfumes of the heart's past; a faded flower whose freshness and morning dew have vanished, but whose odors still remain, reminding the lonely of the beauties that were; of the song that never dies; of the youth that cannot grow old; of the days of hope, when the slumbering soul was first awakened to dreams and aspirations that can never fade away, and filled the world with beauties it knew not before.

Oh! sweet to me still was the tone that was gentlest and dearest to me in that far off past, though I wander away from the scenes where I first learned to interpret its mystic power. Sweet is the memory awakened as I recall the glorious visions that appeared before my youthful eyes. In the grand sublimity of my ideal world I live them over again, and each hope-flower blooms with the freshness of that happy spring time. No withering buds, no blighted flowers greet me then, when bright-winged fairies wave me their magic wands, gild the past with golden light.—No sickening sense of loneliness or broken plight steals over me when I go back to that happy dream of love. The real is forgotten as I listen to the musical murmurs that surge up from the long ago.—I catch no wails of a heart crushed and bleeding; this memory alone remains to me—the undying essence of a sad, sweet dream.

Oh deeply I drank from the chalice of love
But it held no poison for me.
'Twas pure as the snow-flake that falls from above,
And as holy as holy could be.

Then why should I sigh that my love was crossed?
Mayhap I am happier so;
For I now hold that can never be lost—
The cherished dreams of long ago!

WITH ALL THE HEART.

That was a striking thing, said one of the kings belonging to the Hebrew royalty, when the work and results of his successful reign were being summed up: "He did it with all his heart, and prospered."

This doing things with a hearty enthusiasm is often what makes the doer a marked person and his deeds effective. It is so everywhere. The most ordinary service is dignified when it is performed in that spirit. Every employer wants those who work for him to put heart into the toil. He soon picks out those whose souls are in their service, and gives them evidence of his appreciation. They do not need constant watching. He can trust them in his absence. The places of honor and profit naturally fall to them. They are the rising members of the toiling Brotherhood. They grow. They succeed. They are honored. They are in demand. They rebuke indifference and inspire fidelity in others by their example. They prosper, for they work in harmony with the law which God has established and maintains in the world.

In the sphere of religion this heartiness in service is specially needful and vital. What is not done heartily here is hardly done at all, as God estimates it. He wants sincerity, resolution, persistance, enthusiasm—not merely the consenting word and the lifeless formal act. A service that begins and ends with the letter is never acceptable service with him. The pharisee's tithe of mint and anise and cummin are often an offense; the publican's penitant cry and the poor woman's gift of two mites wear a royal glory in his eye, because he sees the whole souled devotion that lies behind them.—Morning Star.

A HEARTY welcome and God speed dear PILGRIM. Go on thou "white-winged" messenger of peace 'till thou hast proclaimed thy Heaven ordained message to earth's remotest bounds; from the rivers even unto the ends of the earth. And dear brethren of the press, by rendering unto God that which is God's, and unto Cæsar only that which is his, the Lord will prosper you in time and eternity, for you are placed in a position of the most momentous importance and responsibility. Take heed unto yourselves and to your ways, and then there shall be crowns in reserve for you which shall have many bright stars in their glorious constellation. Yours in the pilgrimage for Heaven. C. C. ROOT.

The justifying faith puts the soul (as sensible of its lost condition by the law) upon flying for refuge unto Christ's righteousness, which righteousness of his is not an act of grace by which He makes our obedience accepted with God for justification, but his personal obedience to the law in doing and suffering for us what that law required at our hands. This righteousness true faith accepteth, under the skirt of which the soul being shrouded, and by it presented as spotless before God, it is accepted and acquitted from condemnation.—John Bunyan.

The cross of Christ on which he was extended, points in the length of it, to heaven and earth, reconciling them together; and in the breadth of it, to former and following ages, as being equally salvation to both.

The column is an emblem of Faith, it springs from earth to heaven: the arch symbolizes Mercy, it descends from heaven to earth.

He that cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man has need to be forgiven.—Lord Herbert.

STOP OFF

Those of our brethren who intend going to the Educational meeting at Martinsburg, are respectfully invited to stop off with us on Friday evening previous, as we have important information to communicate.

TRACTS.

We hereby inform our readers that the Anxious Bench tracts are now all sold and therefore can fill no more orders. The orders that we now have and may yet be received, will be filled with "Counterfeit Detectors" of which we have yet a small supply.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

As the time will soon be here that our readers will be changing locations we wish to drop an advice which we hope all will remember. When directing a change, always give the office from which it is to be changed as well as the one to which you wish it sent. By remembering this you will save yourselves from disappointment and us a great deal of time.

A CALL.

A few evenings ago we had a call from our esteemed brother and elder Grabill Myers. He was on his return from a preaching tour through the eastern churches. He reports the churches in a healthy condition, and that the meetings were well attended, interesting and profitable, a number having professed Christ with the determination of living better lives.

We are glad to inform our readers that he now enjoys better health than he has had for the last five years. On starting out on this trip he left his crutches at home, using two canes, and thinks by the time he goes again he can leave one of his canes. His soundness he attributes to the skill of our brother A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D. of this place, who, by the way, is one among the most skillful physicians of the age. Bro. Myers, no matter how many faults he may have, has but one object in view, the good and prosperity of the Church. With great propriety he can say:

"For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my cares and toils be given
'Till toils and cares shall end.

Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways;
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

He has travelled much through the world and Church with his eyes open, and as a result he entertains what some of our brethren call extremely liberal views, making considerable allowance for surrounding circumstances and influences. The more of this we see the more we are inclined to sympathize with the erring. Notwithstanding his age, he seems more alive to any movement which may be beneficial to the cause and the Church than many who are young and have the promise of a long life. His visits are enjoyable, and we hope that many days may be added to his eventful life.

CHURCH AND STAGE.

In the late Conference of the Episcopal Church of New York the subject of attending theatres was discussed, but it seemed difficult for them to decide whether it was allowable or not, for Christians to attend them. We need not wonder at this when such men as Henry Ward Beecher commences playing mule in the pulpit. Of late he has been playing actor quite successfully in his pulpit and it is said he really made the congregation roar with laughter. If Mr Beecher continues to be as successful in entertaining his audience it certainly would be quite appropriate to put up the regular sign and let things be known by their right names In a description of one of this great man's pulpit performances we are told that he mimicked a man walking a board laid in or over mud. Taking his place at one side of the platform, hands in his pockets, he walks easily in a straight line, as if on a board six inches wide, across to the other side. Now he puts the board at a height of fifteen feet, takes his position as he did before, he fixes his eyes in front of him as though on an elevated board, looks scared, and commences the imaginary passage. Wavering and balancing, with his arms extended, he with difficulty got half way across and then stumbled as if falling. At this, our account says the people laughed out loud—But the entertainment is not over yet. He next mimics a miser who had reformed and begun by releasing a mortgage on a poor man's farm. After going through the different acts he mounted an imaginary horse and rode off bending his knees in exact imitation of a rider, and cutting behind with an imaginary whip. At this every body laughed till the tears came. This is the way that the great Beecher enforces gospels truths, and we do not wonder that he makes many converts.

Truly is it "said, satan always has some mischief for idle hands to do." When devils laugh angels weep.

GOOD NEWS.

Good news maketh glad the heart, but what is accepted as good news by some, is not by others. We are differently constituted, and surrounded by different circumstances, therefore our aspirations are different. While many are seeking the honors of the world, others are grasping for wealth, and still others are praying for deliverance from sin and the power of satan. There are many things to gladden the heart, but there is nothing so cheering to the Christian as the news of precious souls being snatched from the eternal burnings. We have just received intelligence of a series of meetings held at Milford, Ind., which resulted in 57 being baptized,—from Antioch, Ind., 12,—from a Church in the eastern part of Pa., (have forgotten the name) 20 precious souls came out for Christ. In Maryland we are informed of 7 additions, and a number of others reported by correspondents, that we cannot now remember. These things are ominous and go to show that the Church is awakening up to the importance of the great work of preaching the Gospel. The free gift of salvation was purchased with a great price, and we are now chosen as the administrators. Shall we remain at home, consulting our ease while thousands of souls are starving, perishing for want of the Bread of Life? Think of it dear brethren, and let no opportunity be lost in which precious souls might be winned to Christ. The promises are sure and exceedingly great and justify us in leaving no effort unmade that might result in turning one sinner from the error of his ways. Great victories cannot be achieved by small efforts. In times of peace, a small standing army is sufficient to protect a nation, but when a rebellion breaks out great armies are needed. In our warfare there is no time of peace, but the contest is growing hotter and hotter, satan's hosts are gaining in number every day, and if we expect any victories we must call forth our united force and fight with a determination to win or die in the conquest. From such an effort made, we can expect good news from the camps of Zion.

EDUCATIONAL

The school movement seems to be creating considerable interest and the prospects are good for a fair representation of those interested in education. The time has come that it is expected of all people to be consistent. We as a church must either discard education altogether or else make some provisions towards obtaining it. The fact that our children are sent to the higher grades of schools by the scores and hundreds is as indisputable evidence that educational interests are growing amongst us. The Brethren are now sending enough children away from home to support several good schools and many of them return home with their minds so tainted with sectarian influences that their after deportment does not very well correspond with the humble teaching of the church of Christ, thus casting a stigma upon education that is wholy unjust as true education had nothing to do with it, but it was the influence that was brought to bear upon their minds while attending school. To suppose that our children can be educated in sectarian school in the midst of the vanities of a gay and fashionable society, without having their judgment biased is to suppose a thing that is against reason and human nature. Our characters are measurably the reflection of the circumstances by which we are surrounded. Therefore it should be our constant and prayerful study to have our children surrounded by the best possible influences, and those of our brethren who have children to educate, or that will be educated, have now, an opportunity of exercising their judgment in a consistent and practical manner.

We are in no way prejudiced in this matter and extend a good deal of charity towards those who differ from us, as we are aware that there are extreme views on both sides. We also admit that an erroneous education is a great evil, has dangerous tendencies and has shipwrecked many promising men on the deceptive rock of infidelity. But the question comes up, how can we avoid those sad consequences and at the same time have our children educated? The only rational solution that we can think of is to have a school of our own, or one taught and controled by our own brethren. The object of this school should not be to teach religion but to have it surrounded by such influences as will point the young and expanding mind to the principles of divine truth as is exemplified in our holy religion. All such as can view the subject in this light should feel it a privilege and duty to attend the approaching meeting and thus show that they are concerned about the education interest of the rising generation.

THE OBTAINING OF ETERNAL LIFE.

And ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life.—John 5 : 40.

In the days of the Savior's sojourn on the earth, the Jews expected a future state, that is, they expected that a Messiah would come who would assume the form of a mighty King and would rule their people, Israel. Their expectations as well as their ideal of the coming Messiah were drawn from the prophecies concerning him, but they failed to properly understand them. This may have been partially because of the manner in which they investigated the Scriptures, and partially because of their preconceived opinions as to what should be the nature of the coming Messiah. Their imaginations had fixed up an ideal Savior, and with this before them, it was difficult to see that which was true and real. Again, they may have read the Scriptures but perhaps did not make that diligent search that is necessary to a proper understanding of them, and when the fiery darts of skepticism were being hurled at Jesus on every side, he says, "Search the Scriptures, make a diligent search, and see whether I do not fulfil the prophecies concerning me. Ye depend upon them for eternal life; ye say they are they that testify of me, and they do, and now as you profess to have faith in them, will ye not come to me that ye may have eternal life? Will you not lay aside your ill-guided conceptions, and let the clear rays of prophetical light beam upon your understandings, and then can you see clearly that I am he that can give eternal life."

The Savior censured the Jews, having as they had, the Gospel light to guide them into the path of rectitude, for not availing themselves of the privileges now offered them, and in the language used, there are several very important lessons to be learned.

We may learn, 1. That life is to be obtained alone in Christ. This idea is further taught by Jesus when he says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Jesus is as a guide in the way to the wandering soul; he is our example in everything, and by him alone we must be guided if we will reach the haven of eternal rest. He is the originator and communicator of all truth; he is the life from the fact that he renovated and restored man from a state of sin, and therefore he is the source of life to the soul dead in trespasses and sin. Why is it then that all do not come unto Jesus and obtain this life? Is it because you cannot obtain it in a way that is in harmony with your inclinations, or have you formed an ideal plan of your own by which you expect to obtain salvation? If you have, dear reader, you certainly will be disappointed. Jesus is the way and the truth, and by him, and through him, alone can you expect to obtain life. There is but one medium thro' which you can be resurrected from death to life, and if you fail to take advantage of it, your condition is a deplorable one. Oh the pangs of the second death! Who can conceive of the extent of the suffering of those who will not accept of Jesus the only source of life. Dear reader, think of this matter, because it is surely important. Your natural life is dear to you, and you will resort to most any means in times of peril to save it. If there was one way by which you could expect to be saved how freely would you accept of it. Now your spiritual existence is of vastly more importance, and the danger of losing your soul should much more alarm you. There is but one way by which you can save it, and that is by accepting Christ who is the life.

Secondly we may learn that in order to obtain life in Christ we must come to him in the way he has appointed. He has opened the way by which we may come to him and live, but there are conditions, and with these we must comply. In this consists the great barrier in the way of many, very many, who are seeking their eternal salvation. The way which Jesus has appointed is not in harmony with the carnal inclinations of men. His doctrines are too humiliating, and like the Jews, we look for some greater manifestation of power; we are not willing to come down to the simple teachings and follow him in the way he has directed. But is this not the greatest injustice that we could possibly manifest towards our blessed Master? He has suffered the most cruel death, and all that we might have access to the tree of Life. And now does it not appear evident to every mind that to refuse to comply with the simple conditions upon which he has promised eternal life is a crime of large proportions, and that justice will finally condemn all such to eternal destruction? Such most certainly be the fate of those who are unwilling to accept of life upon the terms which Jesus appointed.

Again we may learn that the reason why sinners are not saved is because they will not come to Christ to obtain life. The reason is in the will. "Whosoever will let him come and partake of the waters of life freely." God makes no distinction of persons, neither does he require anything of us that is not within our power to do. All that is necessary is to bring our will into subjection to the will of God. Jesus says, "I seek not mine own will but the will of the Father which hath sent me." This does not imply that his judgment would be wrong if he had sought his own will, but merely implies that he had no selfish ends of his own; that he did not come to aggrandize himself or to establish his own views, but to do the will of God. And as Christ rendered implicit obedience to the will of God, and sought not to accomplish any private ends, or advance any views of his own, so we must, in like manner, be subject to the will of God concerning us. But it is to be feared that self is too much gratified in these latter days. Our wills are not in harmony with the will of God, and consequently we exercise our own judgment in reference to what is right and what is wrong. God's will is that his servants do not fight, yet professing Christians of the present day say the country must be defended and do fight, just as though Christ did not mean what he said, or did not exercise good judgment in revealing his will to us. Jesus also says swear not at all, yet those who profess to be his followers will swear. He has commanded us to wash one another's feet, to salute one another with an holy kiss, and not to be conformed to the world, but his will concerning us in these things is not in unison with the will of men, and consequently popular Christianity tries to make it appear that Christ did not mean what he said; that these are nonessentials and can not affect the salvation of the soul. But there is a time coming in which these things will be tested. Jesus says I judge not, but the words which I speak, they shall judge you in the last day. His words are here on record, and if they will not acquit us it is because we have not made an application of them to the governing of our lives. And this brings us to another thought contained in the Scripture at the heading of our essay, and that is,

That sinners prefer any other way to obtain eternal life than that appointed by Jesus. And why is this? Simply because of the carnal mind. The carnal mind, saith Paul is enmity against God, and is not subject to his law. As long then as we are in possession of the carnal mind we will resist the means appointed for our salvation, and this is the reason that so many of God's requirements are rejected as nonessential. What will be the result of this state of mind? Paul says to be carnally minded is death. Oh, ye who are yet carnal; you whose minds are not subject to the law of God, you who are inclined to follow some other way than that appointed by Christ, think of this matter. Death—eternal death, is the doom of the carnally minded man, and in view of this the apostle Paul warns the Roman brethren and says, "Be not conformed to this world," i. e. our inclinations are not to be like that of the world, we are not to act like the world or appear like it, but we are to be transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we may prove what is that good and acceptable will of God.

Dear reader, in conclusion let me urge upon you the importance of accepting the means appointed for the obtaining of eternal life. Your soul is of more importance than the whole world, and will you lose it merely for a little self gratification? Will you subject yourself to eternal banishment from the presence of God merely because the means appointed for your salvation is not in harmony with your inclinations? Surely such a course is very unwise. You act more wisely in things of less importance. You will make most any sacrifice to obtain the riches of this life which are of a transitory and perishable nature, and should you not make a much greater sacrifice to obtain the unsearchable riches of Christ which endureth forever? Jesus has died that you might have an interest in his glory. Life and good, death and evil are now set before you; which will you choose? Oh, it is a sweet thought that there is a way appointed whereby we may obtain life, and should not our spirits long to dwell with Jesus, and enjoy the things that he has prepared for those who love him? Then "Awake my soul; stretch every nerve,

And press with vigor on;
A heavenly race demands thy zeal,
And an immortal crown."

CONTINUE TO WORK.

Some of our agents are still busy at work gathering names. The first mail this morning brought us ten. If the others prove as good we will feel well satisfied, as forty new names would be quite as much as we expect for one day, at this time, but it is not more than could be done if all would continue their efforts. Try it, friends.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Brethren Editors:—It is not that I have not been trying to be about our Master's business that I have been silent so long, giving no report of travel &c., but because the PILGRIM is weekly well filled with interesting matter, and that a condensed report of incidents and travel, would perhaps be more interesting and profitable.

In the early part of December I made a visit to the western part of the Lower Comberland arm of the Church, in Perry county. The principal place of operation was in the town of Duncannon, situated on the Susquehanna river, and along the P. R R. The Brethren have a nice house for meeting in this place. We had eight meetings at this place. They were well attended and much interest manifested. Some apparently deep conviction and a vital concern for godliness. Hope much of seed sown has fallen into good ground The brethren and sisters number about sixteen in this place. This band is under the charge of Elder Moses Miller and his worthy co-laborers. Hope the brethren traveling to and fro, will not forget to stop and preach for this little band of pilgrims and the people who are always eager for the crumbs of the bread of life.

During the holidays I spent the time at home, and enjoyed quite a refreshing shower at the hands of our worthy brother Lemuel Hillery from Iowa. He spent about six days with us, preaching for us, admonishing us to love and good works. His labors were surely much appreciated by us and the people. Since his visit here we learn he has been paralyzed in body, in one of the eastern churches, while there on a mission of love. Hope he may be restored to health again, and prosecute his Master's cause with his unremitted zeal.

On the 4th day o January we entered the field for contest again, in the Marsh Creek arm, Adams county, Pa., in company with brothers D. Longenecker, and J. D. Trostle The principal places of operation, were at Mummetsburg and Gettysburg. We had meeting some 15 days Meetings were largely attended. Many got under the influence of the divine power of God, and were made to inquire what they should do. Hope they may find rest, and as golden sheaves, be gathered into the garner of the Lord. The zeal of the brotherhood here, surely will break thro'gh the strongholds of Satan, and loosen the bands that are around the wicked.

Again, on the 1st of February, I visited the Welsh Run arm. Places of meeting were Broad Fording and Log meeting houses. The weather was somewhat unfavorable, still the meetings were well attended and interest manifested. Had about fourteen meetings. The brethren here truly seemed to be in earnest in the work, and their united labor will tell well for the cause; the penitent tears evidencing that deep conviction and earnestness is the theme of their souls. This arm of the church is under the charge of Elder C. Keefer with his co-laborers, who spare no time and labor to make the cause effectual.

The 21st of February I expected to be in Germany Valley, (Aughwick arm,) Huntingdon Co., Pa., but was prevented by intervening providence. Not being able to be present in body, yet I still labor with the brethren in spirit, knowing that those present in body are fully efficient for the work. That the preached word may be with power and demonstration of the spirit, and followed by an ingathering into the fold of Christ, is our prayer.

Since the death of our dear brother and Elder, Joseph F. Rohrer, home labor, and duties have measurably increased on us, and as a matter of duty I shall try and do my part in filling up the vacancy made by the departure of our brother.

On the 10th of February, brother J. D. Trostle followed by bro. E. W. Stoner, came to us and gave us a treat of some six meetings, which were much appreciated. May God reward them for their labor of love. Hope other brethren may come to our help, and awake sleepers to righteousness and provoke us to more love and good works. Come brethren, come.

D. F. Good.

Waynesboro, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim.—I often wonder what your contributors would do if they could at once comprehend all that is thought of them by men and women. But it is certainly of much more importance to have an anxious desire to look into the note books of angels than into those of men and women. It is highly probable that in one or both of these records we are accused of loving to see our names in print, of exulting like the man who fell dead and was eaten of worms, or of over much suspicion, like the man that buried his talen in the earth.

Christians should not think it strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try them. The holes which their enemies try to pick in what they say or write, or in their silence, are the very fiery trials which the apostle refers to. Therefore, whatever we do we should do with all diligence as to the Lord, whether it be speaking or writing, or being silent. We are always engaged in one of these three things, and circumstances should determine which one. The person who is afraid to speak or write, or keep silent, because some other person or persons might think too well, or not well enough of him, is to be pitied, especially if he expects to escape persecution in this world by pursuing any particular course for that purpose. Our object should be to reform after the manner of the New Testament, without regard to other consequences. Our Church papers should have this for their object. The Church needs no reformaiton. But men do. The Church is fixed triumphant forever. The Church is the body of Christ on earth, composed of members—the bodies of men, in which His spirit dwells. Men and women who are out of the Church, and thus out of the Church are proud. They say: "see me, hear me, follow me." They praise themselves. Whatever they think will induce most men to praise them, that they will do.

NONOONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.
(A REQUEST.)

Beloved in the Lord: The above is the title of a work now in preparation, and as I do not desire to have many more copies printed than will be demanded I respectfully request all those who desire a copy to send in their order now. The size and price of the book cannot be definitely stated at present, but trust the price per copy will not exceed $1,50. No money required until the book is ready for delivery when due notice will be given. Any person sending ten names, or more, will be entitled to a copy free. It will embrace:

First. A review of the "peculiarities" of Abram, Isaac, and Jacob, and those of the children of Israel while in bondage in Egypt.

Second. The stringency of the "Mosaical" Law" and how it worked nonconformity to the world" in every particular.

Third. A summary of the distinctiveness of the holy prophets.

Fourth. A survay of the doctrine of "Nonconformity to the world" as taught and practiced by Christ and the apostle, and the necessity of a strict observance of this divine injunction, by the children of God, together with some thoughts on the fruits of a rigid compliance to the law of Jehovah.

I am deeply conscious, dear brethren, that I have undertaken a work much despised by the world; but this fact portrays the great need of "an awakening" upon this vital subject. We are made to believe that Baptism, Feetwashing, the Lord's Supper, the kiss of Charity, are either wholly neglected or sadly perverted by a "sleeping profession," but while this is clearly apparent, is it not also unmistakably clear that Nonconformity is entirely disregarded by "would-be Christians," and that we who have been so highly favored by God in keeping his commandments are rapidly losing the distinguishing features of a "royal nation." Ye who have received "like precious faith, let your prayers ascend to our God and Father in behalf of your unworthy brother that he may wisely use "the ability which God giveth" to our instruction and edification and the glory of God's name. In love of the truth.

H. B. Brumbaugh.

Dear Brother: Please give this a place in the Pilgrim. I will now tell our beloved brethren and sisters that we expect to build a Meeting-house this coming Summer 30 by 50 feet, which will cost about $1.000. It is to be as common and plain as can be built. Thus far we have received $22.75 since our first call in the Pilgrim. We now lack $300 of the amount. We think our friends and neighbors will aid us about $100, that is, people outside of the Church, and those dear brethren that have promised their mite to us if we build can increase the amount a little and send it as soon as convenient, as we wish to pay cash for all the lumber when we get it, we can get it some lower. I will remind my Eastern sisters who have promised their "fives" and "tens" to send it along, I am ready to receive it with many thanks for your kind aid. By so doing, we will only lack the small sum of $100.50, and we do hope some more of our beloved brethren and sisters who have not given or promised us any aid as yet, will be prompted by the love they have for the good cause of our Lord and Master, and the good of souls, to send us their fives, tens, fifteens and twenties, and less amounts will also be received with thankfulness. God loves a cheerful giver.

Let us bear one another's burden, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Brethren, let us not be weary in well doing. Ever remember the poor widow who cast in the treasury of the Lord all her living, trusting in the Lord to provide for her wants. It is not the great love we have for money that we are begging our brethren to give us, but on account of the great need we have for it to build a house for the worship of God. It is for the Lord, and we were taught by our elder brethren, John Cline, Benjamin Bowman and Daniel Miller, when we were young in Christ, that when anything was to be done for the Lord or his worship, it was the duty of every member, rich and poor, to give some toward it. Whether much or little, God would bless a free will offering, and I do sincerely believe it is the duty of us all to help to bear the expenses of building a house for the worship of God.

I fell on an iceberg about 2 months ago, and broke or cracked two of my ribs and have not been to meeting since. I am now well enough to try to preach again. We have had snow and ice since the first of December until the present. It is now melting away. May God bless you. Farewell.

Fairfield Ill Feb. 22' 1874.

Brother Brumbaugh. I Wish you would request, through the Pilgrim, for some ministering brethren to visit southern Ill, as we have a little band of members here and as yet a weak ministry and therefore we desire help and hope and trust the brethren will visit us. We have but one minister and have not had much chance although he does all he can. But help from the brethren would encourage us much. Please urge the brethren going to the Annual Meeting to call and see us. We live 16 miles south east of the O & M R.R. on the S. & J. E R.R. near the County seat. Any brother desiring to come will write to me at Fairfield Wayne Co Ill.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

Dear Brother, I will drop you a line asking you to say to all concerned, that an excursion train will leave Richmond, Va., March 30, by way of the Chesapeake and Ohio R. R., Cincinati, Ohio, April 1st by way of Indiannapolis, Peora, Hannibal, Quincy, Burlington and to Omaha. Persons coming on said train to Julesburg will be met there with teams April 4th. Fare very low on said excursion train. Brethren are coming out with their families. So far the prospect is good for 25 or 30 members being in our section in the Spring. Truly yours,

J. S. Flory.

ANSWER TO QUERY IN NO. 8.

The two witnesses spoken of in Rev. 11, 3d verse, simply means the few that will be found faithful during the period of apostacy. Two witnesses were required under the Mosaical law to confirm a matter. Deut. 17: 9; 19: 15, and also under the New Testament, Matt. 18: 19.

Wm. Sadler.

ANSWER TO QUERY.

It is requested that some brother would give an explanation through the Pilgrim, of the four first verses of the 13th chapter of Paul's epistle to the Romans. If any one wants an explanation, let him just read the above named Scriptures. D. Miller.

This Scripture may be evident enough to Brother Miller and all such as make the Scriptures a constant study. but to many there is a hidden mystery couched in the above that needs unraveling and perhaps it would be well enough for some one to open it out.

A REQUST.

It is desired to have an essay written on the 42nd verse of the 5th chapter of Math. We want a full application of the verse to the Christian. It reads as follows: "Give to him that asketh and to him that would borrow of thee, turn thou not away."

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Brother Brumbaugh, please allow me to say through the Pilgrim to my friends and brethren that after the 1st of March '74, my address will be Ervin, Howard Co., Ind., in place of Miamasburg, Ohio.

MARRIED.

MYERS—BRUMBAUGH.—By the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's parents, on Feb'y 12th 1874, Mr M H. Myers of Hill Valley, to Miss Annie G. Brumbaugh.

WRIGHT—MYERS.—At the same time and place, by the same, Mr. Ephraim Wright of Mapleton, to Miss Clara B. Myers of Hill Valley, all of Huntingdon county, Pa. James R. Lane.

DUBOIS—LONG—At the residence of the undersigned, near Upton, Pa., on Feb. 20th, 1874, brother Joseph Dubois to Miss Catharine Long. DANIEL MILLER.

DIED.

FITZ.—In Antietam arm, brother Henry Fitz, on the 14th inst., aged 68 years 4 months and 25 days. Funeral service by Elder J. Price. D. F. Goon.

KNEPPER.—Of consumption, (time not given), our beloved and respected brother Samuel Knepper, aged 33 years 4 mos. and 25 days.

He suffered very much, which he bore with much patience. He was never married and liv'd at home with his parents, who are both members of the Church. In his young days he joined the church, and was a member until death released him from the cares of earth. He died full of faith and seemed to look upon his approaching death with pleasure. One week before he died he called the Elders of the Church and was aneinted with oil in the name of the Lord. Jas. 5: 14. Funeral, preached by Daniel Lorah and the writer, to a large congregation, from Rev. 14: 12, 13. ELI METZ.

WHITEHEAD.—Of lung fever, in the Union Centre congregation, Elkhart county Ind., Melven, son of David and Eve Whitehead, aged 19 years and 5 days.

STRUBLE.—In the Cedar Creek Church, Anderson county Dansas, on Nov. 19th, 1873, brother Sylvester Struble, son of brother Peter Struble, aged 19 years 7 months and 9 days.

Disease consumption, He was a promising youth for long life, but, alas! he was overtaken by disease and went from one stage to another until he was encircled by the arms of death. He was baptized by the brethren two weeks previous to his death. His parents mourn their loss, but they need not mourn as those who have no hope for he died with a bright hope of immortal rest. Funeral services by Jesse Studabaker.

We miss thee at our fire-side,
But when we think that you
Have gained a home beyond the tide,
We'll cease to weep and follow too.
NANCY E. STUDABAKER.

[Companion, please copy.]

SHRIVER.—In the Double Pipe Creek congregation, Md., Rosie Ann Sophia Shriver, aged 10 months.

We saw a smling infant lay
In its fond mother's arms;
Around its rosy cheeks there played,
A thousand dimpling charms.

A bitter pain was sent to take
The smiling babe away;
How did its little bosom shake,
As in a fit it lay;

Its beating heart was quickly stopped,
And in the earth so cold
We saw its little coffin dropped,
And covered up with mould.
E. SHRIVER.

WAGONER.—In the adjoining neighborhood of the Logan county church, Ohio, on Feb. 19th, '74, Isaac Wagoner, aged 62 years, and 7 months

Funeral occasion improved by the writer. He was in his usual health and had been out in the woods. On his way home he sank down and in a few moments his spirit took its flight. He was a friend of the Brethren but the Lord called him before he reached the church. MICHAEL SWONGER.

MOORE.—In Shelby county, Ohio Dec. 20th 1873, sister Sarah Ellen Moore, aged 24 years and 1 month. Her funeral sermon by the writer, from Dan. 12: 13.

We have good reason to believe that her last days were devoted to the Lord.
MICHAEL SWONGER.

TONEY.—On Feb. 21st '74, in the upper Deer Creek branch of the Church Cass county, Ind., sister Saarh Toney, aged 71 years, 9 months and 18 days.

This beloved sister had partially lost her hearing many years ago, but of late had been enjoying reasonable health. She had left home a short time previous to visit her children, brother Toney remaining at home. On the 21st, being at their Son-in law's, Eld. Abraham Rinehart's, she was stricken with palsy which entirely deprived her of her speech. Her husband had intended to go there that day, but before he got ready to start the sad condition of his wife was made known to him. He quickly repaired to the place where she was, but only to find her speechless and almost helpless, and could not have the pleasure of hearing a word from her, and no prospect that he ever would have in this life. The feelings and emotions of his heart can be better imagined than described. On Sunday night, the 22nd inst., it was thought that she had another stroke, for after that she was more helpless. We have been well acquainted with this respected family for forty years. May the lonely widower and the sorrowing children be comforted in her triumphan, departure, in hope of a blessed immortality and the remembrance of her virtues and graces be a rich legacy to her husband, sons and daughters and her surviving friends. The sister's maiden name was Lybrook. She was married to James Toney Oct. 28, 1820, became members of the church 2 years afterwards, in which they lived 51 years. She was the mother of 10 children, 5 of which are living. She left 26 grand-children living, and 5 great- grand- children.

On the 25th her remains were followed to their last resting place by a very large number of people. Funeral by the writer from Rev. 14: 12, 13. HIEL HAMILTON.

THE FAMILY

A MAN WITH AN AIM.

Give me a man with an aim,
Whatever that aim may be,
Whether it's wealth or whether it's fame,
It matters not to me.
Let him walk in the path of right,
And keep his aim in sight,
And work and pray in faith away,
With his eye on the glittering height.

Give me a man who says,
"I will do something well,
And make the fleeting days
A story of labor tell."
Though the aim he has be small,
It is better than none at all; [through,
With something to do the whole year
He will not stumble nor fall.

'But satan weaves a snare
For the feet of those who stray,
With never a thought or a care
Where th epath may lead him away.
The man who hath no aim
Not only leaves no name
When this life's done, but ten to one
He leaves a record of shame.

Give me a man whose heart
Is filled with ambition's fire;
Who sets his mark in the start,
And moves it higher and higher.
Better to die in the strife,
The hands with labor rife, [dream,
Than to guile with the stream in an idle
And live a purposeless life.

HOW MILDNESS SUBDUES.

The following sketch, from the excellent Christian Weekly, may be intended for children, but there is that of practical suggestion in it which may be accepted by the mature, and adopted in their every-day life with great profit:

Tom's sister Nell was pretty, and, being a year older than Tom, wanted to show her authority over him. Tom was rough and awkward, and just at the age when a boy resents all meddling with his "rights." He would put his hands in his pockets, his chair on Nell's dress, and his feet on the window-sill. Of course they often quarrelled.

"For pity's sake, Tom, do take your hands out of your pockets!" Nell would say, in her most vexing manner,

"What are pockets for, I'd like to know, if not to put one's hands in?" and Tom would whistle and march off.

"Tom, I don't believe you've combed your hair for a week."

"Well, what's the use? It would be all roughed up again in less than an hour."

"I do wish, Tom, you would take your great boots off the window-sill!"

"Oh don't bother me, I'm reading." Tom would say; and the boots refused to stir an inch, which, of course, was very naughty. And so it would go from morning till night.

But little sister Bess had a somewhat different way with somewhat stubborn Tom. Bess seemed to understand that coaxing was better than driving; and sometimes, when he sat with both hands plunged in his pockets, Bess, with a book or picture, would nestle down beside him and almost before he knew it, one hand would be patting her curls, while the other turned the leaves or held the pictures. If she chanced to see his feet on the window-sill, she would say, "Just try my ottoman, Tom, dear, and see how comfortable it is to rest feet;" and though Tom occasionally growled in a good-natured way about its being too low, the boots always came down to its level. Whenever his hair looked very rough, she would steal behind him and smooth it out in a way Tom liked so well that it was a temptation to let it go rough, just for the pleasure of having her comb it. Yet for the next three days, at least, he would take special pains to keep every hair in its place, simply to please little Bess.

As they grew older, Bess, in the same quiet, loving way, helped him to grow wise and manly. If she had an interesting book, she always wanted Tom to enjoy it with her; if she was going to call on any of her young friends, Tom was always invited to go with her.

"I can't understand," said lady Nell, "why you should always want that boy forever at your elbow! He's rough and awkward as a bear."

"Some bears are as gentle as kittens," said Bess, slipping her arm through his, with a loving hug, while "the bear" felt a great warm glow at his heart as he walked away with Bess, and determined to try harder to be courteous and "gentle as a kitten" for her sake.

WORK FOR IT.

Boys want to be rich, great, or good, without working for it. They think that learned, wealthy, and influential men are very fortunate—that they have easily slipped into their respective spheres. They scarcely ever think that by hard work and by dint of perseverence most of these men have risen to their present positions. Idlers never rise in the world. God does not reward laziness by "riches and honor." God did not make man to be useless, and live at ease, and reap without sowing. When farmers can sow and reap on the same day, and trees blossom and yield fruit in a single week, then, and not until then, can boys hope to become men of marked influence and acquisition without working for it.

A splendid carriage rolls along the street. Its owner is a millionaire. Boys look on him and say to themselves, "He's a fortunate man; what an easy time he has! Some day we may have a windfall, and not be obliged to work for a living." They scarcely dream that the occupant of that costly vehicle was probably once a poor boy, who worked hard many years, winning the confidence of all around him by his industry, integrity, and noble bearing. Had he been as idle, lazy, and loose, as many boys are, he would not have owned his carriage nor have been a millionaire. Many years of earnest toil, struggling to overcome obstacles, practicing the most rigid economy, and bravely holding out against great discouragements, is the secret of his success.

Daniel Webster could make a great speech. Boys heard him, and said, "What a gift! How fortunate he is to possess such talents!" And the thought hardly entered into their heads that hard work enabled him to do it. The first time that he undertook to declaim in a school-room he broke down. But persevering industry overcame all obstacles. By hard study, year after year, and equally diligent practice, he became the distinguished orator. Take away a quarter of a century from his life, in which he carefully qualified himself for his profession, having no idle hours, and no "bed of down," and the world would not have known Daniel Webster. Boys should not forget this. He could make a great speech because he worked for it. Boys, it is God's rule that nothing valuable in this world can be had without working for it. And the time to begin work is now.

WHO IS A GENTLEMAN!

A gentleman is a person not merely acquainted with certain forms and etiquette of life, easy and self-possessed in society, able to speak and act and move in the world without awkwardness, and free from habits which are vulgar and in bad taste. A gentleman has something beyond this; that which lies at the root of every Christian virtue. It is the thoughtful desire of doing in every instance what others should do unto him. He is constantly thinking, not indeed how he may give pleasure to others for the mere sense of pleasing, but how he may avoid hurting their feelings. When he is in society he scrupulously ascertains the position and relations of every one with whom he comes in contact, that he may give to each his due honor, his proper position. He studies how he may avoid touching in conversation upon any subject which may needlessly hurt their feelings—how he may obtain from any allusions which may call up a disagreeable or offensive associations. A gentleman never alludes-to, never even appears conscious of any defect, bodily deformity, inferiority of talent, of rank, of reputation in the person in whose society he is placed. He never assumes any superiority to himself—never ridicules, never sneers, never boasts, never makes a display of his own power, or rank, or advantages—such as in implied in habits, or tricks, or inclinations which may be offensive to others.

"I CAN'T PLOD."

When Dr. Carey the great pioneer of mission work in India, first proposed his plans to his father, he said, "William, are you mad?" His discouragements in first entering upon his work were very great. What was the secret that enabled the shoemaker's apprentice to become one of the most distinguished men of his age? What brilliant gift raised him from an obscure position to one of honors fame, as the author of grammars and dictionaries, translations of the Bible, and other books? He either translated or assisted in the completion of twenty-seven versions of Scripture, requiring a knowledge of as many languages or dialects. He tells the secret. In giving an estimate of his own character, he speaks of himself with Christian humility, but with full consciousness of the honor put upon him to the wonderful results he had been permitted to achieve. He says, "I can plod—I can persevere." He does not say, as we hear too often now-a-days, "I can manage to get along, and keep up with my class in some way without much study. I can jump at the meaning of my lessons; or I can catch up a trade without years of hard labor," but, "I can perserve!" Plodding boys, hold up your heads! You may seem to be left behind in the race by smart companions. But plod on: "the race is not" always "to the swift, nor the battle to the strong."

The forgiveness of his sins is the most urgment of all needs to the really hoooorable man, in asmuch as it is the true condition of his becoming free from sins.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Baptist of Huntingdoo have had a very successful revival recently Upwards of 50 were received into fellowship with the church on Sabbath eve of last week.

The Second Adventists who have been waiting for several months on Terry Island, Ct. for the sound of Gabriel's trumpet, have, all but one, given it up and gone their several ways.

There are nearly 50 women practising medicine in New York and Brooklyn, most of them homœopathically, and many of them having incomes of $2,000 and $3,000, while several reach $5,000. There are three medical colleges there, and a fourth is now building.

GERMAN IMMIGRATION.—From a report lately issued by the German Society, it appears that the German immigration at this port during the past year amounted to 101,900 persons, a falling off of 26,130 compared with the year previous, when 128,03 Germans were landed at Castle Garden. The majority of these were destined for the Western and Northwestern States. Twelve were bound for the Utah Territory.

The new temperance movement seems to be spreading, and has, (so to speak,) assumed an epidemic form, and is from present indications, likely to sweep over the country as the epizootic did last year, and while we gladly hail any agency that shall diminish the fearful vice of intemperance, we fear the good effects of this novel movement will not be lasting. However, if any one who has been accustomed to keep drunk all the time, is made sober for even a week, it is something gained.

A further examination of the Siamese twins has shown that their livers were in reality one organ, and that the connecting band contained four pouches of peritoneum, besides liver tissue. These disclosures show that any attempt during life to separate the twins would, in all probability, have proved fatal. It is quite probable that we do not know much more about the matter than we did before the twins died.

The famine in India seems at last to have come upon the people. A dispatch at the Indian office, London, on Monday from Hon George Campbell, lieutenant governer of Bengal, gives a most alarming report of the condition of the people in that presidency He says fully 1,000,000 persons are starving to death in the districts affected by the famine, and that all the working classes are beginning to feel the want of food.

A majority of the Boston Baptist clergymen, in a recent discussion, favored the taxation of church property. It was said that while such a course might in many cases be a hardship to weak organizations, it would stop unnecessary multiplication and the erection of too large and too expensive churches. "It is wrong to invest $200,000 in an edifice while one worth $50,000 answers every purpose," added the speaker, "and if churches should be exempted because of incidental benefit to the community, railroads and manufacturing corporations should be also. The benefit derived by the public from these outweighs the benefit conferred to individuals"

A CURIOUS LEGEND.—When Adam was far advanced in years and at the point of death, he sent his son to the angel Michael, who kept the gate of Paradise, to pray for the oil of mercy, so that he could be healed. The angel answered that it could not be until fifty-five hundred years, but he gave Seth a branch of the tree of which Adam had eaten, bidding him plant it on Mount Lebaoon, and that when it bore fruit his father should be healed. Seth planted the branch on his fathers grave : it took root and grew, and from it were made Aaron's rod, and Moses' staff with which he stuck the rock and sweetened the waters of Marah. It also formed the pole on which the brazen serpent was lifted up, and the ark of the testimony. At last it came into the hands of Solomon, who used it in building his palace ; but it continually resisted the efforts of the builders to adjust it. Now it was too long, and then again it was too short. The builders, being angry, then threw it in a marsh, so that it would serve as a bridge. The queen of Sheba would not walk upon it, and told Solomon that upon it should be suspended the man through whose death the kingdon should be destroyed. Solomon then had it buried deep in ground, where afterward the pool of Bethesda was dug, and from the virtues of this tree healing properties were imparted to the waters. After it had been buried three hundred years it rose to the surface of the water and the Jews took it and made of it the cross of our Savior.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation ; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 60 cents a month or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. HOME AT LAST.

Angel voices sweetly singing,
Echoes through the blue dome ringing,
News of wondrous gladness bringing—
Ah, we're home at last!

Now beneath us all the grieving,
All the wounded spirit heaving,
All the woe of hope's deceiving—
Ah, we're home at last!

Sin forever left behind us,
Earthly visions cease to blind us—
All the woe of hopes declining—
Ah, we're home at last!

On the jasper threshold standing,
Like a pilgrim safely landing,
See the strange bright scenes expanding
Ah, we're home at last!

What a city! what a glory!
Far beyond the brightest story
Of the ages old and hoary—
Ah, we're home at last!

Softest voices silver-pealing,
Freshest fragrance, spirit-healing,
Happy hymns around us stealing—
Ah, we're home at last!

Gone the vanity and folly,
Gone the dark and melancholy,
Come the joyous and the holy—
Ah, we're home at last!

Not a broken blossom yonder,
Not a link can snap asunder,
Stayed the tempest, sheathed the thunder
Ah, we're home at last!

Not a tear-drop ever falleth,
Not a pleasure ever palleth,
Song to song forever calleth—
Ah, we're home at last!

Christ himself the living splendor,
Christ the sunlight and tender:
Praises to the Lamb we render—
Ah, we're home at last!

Now at length the vail is rended
Now the pilgrimage is ended,
And the saints their throne ascended—
Ah, we're home at last!

Broken death's bands that bound us,
Life and victory around us;
Christ the King himself hath crowned us
Ah, we're home at last!

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

[For the Pilgrim.]

SEEKING, SAVING, AND THE LOST.

"For the son of man is come too seek and save that which was lost.—Luke 19: 10.

The passage quoted includes four different points to be considered, which we will try to do by the help of God.

"The Son of Man" in this place means the promised Messiah; the person the angel says, "thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." The one in the which God will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained. But all Bible readers agree on this point and we will proceed to the three following divisions: the seeking, the saving, and the lost,—points of great importance in the eyes of the Son of Man, and to which it seems he devoted his time and sacrificed his soul and body in order to accomplish the great work.

But to consider the questions before us in a systematic manner, we must take up the last point first.

The lost ones. Are there any such? we might ask. In a temporal respect we might say there are very few, but in a spiritual point of view, the lost are very numerous. If we peruse the the sacred lines we see them by scores, and even by hundreds and thousands.

Were those not lost of whom the Lord said, "My spirit shall not always strive with man," whose days were numbered, and when the time was fulfilled a miserable destruction was their fate? Again, were not those lost upon whom it rained fire and brimstone from Heaven and destroyed five cities in one day? Or those who were cast down into the pit alive in the days of Moses and Aaron? Were not those lost who essayed to ford the Red Sea on dry land and were drowned in a moment of time? Yes, even by thousands. Was there not a lost one in the number of the Twelve? Again, we might ask is it better at the present time? No; not an iota; sin is the cause of dying man straying away from the path of life and rectitude. While infants we are at home, the Kingdom of God is ours; Heaven is sure when we die in such a blessed state. But all of us claim, at the present day, the promises of our blessed Savior regarding the innocent and spotless babes, or such as have not attained the age of a mature life. Will such include us in our case? What does the teacher within our breasts say to the matter? Very often it is not necessary to consult the Bible, nor the preacher to find out; the decision can be had very close at home. It seems to me that Christ makes use of a very beautiful figure, in which he illustrates so plainly the condition of mankind. The event is related by Mark as follows: "And He saith unto them, go your way into the village over against you; and as soon as ye be entered into it ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him and bring him. And they went their way and found the colt tied by the door without: in a place where two ways met; and they loose him." Mark 21: 2—4. In a spiritual way we may apply the above to every individual, in the career of his or her life one day. The colt upon which never man sat, and the within doors, represent the state of our lives as infants; the innocent life, not having passed the line of demarkation; not yet able to discern what is right and what is wrong; consequently we have, so far not been in service to any one; we might say that never man sat upon us, neither the Son of Man, nor the "Man of sin," which is the Devil. Without doors in a place where two ways met, represents the state of knowledge, the time when the faculties of men are developed to such an extent that we can comprehend the things which are necessary for the salvation of man. The two ways come together at this very point, before their eyes and before their hearts. Now they can make a choice, and no sooner, since man was created a free agent, which agency was left to mankind after the fall, even down to the present age.

The two ways may be described by quoting a few passages of Scripture: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and the worldly lusts; that we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this world." Even in this one passage we have them both plain before our eyes,—ungodliness and the worldly lusts. These constitute the broad road and wide gate, and many do enter in thereat.

Soberness, righteousness and godliness constitute the straight gate and narrow way, leading to Christ and Heaven and so very few enter thereat. It is almost, or would be a miracle if a single soul would stay at home and never sin nor go astray. Nature is prone to evil, and I believe that nature or the carnal mind is the very post that men are tied to, without the door. Although we are like captives, and possess the original sin, as some term it, yet it is not imputed unto us until we are without doors; at which point, not only the messengers of Christ will come to us and invite us to Christ, but also the devil sends his messengers inviting dying man to make choice of those things in which he has his delight. A great battle is often fought between the two parties for the soul which has just emerged from the house. In order to decide which party got the mastery and prey, we must only examine in what our delight is. Then we soon shall see if we are of the lost ones or not. For instance, do we not make use of profane language now and then when we are very angry? If so, it is a token of a downward tendency. Or spend our time in perusing political papers, and neglect to read the Book of books for days and weeks? Such conduct will show that a taste and appetite for the heavenly manna is lost in that individual. Again, are we intemperate? Do we eat and drink to excess? If so we are traveling fast on the road to ruin, and are lost. We can be intemperate in working, in discharging temporal duties devolving upon us daily in in our talk, in our dealings, there is hardly a corner where our presence is required, that intemperance does not also plead for a place; and the least allowance of the same is a transgression of the divine command of God. The least degree of transgression is sin, and as such imputed unto us. And what shall we say in regard to the many who indulge in the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life. It seems in our day as if the land were as full of lost ones at the valley that the Prophet saw was full of dry bones. No wonder the Son of Man was constrained to forsake Heaven for a season, beholding our lost condition. He could not tolerate the idea of our eternal destruction, consequently He came to seek sinners.

Now we mighht ask, how does Jesus, or the Son of Man, apply himself while seeking the lost? He is not here personally, but sitting at the right hand of God, to which Stephen testifies while suffering martyrdom. Although he is there, he is also in the midst of those that worship him, and in the church, even unto the end of the world. Since Christ is the word, as John teaches, therefore, wherever the word of God is preached in its purity, Christ is after the sinner seeking him while the audience is presented with the quick and powerful word of God, which is sharper than any two edged sword, yea; piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, &c. Do not sinners often realize this to be a fact? Oh how solemn have often the sinners been made on such occasions, while Jesus was preached unto them; they plainly felt and saw that Christ is here in power and seeking lost ones.

Again, the disciples of Christ have the spirit of Christ. When they are engaged in their devotion, bringing sacrifices in due season to their God, fire and smoke upon the family altar from whence a sweet savor rises and penetrates the clouds into heaven, and at the same time the spirit of Jesus pries at, and penetrates through the strong heart of the sinner and seeks him out. Bounds and limits cannot be set for the "Son of Man" in His search of the lost. Again, afflictions and misfortunes, have very often been powerful means in the hands of Christ, in searching out the lost sheep of the House of Israel. The great trouble is, with many of the wayfaring men to make them conscious of their deplorable state by nature; therefore, the Great Shepherd resorts to various means in order to approach the sinner, and to impart of that supernatural light, enabling the individual to feel, sensibly, the miserable, wretched condition he is in.

I know of a peculiar case: A certain young man, while drowning in sins, I may say, repaired in the morning to his timber grounds, six miles from home for the purpose of making rails. While at work a queer sensation ran over his whole body, and a depression of spirit and mind seized upon him to such an extent that he was unable to continue his work any longer. He made out, like many people do, that it must be a place of impure spirits; he resolved to quit the spot and make for home, in order to get rid of such a queer feeling. Consequently he hitched to the wagon, drove away from the mountain, but his burden would not stay behind. No; it accompanied him, and instead of relaxing, it steadily increased to such an extent that he could no longer refrain from weeping, and calling out, "O, Lord have mercy upon me a poor sinner!" Three days and nights he suffered the awful reprovings of an awakened conscience, which resulted in rescuing him from destruction, and in the salvation of his soul, now a brother in Christ. Was that sorcery, or was it the the power of the "Son of Man" still seeking the sinner? But if sinners see and feel there is no ease, but on every side of them wrath and condemnation; hence the necessity of a Savior. Therefore Christ not only came to seek, but to save sinners.

The saving. We might ask, what must we do to be saved? like the people at pentecost. The Savior himself tells in a few words the conditions the sinner has to comply with, when he says "the time is fulfilled, the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, repent ye and believe the Gospel." Therefore repentance is one of the first stepping stones, just at the threshold of the saving fortress. But what is repentance? we might ask with propriety. Every concerned and penitent soul would like to know it for certain. Is it a falling down before God and pleading with tears for grace and forgiveness, until the mourner realizes a blessing? Not altogether. That is only one part of repentance; and hence we should learn what the doctrine is in regard to evangelical repentance. Proper and true repentance embodies four different attributes: First, knowledge of sin. Second regret and sorrow for sin. Third, faith in Jesus the Savior. Fourth, a full submission to all the requirements of the word of God. Such manifested by the penitent will insure a sound gospel repentance. Such movings like the above, numbers have realized and can testify to be a fact. What is the awakened soul else than the Publican in the temple, who sees and feels just as he said, "Lord have mercy upon me a poor sinner,"? And if such individuals meditate upon the time misspent, the offenses they have caused towards man and God, the grievings of God's spirit, in not heeding the powerful convictions; in short, all their sins are before their eyes, paining them to the innermost of their hearts, and causing a deep regret and sorrow. And here comes in the work of John the Baptist bringing down that which is too high, raising up that which is too low, making straight the crooked, bringing on a level; then we are ready to embrace the Savior by faith.

Before we drop the second attribute of repentance, we cite the penitent to Zaccheus. He was anxious to see the Savior, and climbed on a sycamore tree. He was not forgotten by the coming Savior, who, as he came, stopped and looked up, calling out, "Zaccheus, make haste, come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house." He obeyed and received Him joyfully. By all appearance, Christ did not only enter into his house, but into his heart also. Hence the confession: "Behold the half of my goods do I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him four fold." These inner workings and the confession drew Heaven's blessing and Christ says, "To-day salvation has come to this house." Are not these fruits meet for repentance? Yes, they are. But, says one; you, brethren, do not adhere to that rule. Your rich folks keep all they have and if any turn to God in repentance, they they only level off. Why is not the example of Zaccheus imitated? An easy question to answer. Zaccheus was a Jewish scholar, taught in the law of Moses and the Prophets, hence his religious sentiments, that law, in case of theft, required a four-fold restoration, and in some cases five. Complying with the same brought peace and salvation. But now we have a new dispensation; the gospel rule demands only a level, hence we teach so. But if the people will do more than the gospel requires, in acts of kindness, it is no sin, and the master will pay them when he comes.

Now, if the first stepping stones to repentance have been mounted well, it cannot fail to produce the two following: saving faith and obedience. Paul says, "for ye are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus," and by obedience we put on Christ, i. e. faith constrains us to follow Jesus in all his foot-prints.

THE INFIDEL HUME.

"The wicked is driven away in his wickedness."

Hobbs was a well known infidel a century and a half ago. He as all infidels, lived without comfort or consolation, and had no hope in death. When alone he was haunted with the most tormenting reflections, and would awake in great terror, if his candle happened to go out in the night. He could never bear any discourse of death, and seemed to cut off all thoughts of it.

He was permitted to live upwards of ninety years, yet when the time of death came on, he said if he had the whole world he would give it all to live one day longer. A lady in high life with whom he was conversing, expressed her astonishment that a philosopher who had such extensive knowledge, and so many friends to gratify and oblige, would not deny himself one day's gratification of life, if by that means he could bequeath to them such ample possessions. His answer was, What shall I be the better for that when I am dead? I say again, if I had the whole world to dispose of, I would give it to live one day. His last sensible words were, when he found he could live no longer, I shall be glad then to find a hole to creep out of the world at. And notwithstanding all his pretensions to learning and philosophy, his uneasiness constrained him to confess, when he drew near to the grave, that he was about to take a leap in the dark. Thus died the infidel philosopher Hobbs. How different is the language of the real Christian. He having a desire to depart and be with Christ which is far better; yet all the appointed time of his days will he wait till his change come.

DAVID HUME'S INSENSIBILITY IN THE HOUR OF DEATH.

Hume, the infidel and historian, received a religious education from his mother, and early in life was the subject of strong and hopeful religious impressions; but as he approached manhood they were effaced, and confirmed infidelity succeeded, and he applied himself with unwearied, and unhappily with successful efforts, to sap the foundation of his mother's faith, and having succeeded in this dreadful work, he went abroad, and as he was returning, an express met him in London with a letter from his mother, informing him that she was in deep decline and could not long survive. She said she found herself without any support in her distress; that he had taken away that only source of comfort upon which, in all cases of affliction, she used to rely, and now she found her mind sinking into despair. She did not doubt that her son would afford her some substitute for her religion; and she conjured him to hasten to her, or at least to send her a letter containing such consolation as philosophy could afford to a dying mortal.

Hume was overwhelmed with anguish on receiving this letter, and hastened to Scotland, travelling day and night, but before he arrived his mother expired. No permanent impression seemed, however, to have been made on his mind by this trying event, and whatever remorse he might have felt at the moment, he soon relapsed into his previous hardness of heart.

Hume, however appears in one respect to have differed from most infidels. His life it is said was tolerably moral. And this has been a subject of boasting among his unbelieving friends. But it is justly said, that all evil beings are not immoral. Satan himself offends not in the articles of eating, drinking, cards, or women &c.; he is differently employed. He is employed interrupting others to offend in these, and such like things. The fact is, life cannot be in the right which is spent in doing wrong. To maintain and diffuse the truth of God, and to do his will is right, but to deny, corrupt and hinder it, is to do wrong, and a life so employed is a wicked life, perhaps the most wicked that can be imagined. And this is the life the infidel historian Hume lived. And although the infidel historian Gibbon says of him that he lived and taught like a philosopher, so he died like one. And his death has been the boast of infidels. Yet the Christian fails to discover anything in it to covet.

"We are informed, that when he was extremely debilitated by disease, he went abroad at times on a sedan chair, and called on his friends, but his ghastly looks indicated the rapid approach of death. He diverted himself with correcting his works for a new edition, with reading books of amusement, with the conversation of his friends, and sometimes in the evening with a party at his favorite game of whist."

"On one occasion, when his dissolution drew near, he expressed to Dr. Smith the satisfaction he had in leaving his friends, and his brother's family in particular, in prosperous circumstances. This he said he felt so sensibly, that when he was reading a few days before, "Lucian's Dialogues of the Dead," he could not, among all the excuses which are alleged to Charon, for not readily entering into his boat, find one that pitied him. He had no house to finish,—he had no daughter to provide for,—he had no enemies to revenge himself. I could not well imagine what excuse I could make to Charon,* in order to obtain a little delay. I have done everything of consequence that I ever meant to do. I could at no time expect to leave my relations and friends in a better situation than that in which I am now likely to leave them. I therefore have all reason to die contented.

In this way, the infidel Hume amused himself in the face of death. He died soon after his merriment he made, to Dr. Smith, about the excuses he might make to the good Charon for not getting into his boat. And in this the triumphs of infidelity are seen by infidel eyes, and appreciated by infidel minds. These are the triumphs of a son of reason, an infidel philosopher.

The Christian mind revolts at the thought of wiling away the approaching hours of death in reading books of amusement, at a game of wist, and the ridiculous heathen story of Charon and his boat, and yet this is the boasted end of infidelity; this is by them said, dying like a philosopher.

"To a man who solemnly believes the truth of revelation, and therefore the threatenings of Divine vengeance against the despisers of it, this scene will present as mournful a spectacle as perhaps, the sun ever shone upon. We have beheld a man of great talents and invincible perseverence, entering on his career with the profession of an impartial inquiry after truth, met at every stage and step by the evidences and expostulations of religion, and the claims of his Creator, but devoting his labors to the pursuit of fame, and the promotion of impiety. We behold him appointed soon to appear before that Judge to whom he had never alluded, but with entire malice and contempt; yet preserving, to appearance, an entire self-complacency, idly jesting about his approaching dissolution, and mingling with the insane sports, his reference to the fall of superstition, a term of which the meaning is hardly ever dubious, when expressed by such men. We beheld him at last carried off, and seemed to hear, the next moment, from the darkness in which he vanishes, the shriek of surprise and terror, and the overpowering accents of the messenger of vengeance. On the whole Globe there probably was not acting, at the time, so mournful a tragedy as that of which the friends of Hume were the spectacles, without being aware that it was any tragedy at all."—Electic Review. 1808.

Dear reader, I have set before you the unhappy end of this life of a few of the most prominent infidel philosophers; from it draw your own conclusions what their condition will be in eternity. Flee from infidelity as you would from the arch fiend himself. You will find it worming itself all through professed Christendom, among the ministers as well as the laity. Every departure from the obedience of any of the commands and precepts of Jesus, is the effect of infidelity. And though it may not openly deny the truth of revelation, but profess to believe it to be the word of God, yet denying and rejecting a part of it, is infidelity, and will lead to hell, and everlasting ruin. Then believe and practice the whole truth, and you will be saved, and not damned.

PRIDE.

It might not be out of place, at this time, to stir up our "pure minds" a little, to bring before our view the terrible consequences of pride. In vain we seek for words to express the true nature of that arch enemy of all that is good. It covers the land as does the waters the great deep. Few be the Christian churches or denominations whose first legislations were not against that foul disease, but where are they now? The majority, by far, are snugly wrapped and folded under its wings, all gliding along smoothly, and to the carnal mind, very pleasantly, for where pride rules there is no dissenting voice. She "Sits as a queen and not as a widow, and shall see no sorrow.' Such I believe is the condition of most of the Religious societies of the present day, and if there is anything hateful to God, it is pride. The denunciations given against pride in God's word are numerous. Pride no doubt is the cause of all the sorrow that ever entered into this world. Pride was first conceived in the hearts of our first parents when they transgressed God's laws. Satan set before them the fact that they should be as gods knowing good from evil. The proud heart desires to be exalted. We may not have positive evidence but we believe that pride was the cause of certain angels loosing their first estate, who are now kept in reservation in everlasting chains in darkness unto the judgement of the great day. Such being the fact, we ought to keep a watchful eye over the disease, guard well that it may not enter our hearts, our houses or our beloved Church. Brethren and sisters, when we look over God's word and see what pride has done, and what judgements are denounced against it, how are we minded? Are we willing that it shall be fostered among us as a people? No; none would assent to that. Then to keep the church pure, is to keep ourselves pure. I can well remember thirty years ago when I knew of several churches that opposed pride, but in this short space of time, like a prairie fire, it has spread, and the humility that then appeared among them is known no more. Well I suppose they had not built upon that rock that the Savior refers to, Matt. 7 : 24, and the winds blew and beat upon that house, and we see its effects.

Now pride being the source of so much mischief, it becomes us to find a remedy which presents itself to all of God's people in the substance of humility, the direct opposite of pride. The two elements cannot exist together. "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble." Who will choose to stand among those that God resisteth? We hope not one member of our beloved fraternity. Our lives on earth are short, our mission a very important one, and we cannot possibly afford to be carried away and bring ourselves into the judgement of God's resistance. But we think every dear brother and sisters with us, desires to be meek, humble and lowly of heart. Then we have the promise of God's grace, that all essential accomplishment unto a heavenly life, and by that grace we are enabled to give our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable in the sight of God. Then if we be not conformed to this world but transformed by the renewing of our minds, we may be able to prove what is that good, acceptable and perfect will of God. Provided with such an accontrement we may keep pride from entering our hearts. We can then walk in humility, even like Enoch of old, we may walk with God. We enjoy the pleasures of a heavenly life and communion with God in our prayers. Such a heart overflows with love to God, his word and his people. We, sometimes at least, feel as though we could lay down our lives for the Church. With such a love we will not neglect the assembling of ourselves together, but it causes us to be lively stones in the Temple of God. If we can thus sacrifice ourselves unto God's humble laws and his cause, we certainly are the happiest people on earth, for its glorious reward awaits us. The humble shall be exalted. "Ye that have followed me in the regeneration shall sit with me on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Such are the rewards for the humble in this world. But the proud and exalted shall then be abased. The prophet Daniel says "They shall awake unto everlasting shame and contempt."

Mt. Carroll, Ind.

CHRIST IS OUR LORD.

The above title is one which should inspire every true Christian. Christ is our Lord and our leader. He it is that brought us from under the old law. He it is that proclaimed salvation to the guilty world more than eighteen hundred years ago, from His own lips, and now he speaks to us from the records left for the generations who follow Him.

Then this Gospel was preached and the people were constrained to believe it through the merits of Jesus, who is now with the Father in heaven. Then a few—as many as heard the preached word were constrained to believe. But now, in this nineteenth century, we not only have the gospel preached to us by God's ministers, but we have it written in unmistakable characters, it is in everybody's house. I ask the question, who can err? No excuse will be accepted of intelligent creatures. Then why is it that there be so much diversity of opinion and of doctrine as there are?

The reason is very apparent to me, and is this: You hear, and won't read. All sorts of doctrines are afloat in the air, doctrines too that tickle the ear of men, and that are adapted to the will of the flesh, this is why ye are not Christians in truth.

Those who read and hear the word of God's revealed will, are those who are qualified to judge. This is the difference between those who hear and read, and those who read and hear.

Now all you who hear and read, ponder seriously the matter. There are many Christs and many Lords now-a-days. He whom ye serve and obey, his servants ye are. Read the word, I mean the word of God, not of gods, for there is but one God. Though many gods there be, serve ye the God of Abraham through the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is our Lord.

We are the workmanship of the creator of all things and destined to serve and glorify him in his own appointed way. Of the many gods gone out into the world, the devil is the chief of them all, and is leading captive, kindred and tongue, through the cunning devices of his ingeniousness. It might be necessary just here to state a few of the plans he takes to entrap his prey. The language he makes use of is such as this:

He pleads with his victim that he need not go into the stream to be baptized, feet-washing is non-essential, and the Lord's supper is the Jewish Passover, and if we have faith enough we need not do all the works that Jesus and his apostles did, and the salutation of the holy kiss is a disgrace. These are a few of the devices he uses,—very cunning ones indeed!

Brethren, see that ye are free from all these. And ye who have a doubt, dispel all those gloomy doubts, and come to the truth of Jesus.

SALUTATION.

All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with the holy kiss. 1. Cor 16: 20.

It is universally admitted by all classes of professors that the religion as taught by Christ the Lord, does invariably teach that those who would be His disciples must exercise love to their fellow men. "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love.' We have innumerable instances and a cloud of testimonies, that God does love man who bears His image and likeness. In no instance was the love of God so extensively manifested as in the sending of His only begotten Son into this world to redeem fallen humanity from a state of indescribable misery and sin, and once more reinstated us into the favor and friendship of our Creator; and He, accepting His Son as a full, sufficient, and willing sacrifice for our sins, has again brought us back to our primeval state, as His redeemed children. Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent His son to be a propitiation for our sins. 1. John 4: 10. No wonder the Apostle said, "Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness." The human mind is not capable of comprehending the great love, kindness and mercy of the Infinite One in the scheme of our redemption; we cannot sufficiently admire, adore, and wonder at the plan of redemption—that the Lord in His exalted state would condescend thus to notice the lamentable condition of such polluted rebels, which are the fruits of disobedience to the positive command of the Lord. God's love to us is a reason why we should love one another. Love is a powerful evidence that we have "passed from death unto life." We should love each other because we have the same Parent and bear the same image. Without love our religion is but a word and does not exceed the religion of the Scribes and Pharisees for we shall in no case enter the Kingom of Heaven. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." No man can be a real Christian who has no love for His brethren. This love will be carried out in acts of kindness, and the tokens of brotherly love are made manifest by "greeting one another with an Holy kiss." Although this command is handed to us from Christ the great law-giver through His faithful apostle, yet we are astonished to see the powerful efforts made to impress the mind it is not necessary in this day. We are bold in asserting that no man can be a true Christian who does not embrace, believe and practice to the fullest extent, all that Christ and His apostles commanded. Not long ago we were pained to read how little even professors of the religion of Christ regard the command. We clip the following:

"In Paul's time he told the Christians to greet each other with a holy kiss. We are glad that the custom has been dropped. But let us have a substitute suited to our age and. Let it be a good, hearty, enthusiastic, Christian hand-shaking."—Christian at Work.

Brethren and sisters, let us not be glad that the custom has been dropped by the so-called Christian world, but let us rejoice that we are yet willing and humble enough to practice that which is of divine appointment. Let us stand firm in the defense of ancient Christianity; let us never accept the substitutes of man which suits the carnal mind, but let us strive to attain to that unity and fidelity which the ancient Christians exemplified in their lives, manifesting to each other affection and kindness, until we shall meet in the mansions of love, where we will all be bound together in a golden chain of love to Christ, and one united song will proceed from every tongue. To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. May we then be found faithful in all that the Lord has commanded us, then we shall behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God.

Let us then cultivate and nourish the heaven-born plant, by the gentle dews of Heaven, and exercising in those things that emanate from the source and fountain of love. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to to another." S. A. HONEBERGER.

SMALL THINGS TEST MEN

In small things lie the crucibles and touchstones. Any hypocrite will come to Sabbath worship, but it is not every hypocrite that will attend prayer-meetings, or read the Bible in secret, or speak privately of the things of God to the saints. You shall find the same true in other things. A man who is no Christian very likely will not tell you a downright lie by saying that black is white, but he will not hesitate to tell you that whitey brown is white—he will go that length. Now, the Christian will not go half way to a falsehood, nay, he scorns to go an inch on that road. He will no more cheat you out of two pence farthing than he would out of two thousand pounds. He will not even rob you of an ell. Even a pharisee will ask Christ to sit at meat with him—he is willing to entertain a great religious leader at his table; but it is not every one who will stoop down and unloose his shoes: for that very pharisee who made the feast never brought him water to wash his feet, nor gave him the kiss of welcome; he proved his insincerity of his hospitality by forgetting these little things. I will be bound to say Martha and Mary never forgot to loose his shoe-latchets, and that Lazarus never failed to see that his feet were washed. Look, then, I pray you, as Christians, to the service of Christ in the obscure things, in the things that are not recognized by men, in the matters that have no honors attached to them, for by this shall your love be tried.—Spurgeon.

Religion is adapted to all our faculties, and to the various phases of life. It will grace the counting house and the mart of trade as well as the sanctuary,—it repudiates narrow bounds; its field is the world; where sin is found, there will it exert its counteracting influence. In its origin it is heavenly; in its nature divine. It incarnates the grandest thoughts of God. Nature reveals much; it is eloquent for God, but it has no Christ and no cross. The Bible contains the most wondrous revelations which man has ever received. It alone satifies the soul.

THE LORD'S PLOWMAN.

The plow is one among the most ancient agricultural implements of which we have any account, and in their primitive style were quite differerent from those now in use. The first plow that we have any account of was made of a pole, the pole forming the beam to which the oxen or camels were attached, and a branch or limb at the butt end of the pole, some two feet long, formed the beam to which the point or share was attached. A stay from the draught beam to the share beam gave it strength and completed the plow all except a small share attached to the lower end of the plow beam. This discription must very nearly represent the plow used in Palestine, in the time of our Savior, and the one that he had in mind when he said, "He that taketh hold of the plow and looketh back is not fit for the Kingdom."

That good ploughing is an important consideration in successful agriculture will be admitted by all who have a correct knowledge of the business. Unless the plowing is well and carefully done, it is a very difficult matter to get the soil in a proper condition for a reception of the seed, and unless the soil is in this condition, the prospects are not good for a paying crop, hence it may be said with some propriety, he that taketh hold of the plow and looketh back is not fit for a farmer. To make a good plowman there are certain qualifications necessary. It is true, almost any bunglar by long experience, may turn a decent furrow under favorable circumstances, where the land is level, mellow and free from roots, stones and rocks, but to excel in all kind of plowing it requires a man of precision and correct judgment, one who has, as the saying runs, a straight eye and enough confidence in his own ability to believe that he is doing good work and laying a nice furrow without looking back.

This looking back is kind of an inherent nature and we are often tempted to do it, and at the very time too that the consequences may prove the most fatal. We can well remember our own experience in this most honorable and useful occupation. With braced nerves and a tight grip we took hold of the uncouth instrument —started the team and off we went, but wondering how we did it we concluded just to take a peep backward, but just then the point happened to touch a stone and out she went leaving the plow sliding on the land and on its side. Had father been there he would have said, "My son if you expect to plow and look back you will never make a plowman." Now there were two causes for this looking back, first, because we did not understand the business, and secondly, because we had not a sufficient faith in our ability.

If we had fully understood the nature of plowing and the laying of furrows, we would have known that the furrow that we saw falling over before us would lay in that position behind us, and had we had a full confidence in our ability as a plowman, we would have known that the work was well done from the fact that we accurately followed the pattern, and that like causes produces like effects. We are now speaking of plowing where the land has been opened and the first furrow drawn, as no father would think of asking a son to draw the opening furrow at the first attempt, neither does our Heavenly Father ask us to draw an opening furrow with the Gospel plow. We have noticed so much bad plowing that we have come to the conclusion there are many in the field that are not fit to plow. It is true these do not all look back, but at the same time they do not look forward, their mind and purpose is not on the work which onfits them for the calling, and just in as full a sense as looking back onfits a man for a plowman, so completely does it unfit the man who has taken hold of the Gospel plow, for the Kingdom.

Life is compared to a seed time, but through sin we have sold our birthright—become disinherited and are aliens and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, without lands or vineyards we were left to grope our way in darkness until Christ, with a great price, purchased for us brethren, sisters, houses, lands, and best of all, a plow for us by which we can thoroughly cultivate the soil of our hearts, and thus prepare it for the reception of the seed of eternal life. All these are promised to us on the most reasonable terms, which are faith, repentance and baptism. By faith we lay hold on the exceeding great and precious promises. By repentance we show to the one who has befriended us, our utter disregard for the things that burdened and bore us down in the land of sin and bondage and our filial love and esteem for the one who rescued us. By baptism we make manifest to the world our death and burial to sin and the coming forth of the new man in Christ Jesus, the dying unto sin and living unto righteousness and, our removal from the barren land of wickedness into the kingdom or vineyard of the Lord.

We have now passed from death to life, from Egypt to Canaan—we have passed the boundaries of the cursed city and the important injunction is, "Look not behind thee." We are now in a land most preciously our own, given to us by the pledge of fidelity of which there can be no doubt, hedged about by unmistakable "landmarks" guided by one who is mighty to save, and overshadowed by the clouds of divine mercy, the Gospel plow is presented, the opening furrow plainly drawn and the command is, "follow my example." This would seem sufficient for every reasonable and rational mind. After knowing the price paid for liberation who should ask for or expect more? But in order that we might all be forewarned of the danger of looking back, he makes the solemn and truthful declaration, "He that taketh hold of the plow and looketh back is not fit for the Kingdom." Why not fit for the Kingdom? The most evident reason in the world. It is absolutely necessary that the most expert plowman should look forward, the drawn furrow, the example, is in front, the power is in front and all the obstacles to be overcome are before. To do good work, these must all have the attention of a watchful eye. He that looketh back will lose the advantages of these needed cautionary measures, and as a result, will make thousands of blunders, the fallow ground of the heart will be unbroken, the seed of Gospel truth will be sown on unprepared soil and having no depth will spring up only to wither and die away and as a consequence there will be nothing to reap, nothing to eat and nothing to enjoy—not fit for the Kingdom because he has nothing there to enjoy. We are to enjoy the fruits of our labors, but if our labors are made unfruitful by everlastingly looking back after the beggarly elements of the world, we will have no fruits to enjoy, therefore the Kingdom cannot be enjoyable and such as cannot enjoy it had better not be there. God furnishes us with the Kingdom, the mansions, the guest chambers, the tables, the fruitful land and the plow and tells us that the seed time has come, put thy hands to the plow but remember, do not look back or there will be no crop to reap, and as a result there will be an empty table, and empty tables make empty guest chambers, empty mansions and empty Kingdoms. Such material is not fit for the Kingdom. Forward, onward and upward, is the true disciples watchword, his interests are before and not behind. With a determined purpose he takes hold of the Gospel plow, having his eyes fixed on the Captain of his salvation, he presses toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

If we were to see a man following after the plow with his face turned backward we would think him insane, but my Christian brethren and sisters, we have thousands of just such Gospel plowman to-day. It is true they have put their hand to the plow but one thing they lack; they have not sold all, some of the fat oxen and a few choice lambs are unsold the fact is, their treasures are behind and we see them trying to go towards heaven backward, and at every little impediment they are stumbling, until finally they fall in the ditch and all is lost. How it causes our hearts to bleed when we see our dearest friends, brethren and sisters, who started out with fair prospects for heaven, walking thus with their faces turned backward admiring the vanities of the cursed city! They have no prize in view, have lost sight of their Captian and their religion is a sham, a mockery. They disgrace their profession and cast a stigma upon the Church of which they claim to be members—they are not fit for the Kingdom. In the ears of such, we long to whisper, "Remember Lot's wife."

While we thus view the dark side of the picture and weep for the lost, we are glad to know that there is also a bright side, that there are gospel plowmen who do not look back but with a fixed eye on the prize set before them, they press forward with the assurance that they shall reap if they faint not. Of these we will mention Moses when he concluded to dwell with his own people and that he would rather suffer affliction with them than to dwell in the courts of Pharoah. David was going forward when he saw the end of the wicked and determined that he would rather be a door keeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of the wicked. Old Simeon saw the prize while he was so patiently waiting for the coming of the Lord's Christ and when he exclaimed, "now lettest thy servent depart in peace for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." The apostles, after having sojourned a season with their divine Master and received the witness of the spirit, became expert plowmen, facing persecution and death with unwavering fidelity. The apostle Paul showed an extraordinary zeal in the great work. His motto was, "forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forward after those things which are before" The faithful martyrs of all ages, who suffered, bled and died, left behind them living testimonials of the good work which they accomplished by not looking back, and the living christian of to day, throughout the world are the Lord's plowman. They are not looking back, but like the judicious husbandman, are carefully preparing the soil and in hope, though sometimes in tears, are casting their seed with the assurance of reaping a good harvest.

Dear Christian brothers and sisters, with this great army of the Lord's plowmen before us as examples, will we not take hold of the plow with a firmer grasp, renewed courage, determined that we will never, never look back? And to you dear sinner, we would say, if those who take hold of the plow and look back are not fit for the kingdom, how much more fit do you suppose you will be who never take hold of the plow? You certainly will not attempt to sow on untilled soil, or expect to reap of that which you have not sown. Remember this is seed time and the only seedtime you will ever have the advantage of enjoying. There is no work or device beyond the grave to which we are rapidly hastening. Then awaken up to your best interests and work out your own salvation while it is called "to day" for the night soon cometh wherein no man can work.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The time for holding these interesting, and we hope profitable, meetings will soon be here, and as a preparatory step sub-district councils will be held throughout the Brotherhood. On the actions taken by these meetings depend the character of our District Conferences. We sometimes fear that there is not the importance attached to these meetings that there should be, and that they oftentimes send queries that could and should be settled at home. All personal grievances between members can be settled at home where the circumstances and persons are known and where all the witnesses can be present, far better than if sent away where the things are indefinitely understood, and perhaps represented by those whose judgment may be somewhat biassed. If the Church feels incompetent to make a decision, let adjoining elders be called, but do not bring them up to District Conference to harass the minds of the whole meeting about things of which they have but a limited knowledge. Some times queries are sent through curosity simply to know what the meeting may have to say. Another grievious fault is in sending queries time and again when there is no real cause for it. By looking over the Minutes of our proceedings, we can find queries that have been presented to every meeting for years. Can we not afford to let these things rest for awhile and strike a new rut in the Christian economy? While we are differing and wrangling about a few questions of no very vital importance, thousands of precious souls are starving for the "Bread of Life." Here is a field worthy of our labor and most earnest enquiry. Let the queries of our coming meeting be in regard to how we may more effectually spread the Gospel, about sending out evangelists, building churches, caring for our poor, and more especially, their children. A provision that simply keeps soul and body together is not sufficient, their children should be cared for, surrounded by such circumstances as will enable them to receive correct moral habits and a good English education. A provision of this kind might save many promising youths from the snares and temptations which are thrown across their pathway in their unprovided for condition. Hoping that these hints will receive a thoughtful consideration, we dismiss the subject, believing that there are many who concur with us a that there is a needed reform in these things.

FLOWERS.

A few days ago we were the happy recipients of several boxes from the enterprising Western Nurseryman F. K. Phoenix, of Bloomington, Ill., and imagine our very agreeable surprise on opening them, to find them filled with several dozens of choice pot plants, and what surprised us most was, that they had reached us after so long a journey, in really a better condition for transplanting than had they been received from a next door neighbor. Mrs. Brumbaugh was especially elated at the unexpected floral treat, as she is rather a lover of roses, verbenas, geraniums, petunias, fuchsias and a number of others that we are not florist enough to spell without looking up the names.

When flower plants can be had in such a perfect condition and at such low prices, we cannot see why any should be without them who admire God through his works. A discriptive catalogue with prices will be sent by addressing as above.

MARIETTA NURSERIES.—From the gentlemen, Engle & Bro., of this well established and responsible Nursery, we have received some 3 catalogues describing the products which they now offer to the Spring trade. In a short time their advertisement will appear in our columns when we hope our readers will avail themselves of the advantages they offer to those wishing to purchase anything in their line. By having their Catalogue you can order from them with as much satisfaction as if you were to go there and make your own selection.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Eld. Geo. Worst informs us that he has disposed of his present home and has purchased within the limits of the Maple Grove congregation, Ashland Co., Ohio. His address hereafter will be Ashland, Ohio.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim: As it is not my privilege to attend preaching to day, I have been reading, and meditating upon the condition of many poor souls, and by the help of God, I will write a few thoughts for them, and earnestly hope that some one may be led to meditate upon their condition. This is my first attempt to write for any paper, but such as I have, I will give. I feel concerned for the many who are not concerned for themselves, and want to entreat them to be up, and doing before it is too late. You may think you may have many days yet, but of this you are not certain, for to-morrow you may be in eternity; and the awful thought of being unprepared for the change! Though you are now enjoying perfect health, it can soon be taken from you. Do you not see around you some who are taken away without a moment's warning, see how you are blessed; but will this be always the case? No; your time is coming and let me entreat you as a lover of your souls, to be earnestly engaged for yourselves. This is a work no one can do for you; it is your own duty to prepare for the great enjoyment in the service of the Lord; you can go to him in time of distress, and receive comfort in affliction, and get relief, and a hope that when you die you can go, and live with him. Are you enjoying perfect health? Now is the very time to do your duty. Do not wait until you are afflicted? This is not the best time to serve the Lord. Are you afflicted? If so, do all you can, God will lend a listening ear to your earnest prayers, and if you are restored to health you can rejoice in your affliction, for you will see it has been for your good. I say rejoice in affliction; it is often the means of drawing us nearer our duty; let me entreat you to be concerned about your condition before it is forever too late and those too who have set their faces zionward, are you marching onward? Are you progressing upward? If you are, I say go on. If not, be arroused, and hasten on your march, double your diligence, with renewed energy, and let go many of the cares of this world for an interest in heaven. Lay up your treasures there, and your heart will be there also. Let us pray to be more weaned from the many useless things of this world, and spend the time searching for the hidden treasures, that are laid up for us. For one moment reflect how little of our time we spend for our Lord; we are so surrounded with the cares of this world, that often if we wait to attend to them all, we have not time to do our duty, and if we attempt to try, we are not in a condition, to search very deep. Now this is not all that will be required of us. Let us resolve to spend our first time in his service, and then attend to our temporal affairs, and if there are some left undone, it is much better than to leave the Lord's work undone. He has given us all our time, and see how little we spend in his service. I hope these may be our daily meditations. May we be enabled to carry out these resolutions, until the Master calls for us, and may we continue to improve the talent or talents as it may be, is the sincere wishes of your homble sister in Christ. M. C. C.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

According to previous announcement the members of Black River district, met on the evening of the 24th of January, at our meeting house in Chatham to commence a series of meetings, which continued at this place until the evening of the 28th. Bro Conrad Kayler from Canton, was with us and preached the word to very attentive hearers. We had good attendance, considering the bad roads, and good order, and very interesting and instructive preaching from a chain of subjects by Bro. K as he was the only speaker present aside from those residing in the district. The first evening he preached from the text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation," and the next day from the text, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and the next text was "Awake, thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light," and so on from like interesting subjects until he took his leave of the brethren here. In all his sermons he tried to deeply impress in the minds of the sinner, the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and the great need of coming to Christ while it is yet called to day. And also that the believers in Christ shou'd be careful to discharge their duties faithfully in order to gain the crown and meet in the blissful realms above. Sinners were made to weep, and believers were encouraged to press forward. We trust that the seed sown may spring up not many days hence and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God the Father. And we truly hope the dear friends will remember what our beloved brother told them the last evening he was with us, that the word spoken will not return void, but will accomplish that for which it was sent; that it would either prove a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death.

Our meeting was moved from our meeting house in Chatham, to the one in Homer, on Thursday eve and as Bro. Kayler's health is poor, and having labored hard here, and taken a severe cold, he did not feel able to continue with us longer than Wednesday eve. (May the Lord bless him for his labors of love among us) So the speakers of this district continued the meeting until Saturday eve, when Bro. Wm. Sadler came to their aid, and staid until Monday noon. The brethren here continued the meeting until Tuesday eve, when the meeting closed. There was one added to the church by baptism, and a deep interest was manifested by many, who we trust, are counting the cost and hope ere long will come out on the Lord's side.

MARY HOOVER.

Chatham. O.

Dear Brother Brumbaugh:—It has been some time since we gave any church news from our congregation, and now I have nothing special, only that our meeting house is so nearly finished that we held our love-feast in it last fall. The second story is completed with the exception of seating, and is only seated with temporary seats until we get able to seat it right. We are holding our regular meetings in it this winter, and we are truly enjoying the comfort of a good, convenient and substantial house for the worship of the Lord; although it has cost us much more than we anticipated, yet if the members are all zealous in the cause of our great Redeemer, which I hope they are, the Lord will prosper us all, so that we will soon be able to pay the indebtedness. We have had but a few additions this season, but the ark of the Lord is moving along slowly, and we hope when the early and later rains come, we will then reap a full harvest. We receive the PILGRIM weekly and peruse its contents with pleasure. May the Lord prosper you all in the good work you are engaged in, and may we all prosper thereby. J. L. KIRKENBERRY.

WARSAW, IND.

Dear Pilgrim:—

As we all love to read church news, I will again give a short sketch of a visit I made to Ogens Creek congregation. I left home on the 21st of February, commenced meeting in the Christian church, preached here three times, but the roads were so bad and it was raining about all the time, so the brethren thought we had better quit, as it was almost impossible to get to the place of meeting. We were very sorry for this, as there seemed to be quite an interest taken in the meeting. So after we dismissed sister Leslie, (widow of John Leslie) requested us to visit her family, she living in this congregation, and we formerly were well acquainted, we consented to do so, and her oldest son yet at home came to where we were, some four miles, to convey us to their home. We concluded then to have some meetings and continued till the first of March, on which day I had the pleasure of baptizing five willing converts, brother G. Leslie being one of the number. We had a good time here, and felt that the Lord was with us. This is a new district. A. Leedy is their elder here. The brethren and sisters felt like working, and we must say that they did their part nobly. This being the first series of meetings held in this part of the church, we were sorry to leave as we felt that there were quite a number more almost ready to join with us, but the roads being very bad, and we feeling much wearied, we thought we had better stop for this time. We can but express our thanks to the dear brethren and sisters for their kindness shown to us while in their midst. The brethren and sisters are very desirous that Bro. H. D. Davy should come and preach for them, and we think he should if possible, and since we remember that sister Leslie is a niece of his, and is very anxious to have him call and preach for them, we hope he will at his earliest convenience. Yours fraternally.

G. W. CRIPE.

Dear Editors: As I noticed a piece headed, "Keep us Supplied," the thought struck me at once, how can we expect a good paper unless we keep our editors supplied with such matter as is calculated to interest us all. It really does me good when I can read words of encouragement from all parts of the Brotherhood, as I am taking both PILGRIM and Companion, and to-day I went to visit a little sick daughter whose the Vindicator happened to fall into my hands. I read it principally all before I stopped. I see the brethren are also advocating the good cause in that, as well as in our other periodicals. Let us also put our shoulders to the wheel and help to move along the good work. The revolution will soon be made when we can all reap the rich reward of our labors.

"Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee and hath had compassion on thee." This was spoken by our dear Savior to the poor Gadarene after he, by his supernatural power, had caused the legion of unclean spirits to come out from him. When Jesus, and some of his disciples, came over on the other side of the sea into the country of the Gadarenes, immediately there met him, out of the tombs, a man with an unclean spirit who had his dwelling continually among the mountains and in the tombs. He was there continually, night and day, crying and cutting himself with stones. The country of the Gadarenes is supposed by critics to have been a place of heathenism and idolatry, where devils have much more power than where the Christian religion is fully established. No doubt the legion of devils, if I am allowed the expression, had the principal control of this poor man, for Matthew tells us that they were so exceeding fierce that no man could pass by that way. Mark tells us that he, the man, had often been bound with fetters and chains and they were all broken and plucked asunder, we argue, by the power of the unclean spirits. He had his dwelling among the mountains and in the tombs, perhaps among such as were hewn out of rocks with cupolas over them, with heaps of fragments which had been hewn out of them all around. Perhaps with such sharp fragments at certain times, he would cut and lacerate his flesh. He would seem to have had supernatural power, indeed a real mad man, so much so that the heathens of that country, that believed only in heathen gods, could not pass without being interrupted. This was a lamentable state of things. Perhaps his father or mother, or a dear brother or sister would pass along and see their friend in this awful condition. The father could lay down upon his bed of repose but perhaps the first thing would be the cries of his dear son. Oh! this must cause sorrow and trouble indescribable. But when Jesus comes, the unclean spirits cry out, what have we to do with thee Jesus thou Son of God, art thou come hither to torment us before the time? From this, it appears that a greater degree of punishment awaits these demons than they at that time endured, and they knew there was a time set by the Divine Judge when they should be sent into more terrible torments. They now have only one more request from Jesus, and that is that he would suffer them to go into a herd of swine, two thousand in number, while they numbered six thousand, making three devils to each swine, which so completely confused them that they all ran violently down a steep place into the sea and perished.

Here you see that the prayers of devils was heard and granted by Jesus, but only to their destruction. But when they that kept the swine saw what was done they fled to the city and told the owners, and the whole city came out, probably with the intention to destroy Jesus for thus having destroyed their swine, but when they saw him they were awed by his presence and besought him that he would depart out of their coasts. So you see they would prefer their swine before Jesus. But this is nothing uncommon. There are many in our age that would prefer the swine of the field before they would have Jesus, yes and many other evil things all in preference to their dear Savior. Like the Jews, they denied the holy one and the just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto them. Now when Jesus was gone into a ship and was about to return to his own city, (Capernium) he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him, howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but said unto him, go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee and hath had compassion on thee. Oh, yes, who would not desire to be with Jesus after having such a great favor conferred upon him? This was one of the greatest favors that was ever bestowed upon any mortal being. We might say the dead were raised, the eyes of the blind were opened, the deaf were made to hear, yet none of them suffered in the flesh like this poor Gadarene. Notwithstanding he having enjoyed all these blessings, he cannot go with Jesus, but must now go home to his friends, perhaps to his dear father and mother, brothers and sisters and such as dearly loved him, such as had a holy sympathy for him, not strangers, but such as he would be most likely to wield a powerful influence over by telling them what great things Jesus had done for him. But it appears to us that it needed but little preaching to convince those of his friends that he really had been with Jesus, that he had met the one most dear among ten thousand who was altogether lovely. Oh, what a time of rejoicing this was to see such an one come with the love of Jesus shed abroad in his heart! My dear reader do you think there ever was a greater time of rejoicing among friends? No doubt, he was crying the shouts of hallelujah to the Lamb while his friends were now beginning to inquire after such a dear Savior, and were beginning to think with the poet

"Salvation, O, the joyful sound,
Tis music to our ears;
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears."

Our friend was buried in sorrow and in sin, he was near going to hell, but he now, by grace divine, can see a heavenly day. Dear brethren, let us all rejoice when we hear that sinners are turning to God. May we all be faithful to our calling, and finally, dear brethren, I ask an interest in your prayers in my behalf that I may meet you all beyond the shores of mortality where parting will be known no more. TELL NO MAN.

Dear Editors:—

I notice in PILGRIM No. 5, page 38, a query from D. S. Replogle on Mark 1: 43—44. "See thou say nothing to any man, but go thy way and show thyself unto the priest."

It appears he was to tell no man, but was to show himself unto the priest. It also appears that it was necessary for him to show himself unto the priest, for we find in the 13th chapter of Leviticus, that, when there was any suspicion of leprosy, the priest was to make an examination every seven days, hence it was necessary that he should show himself unto the priest, but he was to tell no man. Now, it seems that when the Savior wrought a miracle of this kind, he did it before all that were present "In secret" he says, "I have done nothing." John 18: 20. He may, however, have done some things rather secretly, notwithstanding He told us to fear no man, but he also tells us to live in peace with all men as far as lieth in us. Then we must conclude that he spake openly, and gave the word full power, but he avoided aggravating or offending the Jews as much as possible, by keeping some things a little secret. The following are some examples:

Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of of Jesus, but secretly, on account of the Jews. John 19. We read of a certain blind man who was restored to sight. They asked his parents concerning this matter; but they feared the Jews. John 9: 22. Now why did Jesus command him to tell no man? One reason is, he did not want to make any display or fuss about religion as some people do. When we read the next verse we find the leper did not give heed, but went and told it so much that Jesus could no more openly enter the city. I think we can see why He told him what he did. It was to keep things as quiet as possible.

This was not all. He had done many miracles before the Jews and notwithstanding all that, they rejected him, and he avoided casting His pearls before swine.

The next question is, "Have we any Scripture on record that he did tell them not to keep it secret?" I don't think we have. We have an account of an impotent man that had an infirmity thirty and eight years, and when he was made whole, the Savior did not tell him to tell it, neither did he tell him not to tell it, but only said, "go thy way and sin no more." John 5. In Matt. 11: 16, we find that John sent two of His disciples to the Savior to ask Him if He was the one that should come, or do we look for another? He answered and said unto them, "go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see. He said, "tell John," but we have no account that they were to tell it to any one else. What I have written I have written. Prove all by the word. S. N. WINE.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

The following we just came across in our MS. drawer. It is a case that demands our sympathies and we give it hoping that some more of our readers will continue to throw in their mites for the needy poor. We have continued sister Effie's PILGRIM with the assurance that it will be paid for. We have hundreds of good hearted brethren and sisters that would not hesitate a moment to give under such circumstances, and we know that some will respond in this case as well as many more that we are now supplying at a similar risk.

JAN. 11th 1874.

Dear Brethren:—

Only a few weeks ago we wrote to you asking you to send us the PILGRIM for 1874, and now we are sorry to say we have to ask you to stop sending it. You may wonder why. It is because my dear husband has happend with a very sad accident. He had been working in Shank's machine shop (in Goshen Ind) for the last six months and on last Thursday he was cleaning away from the planer and in stooping over, his feet slipped and as he was falling he struck his left hand in the knives and cut all his fingers off to the hand. There were short pieces of bone left which the Dr. unjointed at the knuckles and then sewed up the wound. He suffered everything but death. Chloriform had no effect on him whatever. He is gaining slowly but is very weak, and he will not be able to work for months to come and we will have to be somewhat dependent on the charity of others as we are poor and have no home of our own. This is why we cannot take the PILGRIM. We do not feel able to pay for it at present. Perhaps when he gets able to work again we can take it again. We are sorry to do without it as we have taken it ever since we were married with the exception of a few months. We shall miss it very much. We received the Almanac and first number of the PILGRIM for this year and were pleased with its change. Notwithstanding we cannot have the pleasure of reading it, we say go on with the good work, visit the many homes where glad hearts are waiting for you. May God bless the efforts and blot out the errors, and I do hope when our name is taken from your list that there will be another one to take its place.

As I am left to watch my husband alone to night, I began to get sleepy, and I thought I would write to keep awake. I wonder if any sister has to watch her companion in the same condition to night that I do, I hope not, for no one can know or realize how awful it is but those who have had the trial of it. This makes me think of the hymn which says,

"Our troubles and trials here,
Will only make us richer there,
When we arrive at home."

What a comfort and consolation! I will now wish you God speed and ask you to remember me in your prayers.

Your unworthy sister.

EFFIE OPPERMAN.

FOUND DEAD—Mrs. Elizabeth Fahney, an aged lady, was found dead at the house of her nephew, Mr. Andrew Senger, near this place, on Saturday morning last, where she had been staying for some time past. She was engaged in singing and religious conversation until a late hour in the evening, retiring in health and good spirits. In the morning a member of the family as usual entered the room to make up the fire and found her a corps at the bedside. She was the daughter of Jacob Holsinger, dec'd, and wife of Dr. Jacob Fahrney, a man of more than ordinary eminence in the profession, who located in this place many years ago, and who is still remembered by many of our citizens. He was a Presiding Elder or Bishop in the German Baptist Church. It will be twenty-six years on the 12th of April since he departed this life. Both are buried at Price's Meeting House.— Waynesboro Record.

THE FAMILY

BY AND BY.

MARGARET J. PRESTON.

What will it matter by and by
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or a golden sky,
When I look back on it, by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether, unhelped, I toi'ed alone,
Dashing my foot against a stone,
Missing the charge of the angel nigh,
Biddiog me think of the by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether with laughing joy I went [tout
Down through the years with a glad con-
Never believing, nay, not I,
Tears would be sweeter by and by!

What will it matter by and by
Whether with cheek to cheek I've lain
Close by the pallid angel, Pain,
Soothing myself through sob and sigh;
"All will be elsewise by and by?"

What will it matter? Naught, if I
Only am sure the way I've trod,
Gloomy or gladdened, leads to God,
Questioning not of the bow, the why,
If I but reach him, by and by.

What will I care for the unshared sigh,
If, in my fear of slip or fall,
Closely I've clung to Christ through all
Mindless how rough the path might lie,
Since he will smooth it by and by?

Ah! it will matter by and by Nothing but this: That Joy or Pain
Lifted me skyward, helped to gain,
Whether through rack, or smile, or sigh,
Heaven—home—all in all, by and by!

"TWAS MY MOTHER."

A company of good children, who had gathered out of the valleys and garrets of the city, were preparing for their departure to new and distant homes in the West. Just before the time for the starting of the cars, one of the boys was noticed aside from the other, and apparantly very busy with a cast-off garment. The superintendent stepped up to him and found that he was cutting a small piece out of the patched lining. It proved to be his old jacket, which having been replaced by a new one, had been thrown away. There is no time to lose. "Come, John, come?" said the superintendent, "what are you going to do with that piece of calico?"

"Please, sir," said John, "I am cutting it to take with me. My dear dead mother put on the lining into this old jacket for me. This was a piece of her dress, and it is all I shall have to remember her by." And as the poor boy thought of that dear mother's love, and of the sad death bed scene in the old garret where she died, he covered his face with his hands and sobbed as if his heart would break.

But the train was about leaving, and John thrust the little piece of calico into his bosom "to remember his mother by," hurried into a car, and was soon far away from the place where he had seen so much sorrow.

Many an eye has moistened as the story of this orphan boy has been told and many a heart prayed that the God of the fatherless and motherless would be his friend. He loved his mother, and we cannot but believe that he obeyed her and was a faithful child.

Will our little readers, whose parents are yet spared them, always try to show their love by cheerful obedience, knowing this is pleasing to the Lord? Will the boys, especially, always be affectionate and kind to their mothers?

Will you keep in mind that if you should some day have to look upon the face of a 'dear dead mother, no thought would be so bitter as to remember that you have given her pain by your willfulness or disobedience?

HOME INTERESTS.

HABIT.

The power of habit is something of which we are every day conscious. Though so much has been said and written concerning it, we need still "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a "great deal to keep in our minds the importance of forming in our children and strengthening in ourselves good habits. It is so difficult to break up long established modes of action, and turn the camels of one's activities in new directions, that it is not surprising the mature in life, who have suffered from not being started right in the first place, should lay, as they are inclined to, great stress on the importance of making in all things a good beginning.

There are a few habits which form a pretty good foundation for success in life and insure the friendship of the discerning and virtuous. First among these we would place the habit of self-help. This may and should be formed in a child, before it can walk or talk, by providing resources for its amusements and leaving it, within due bounds, to depend upon those resources. Then as it grows older it should be taught and gently compelled to perform in its own behalf all that it can do. Few of us but know young men and young women perfectly helpless for all the ordinary uses of life. If they alone where the sufferers it wouldn't matter much, but they are social leeches, always demanding service and never rendering it. Good husbands, good wives, good parents rarely, if ever, are found in this class of people.

Next in importance to the habit of self-help we would place that of personal tidiness. We do not care to guess how many American men and women set down to breakfast every morning with their toilets half made, the men without collar and cravat, the women with unkempt hair, and the children resembling the parents in dress as much as in feature. "But you see there are so many things to do in the morning—stock to feed, cows to milk, fires to make, milk to skim, children to dress, breakfast to get—that one can't spend much time fixing themselves up." All very true; but one dosen't go round barefooted in the morning, or without washing face and hands, because a habit the reverse of all that has been formed. "My hair is combed in the morning for all day before I leave my chamber," said an elegant housekeeper the other day, and she keeps no girl, and we couldn't help thinking the happiness her husband must have had just in the one particular of seeing her every morning for twenty years with smoothly combed hair, and neat linen collar, opposite him at the breakfast table, and of the order and cleanliness in the household of which that one little item was an index That "cleanliness is next to godliness," should be early and deeply impressed on every child, and it should be taught to shrink from uncleanness and undtidiness as it shrinks from vice.

Another habit of great value is that of courtesy. If a child is properly trained to ask for what he wants and make meet acknowledgments for favors received, to recognize the rights and respect the feelings of others, he will be able to win friends no matter what other faults he may have. This habit he will acquire, or absorb, rather, from those around him. Courteous children are but the reflection of courteous parents. Genuine courtesy flows out from the heart and can never be put on as an outside garment.

Another excellent habit is that of helping others In fact we are in the world for the express purpose of doing that very thing and if we fail in this, it matters little to any but ourselves how long we remain here. It is natural for the loving parent to do every thing for his child and require nothing in return, but the sooner the child is taught to deny himself in, order to serve others, his parents, his brothers, and sisters, the more certainly will whatever is noble in him be developed. We are all selfish enough, and there are very few who are not improved by having their impulses of benevolence stimulated.

The habit of improving one's time is of importance that can hardly be over-estimated. Not that children should work all the time, but that they should spend very few hours in mere idleness and time-killing. One occupation should succeed another, so as to give due variety and exercise the mental and bodily powers in harmony. Idle children are apt to make idle grown folks, and there are too many drones in society for its good, as we all know.

The last habit we will mention is that of perserverance. Life, from beginning to end is full of obstacles to be over come, of problems to be solved, of mountains to be tunneled and valleys to be filled up, and we can hardly begin too soon our endeavors to master destiny. He that overcomes in little will overcome in much. A child should not be given a task beyond his powers, but within that limit he shouldbe required to do what is assigned him. The stimulus of praise or reward will often be sufficient to secure the performance of a given labor, though the pain of censure may sometimes be necessary.

With these habits of self-help, personal tidiness, courtesy, helping others, improving one's time, and perserverance, it matters little how poor in purse an individual may be left, he or she will possess a buoyant power that will raise them above adversity and pluck victory from the arms of defeat.—New York Tribune.

DESERTED ON THE HILLS.

Newman Hall delivered a very earnest address to the "unemployed," in the hall of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association Thanksgiving afternoon, in which he related the following touching story.

As I was traveling over the mountains of Cumberland years ago, I heard a lamb bleating. I listened, detained, as I am sure, by a loving Providence. It was a pitiful cry. It seemed to say, "Help me, pity me, save me!"

I started in the direction from whence it came. The little thing saw me, and came running to meet me. "Help me, pity me, save me!" It was half starved. I took it up in my arms. I think I talked to it. I saw an old sheep near by and carried it to her. She would not notice it, and as I walked away the little creatures came tottering after me,—"Help me, pity me, save me."

I thought, "I can not leave ye, little one, to perish, I wouldn't mind carrying ye seven miles in my arms; but if I should meet the shepherd, what would he think of me? Would he believe me"

Just then I saw the tall form of a man rising above the tops of the hills. It was my friend Richardson, the shepherd with whom I passed the night before. I had left some papers at his house, and he had hurried to bring them to me.

I told him about the lamb. "Yes," he said, "sheep will abandon them sometimes at this season of the year, when feed is so hearce. I will take it."

He took the lamb in his arms and held it against his bosom; and as I saw him going away over the hills, I could not but think of the Great Shepherd, who carries the lambs in his bosom." And, I thought if I, a sinful man, so pity a little creature God has made, with how much greater tenderness will he pity us, who is the Father of us all. Do you think, that when the weakest of you cry to Jesus, "Help me, pity me, save me!" He will refuse to listen? Never.

Two years afterwards I visited friend Richardson, the shepherd, and asked him what became of the little lamb.

"Why," said he, "it is now the finest of the flock."

"So may the feeblest soul that cries to heaven for help be strengthened by grace and become the noblest and most useful in the flock of God."

After telling that story the whole audience rose and sung.—

"Jesus, like a shepherd lead us."

MOTHER'S BOY.

Elbert Corpsey is his mother's pet. He coaxes and scolds her as the whim takes him. He disobeys her, says saucy words to her, and, as she often says, vexes her almost to death. Still she loves him fondly, and calls him "mother's pet."

Edward Heck is the son of a poor widow who calls him "mother's comfort." He tries his very best to make his mother happy in spite of her poverty. One day he went to market for her, and as he staggered homeward under a very heavy load of potatoes a gentleman said to him.

"My son, that basket is too heavy for you to carry."

Edward looked in the gentleman's face with a good-natured smile, and replied,—

"It is heavy, sir, but I would rather carry it myself than that mother should have to carry it."

Now, as you can see, both these boys were their mother's pets. Which of them, think you, was a real mother's boy? Surely Elbert, tho selfish, was not. The love was all on his mother's side. But tho grateful Edward returned love for love. The noble fellow bore his mother's burdens and was the real, true mother's boy. Don't you think so? If you do, I want you to show it by bearing your mother's burdens. Will you?

MISCELLANEOUS.

In seventeen years Spurgeon has received 13,000 persons into his church in London on profession of their faith, has erected thirty-six chapels in the metropolis, and supplied them with ministers trained in a college he founded and manages, to which over sixty young men are studying for the ministry.

Some of the cities of modern California are on the very sites where ancient races had their dwelling places and their burial mounds. The skeletons of an unknown race have been found in San Francisco and hills, and workmen engaged in cutting down a street crossing at Napa recently unearthed the remains of nearly one hundred persons. The skeletons had been partially burned before interment. Mortars, arrow heads, knives made from odsidian, and a shell ear drop were discovered.

Theology in Chicago is decidedly mixed. The presbyterians are trying to Investigate the opinions of Professor Swig, who is the most popular evangelical clergyman in the city, and are looking after the heresies of McKaig. The Baptists are considering what to do with Rev. Mr. McCarthy. Rev. Mr. Reid has been dismissed because the pew-rents are falling off, which is a capital theological offence in any preacher in these days. Dr. Chency has succeeded in reorganizing his church on the Reformed platform, but Bishop Whitehouse has pounced upon the property of the church, and Robert Collyer has proved infidel to the temperance creed by pronouncing in favor of wine and beer. Altogether things are not so lovely in the Garden City as could be wished.

According ta the English Mechanic, a new process of iron-making, which dispenses with the blast furnace, has been practically tested, and specimens of its produce shown at Wolverhampton. The bloom is made direct from the ore, which is ground, mixed with lime and pitch, and baked in a cook oven. This is treated as pig iron, and furnace being charged with it, it is ready for the helve or squeezers in half an hour. The ventors claim by their process they can make a ton of iron from the ore at an expenditure of only two tons of coal; that they can make German steel as cheaply as cast iron, and that they can, furthermore, make the latter equal in purity to charcoal iron.

The Japs.—The dress of the Japanese, says a writer, is plain, but quite neat and comfortable, and, be it said to their praise, far surpasses our own in point of physiological fitness. The men and women both wear a garment very much resembling the old Roman toga, which is fastened about the waist with a broad girdle. The women wear their hair in a very nice way, something after the waterfall style, minus the false material. The men wear theirs pretty much as the Europeans do. It is the custom for the ladies as soon as they marry to blacken their teeth and shave their eyebrows, in order, I suppose, to prove their affection for their husbands, and I should think it ought, for it renders them horribly ugly. The young misses are usually very good looking, and some of them beautiful, but none of them can compare with our young girls at home. They are accepting the modren improvements with wonderful celerity, and are making strides on the road of civilization, and rapidly distancing their neighbors over on this side.

SYMPTONS OF CATARRH.

Obstruction of nasal passages, discharge falling into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, acid, or thick and tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid, offensive, etc. In others a dryness, weak or inflamed eyes, ringing in the ears, deafness, ulcerations, scabs, from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, impaired smell and taste, etc. Few only of above symptoms likely to be present in any case at one time.

To cure—take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery earnestly, to correct the blood and system, which are always at fault also to act specifically, as it does, upon the diseased glands and lining membrane of the nose and its communicating chambers. The more I see of this odious disease, the more positive in my belief that if we would make treatment perfectly successful in curing it, we must use constitutional treatment to act through the blood as well as a soothing and healing local application. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, when used warm and applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, effects cures upon "common sense" rational and scientific principles, by its mild, soothing and healing properties, to which the disease gradually yields, when the system has been put in perfect order by the use of the Golden Medical Discovery. This is the only perfectly safe, scientific and successful mode of acting upon and healing it.

So successful has the above course of treatment proven that the proprietor offers $500 reward for a case he cannot cure. All the mrans sold by Druggists. R. V. Pierce M. D., Proprietor, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to immolate republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from its supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discount from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month or $5.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

POETRY.

HOREB.

BY WESLEY.

My searching eye would backward gaze
On time's unceasing tide,
Where Jethroe's flocks securely graze
On Horeb's verdant side.

A rustic shepherd sandal shod,
A burning bush descries;
Upon his features is portrayed
Both wonder and surprise.

Wonder, because the lurid flame
The bush does not consume;
Surprise, because his fiat came
To one so lowly born.

"Put off thy shoes, thou child of earth,
For this is holy ground;
The great I AM would send thee forth,
To free his people bound.

Go thou to Pharaoh's golden courts,
My stern command convey;
Nor heed the mighty obstacles
Which gather in thy way.

Before that haughty monarch stand,
My boundless power show,
Tell him to ope his iron hand
And let my people go.''

And as he from that holy spot
With firm decision turns;
A zeal by mortals never taught,
Within his bosom burns.

Full soon he dares the foaming tide
Of Pharaoh's bitter scorn;
With God and justice by his side,
He grasps the hope forlorn.

Thus through the fragile mortal fall
A prey to bleak despair;
When summoned by Jehovah's call,
Man's utmost wrath he'll dare.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

PRAYER.

"Men ought always to pray, and not to faint, (Jesus) "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. (St. Paul) Luke 18:1, and 1. Tim. 11: 8.

That prayer is a Christian characteristic is known to all men, and that it should be constantly engaged in by them is clearly set forth in the above injunctions. Prayer has ever been the most prominent feature in the lives of God's people in all ages of the world. Jacob wrestled with God and would not let Him go except He bless him. The Jews prayed and the Prophets prayed, The Savior prayed and the apostles prayed. And before Jesus and the apostles left the world, they commanded men always to pray and not to faint in the doing of it. But how are we to understand, always to pray?

To arrive at a correct conclusion, we will consider, first, What is prayer? and second, How it is always to be done.

What is prayer? Webster says, "In worship, a solemn address to the supreme being, consisting of adoration, or an expression of our sense of God's glorious perfection, confession of ours ins, supplication for mercy and forgiveness, intercession for blessings on others, and thanksgiving, or an expression of gratitude to God for his mercies and benefits." The Scripture definition is "supplication, intercession and giving thanks." With these definitions the reader will understand what is prayer.

How is it always to be done? Prayer may be either vocal or mental. Vocal prayer is that in which the voice is heard to speak audibly, while mental prayer is the exercise of the mind in thought only, the lips may, or they may not be seen to move.

The mind in thought only expresses the desire of the soul, and because of our natural infirmities the soul may even feel more than the mind can think or the voice express. In such cases the spirit itself helps our infirmities, making intercessions for us with groaning which cannot be uttered. So in one or the other forms of prayer as stated, above can men always and everywhere pray. It is a demonstrable fact, that all the duties enjoined upon man by the word of the Lord in his business relations in life can, and are performed without the mind and thoughts being necessarily present in the performance of the work. The mind and thoughts then may as well be with the Lord, contemplating His goodness and mercy, while the body is performing its labor and work, as to be roaming all over the world, planning and scheming, and building castles in the air. And so men can always and everywhere pray.

I am not ignorant, however, that some men argue that the merchant, the banker, the broker, &c., &c., who have their millions to count daily, and their accounts to balance, &c., must have their minds concentrated constantly and incessantly on their business all day long, and when even the hours of night relieve them of actual labors, their brain's so reel that they must have recreation and sleep, and so have no time for mental prayer at all. All this I believe, and even know to be true; but I have never read in the Bible that God's people were ever so engaged, but I have read of them dwelling in tents, and were strangers and pilgrims in the earth; having food and raiment, therewith to be content. So man's self-made, over much business does not annul the law of God, nor relieve him of the duty that he ought always and everywhere to pray and not to faint.

The necessity of daily and continued prayer is apparent to all reflecting minds. Man has two lives to live, the life of the body, and the life of the soul; or, in other words, a physical and a spiritual life. Jesus says, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." The body is of the earth, and will return to the earth again, hence its support is, and must be from the earth; its food in the Scriptures is called bread, which implies all animal and vegetable diet, and this diet must daily be partaken of or the body will become weak and faint. Even so must the soul have its daily nourishment drawn from every word that cometh from the mouth of God. And prayer being the sheet anchor of it, must always be engaged in for the life of the Many men live an active life in the body, but the soul within them is starved to death, they never prayed or did aught for its life.

As stated above, men can always and everywhere pray mentally; wherever we are, whether sitting, standing, walking, kneeling or lying; the the mind and thought may ever be with God, contemplating His goodness in all the eye sees or the hands handle. But man must als pray vocally. The head of every family, whether man or woman should have stated times for family and vocal prayer. The Prophet Daniel prayed in his house three times a day, and David prayed at morning, noon and even; and says at midnight will I rise and pray. The apostles had stated times and places for prayer, and so ought the brethren still to have. No one should approach the table to eat his food, without all at the table should hear his prayer and thanksgiving in an audible and distinct voice. At the table, sitting seems to be the proper attitude to assume. In the family and public assembly, kneeling is the proper posture. This is the posture the people of God always assumed when in vocal prayer. In these prayers we should kneel on both knees and the hands should be lifted up.

The objections some make who excuse themselves of daily family prayer that it must necessarily be a repetition of the same things prayed for the day before, and so, become stale, &c., amounts to nothing at all. The bread and meat cut from the loaf and piece supported your natural life yesterday, and a piece cut from the same will support it with equal relish today. Even so, the same word that fed the soul yesterday will feed it to-day if circumstances remain the same. But as new mercies are given to us daily to be thankful for; and new blessings to be prayed for, our daily prayer will always have some new feature in it.

We have a striking illustration of the need of daily prayer in the Lord giving Israel manna to eat. It was a small thing, as small as the hoar frost, like coriander seed. Israel must gather it every morning, Sabbath excepted, and if they gathered for more than two days use it bred worms and stank. To gather so small a thing required patience with persevering diligence. God could as well have given it in large masses like apples or ears of corn, and allowed them to gather it by cart-loads and and store away for future use. But that was not the Lord's way. So now he does not give grace by flow and rivers, but like grains of mustard seed; enough for the present time only, hence we must always gather by daily prayer.

"O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Man being a finite being, small things are in best accord with his limited capacity. Had God given man great things to do, his limited capacity, could not have comprehended it, but always praying and gathering grace and faith like grains of mustard seed, though it be so small, yet the vessel being equally small will be kept constantly full; and when the end of our labor comes, and all will be made complete in nobler scenes above, there will be a larger amount gathered.

To illustrate: About the time that I was born there was taken into the family of a pious brother, a small destitute boy to be raised and cared for. The brother, to have the little boy do errands suited to his ability, one day placed a large basket by an apple tree under which were lying apples enough to fill the basket several times. But the basket was too large for the mind of the boy to comprehend how he could ever get it full. He stood crying and refused to pick up a single apple. The brother instead of resorting to coersive means, as men generally in such cases would do, provided the boy with a very small basket and said, "I want you to pick this little basket full of apples, and when it is full empty it into the large basket, and count how often you can pick it full. The boy comprehended how soon he could fill the small basket with large apples, and went to work and soon had the large basket filled. He grew to manhood, became a brother, a preacher, an elder, and has gone to rest, no doubt, gathered daily and always. So brethren, let us gather by always and everywhere praying.

But in our vocal prayer, whether in the family, in the chamber of the sick, or in the public assembly, be short. Always have an object in prayer, surrounding circumstances suggest the object; then pray to the point and be short. When the sick desire your prayers, try and ascertain from them what they desire to be prayed for, suit your prayer accordingly and be short. Even so in your family, and at your table the object for prayer is ever before you; address your words to the point and be short. In the public assembly don't pray all over all creation twice and then tell God that he wants not many words, he knows that full well, be short. But in closet prayer tarry as long as you wish. Jesus spent a whole night alone on the mountain, in prayer, and He will not be angry with you if you do likewise, here pray as long as you wish, pray for all men, and don't forget me, your unworthy brother in Christ. D. P. SAYLER

MIRACULOUS SIGNS.

"And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and and they shall recover." Mark 16: 17, 18.

The difficulty of not being able at all times to give a satisfactory answer to gainsayers, upon the above text is the result of some cause. This cause is simply that we do not duly consider the design in the gift of miracles to those particular persons who possessed it, and at the particular periods of time at which they possessed them. The cessation of practical miracles is not owing, as many argue, to a want of the proper degree of faith and righteousness; but it is owing to the fact that the design of the power of performing miracles is accomplished, and that as long since, as it is that they have ceased to be performed.

Without the power to perform miracles, Moses would never have brought the Hebrew nation out of Egypt, unless God had made use of some other means, but of all He made choice of miracles, and by means of these he became the leader of God's people, and their deliverer from the bondage of their oppressors, and the Mediator of His covenant. What else than to authenticate the messages and law, did He appear unto Moses and the children of Israel in that terrible manner that is described in the following passages? "And they saw the God of Israel: and there was under His feet as it were a paved work as of a sapphire-stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness." * * * * "And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel." Exodus 21: 10, 17.

"Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou has't heard, and live?" Deut 4: 33. But now we will see what was God's design in thus miraculously showing Himself to Moses and all Israel "Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightiest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him. Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee;"—: 35, 36. hence we find the design of the power vested in Moses. And through Moses was delivered that law of which the apostle said to the Galations "was our (the Jesw) schoolmaster to bring us to Christ," which law received its authenticity through and by the means of miracles performed by Moses and other of the holy prophets. And so in process of time Christ the Messiah, the predictions of whom were also thus established, came; and by again resuming this power or by manifesting the same, also authenticated, His authority and secured the credit of some, and thus only, for even His peculiar wisdom and aptitude to confound the gainsayer and to silence the temptings was a miracle; seeing such power being clothed in humanity.

An undeniable evidence of the special design of miracles is, Christ's answer to John's disciples, who were sent to Him to bring whatever evidence He could produce, as to whether He were "he that was to come, or do we look for another? "Jesus answered and said unto them; Go and show John again those things which ye hear and see; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised." Matt. 17; 2, 5.

Nicodemus gave evidence, also, that by these means the Jews were convinced of His mission being from God. "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles which thou doest, except God be with Him." John 3: 2.

And now the known world being divided, as it was at that time, into two grand parties, to wit, Jews and Gentiles, it became the part of our blessed Lord, and Savior, to authenticate His mission among those to whom He was sent, namely, "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." But having now received "all power in heaven and on earth," it became His volition and his will to appoint vessels" "embassadors" unto the Gentiles, the "other" part of the earth's inhabitants, which also He had "bought with a price," and of necessity, supernatural means must be employed that exceeded the craftiness of this highly sciened, family of nations. This was accomplished by the preaching of the apostle, "with signs following. Thus the mighty work, the plan of salvation, promised immediately after the fall; and perpetuated through all the patriarchal ages, is completed and fully authenticated, by mighty works, and miracles and signs following."

All this predicted and promised in the text came to pass. Paul not feeling any harm from the "viper out of the heat, and fastening on his hand," would have been thought a chance, had not the miracle been proven by the beast, coming "out of the heat" of the fire which Paul had just then supplied with "a bundle of sticks," he had "gathered," whereupon however even the barbarians" of Melita were induced to "change their minds, and said that he was a God." Finally if the rich man was not permitted to return and warn his brethren of his lost condition, simply because "they have Moses and the prophets" who proved the authenticity of their preaching by miracles; why should we dare to tempt God, seeing we have have Christ and the apostles who substantiated the authority of their teachings by the same evidence from God. And if we believe not them, neither would we believe, though one were raised from the dead.

Perhaps it would be interresting to some who may read this, to learn some of the facts concerning those who profess the power of miracles now. I have now lived in the midst of them for seven years, but I have not heard of a single wonder they have performed. They claim this to be owing to the want of faith on the part of those who could otherwise be healed. Now it appears self-evident, that their power to heal, must be curtailed at least, or the profession false entirely, because if it were a perpetuation of the divine power to work miracles why not be performed for the same purpose? to wit, to induce faith—to constrain, to compel them to believe—if they confess not faith, "for a witness against them."

Who was required to believe in order that Jesus might introduce to the world his divine character, by working first miracle at Cana of Gallilee? Who was to have faith so that he should touch the bier at Naia, and call forth from it, to life again the, widow's only son? Who was told to believe in order that Peter might be enabled to cure the lame man who lay for alms at the beautiful gate of temple? Or who manifested first an evidence of faith enabling Paul to restore the life of Eutychus of Troas? And once more; when Jesus proposed to restore unto Jarius his daughter to life, they laughed Him to scorn and yet He proceeded in His usual manner and raised her from the dead. But say our modren prophets (?) and apostles (?); on other occasions He told them only to believe and they should be healed. This He required of Jarius, but instead of believing he laughed Him to scorn; but nevertheless He raised her from the dead; demonstrative of His mission of grace unmerited by those who should profit by it; and yet the demand to "believe" foreshadows the conditional character of His kingdom, He would soon establish.

The gospel, however is to-day that same "power of God unto salvation to them that believe," that it was when Paul was to preach it at Rome and if it saves the soul "to the uttermost" it is truly a most glorious and desirable antitype, of that type, the healing of the sick, physically.

C. C. ROOT.

ANXIETY FOR THE CHURCH.

That every faithful minister is concerned for the welfare of every individual member under his care, is a fact not to be denied; hence, he watches unceasingly the movements the enemy makes to lead astray the the unwary, for he is so cunning as to always make his attack on such as are weak and dilatory, and prayerless, even if he has to make use of his agency to gain his point. O, how jealous! How careful, and how deeply concerned must the watchman be to save his erring ones, who are already on the brink of ruin! Many sleepless nights wrestling with God in prayer, his mind burdened, and his soul travailing in pain for the welfare of Zion may have reduced his strength, but in the firm reliance of his God, through faith in His power, he is still persevering; his language is like that of Paul, "For God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more and more in knowledge and in all judgment." O, that such a prayer may be made effectual in every member of the body of Christ; much grievances may be avoided, and many unpleasant labors shortened. Any one, however strong he may be, by sudden temptation, in the impulse of the moment, may be overtaken to commit a trespass; but if love abounds in knowledge and in all judgment he will come—not be dragged before the church, and make a long harangue, in order to justify his evil deeds, but beg of the members forgiveness, and confess, in the language of David, "I am he that sinned, I am the man that has done this evil deed in the sight of God;" then the members can with joy forgive and love such a restored one, better than before.

Let us approve things that are excellent, that we may be sincere and without offense until the day of Christ; being filled with fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ onto the praise and glory of God. Carelessness and indifference is certainly manifested in such who do neglect the member meetings, where difficulties are to be settled, of weighty matter, especially in officers of the Church; unless there is a lawful excuse. Our church government is a democratic one, and every voice is needed when eternal life is at stake. Solomon says, "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety. Hence let us pray for more of God's spirit in order to labor more effectually for the welfare of the Church. God has ever made his arrangements to transact the government of his church through the instrumentality of mortal man. He himself gives the law, and by the ministration of his subjects who have subscribed to that law, or in other words, that promised obedience must carry out the design of God, in strict accordance to that law, impartially, or become responsible to God for every evil resulting therefrom. Hence it requires all the wisdom of the Church fraternity. Prayer is also indispensable in weighty and important matters. God promises this wisdom that cometh from above upon the faithful, effectual, fervent prayer. Brethren and sisters, let us have more of that kind of prayer, cold and formal prayers are useless, vain and unanswered of God. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit and watching thereunto with all perseverence and supplication for all saints," is the exhortation of Paul, the great apostle of the Gentiles. Does it not awaken in us our most dreamy sense, our inactivity and our slothfulness in assisting the government of God's chosen people when grievious wolves enter in among us not sparing the flock? Do we not see among ourselves, men arise and speak perverse things? Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made you overseer to feed the Church of God. There is an element arising in the Church, in order to compromise our non-conformity to the world—not only as regards raiment, but almost every thing popular with the ungodly world. In like manner is also a compromise advocated in some cases of our non-resistant principles held so precious by the primitive saints by which their blood-sealed faith caused the church of Christ to prosper and be multiplied by thousands in the first century of Christianity. O, be cautious, stand firm on the platform of the gospel, and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Do not swerve one iota from the troth by a compromise in any way whatever. Hold forth sound doctrine, practice the same, boldly, fearlessly, without partiality and without hypocrisy, and the God of love and peace will bless you, and cause his Church to prosper by adding numbers to His kingdom. May God bless and sanctify all the Israel of God and administer to us all abundantly, an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is the prayer of you-noworthy fellow laborer of the gospel. Amen. LEONARD. FURRY.

TH E CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

In these degenerate days, when bribery and corruption, seduction and drunkenness, theft and murder, all yoke-devils together, stalk boldly abroad, and lift up their onblushing fronts at noonday—when many of the appointed watchman on Zion's towers slumber at their posts, and the mass of professing Christians conceal from the world the badge of their servitude to Christ, it is no wonder that the faithful few have become alarmed, and, in every direction are deploring the low state of religion, and the inactivity of the Church.

A Methodist correspondent of a New York paper, referring to the fact that the city pastors of that denomination are much puzzled to know why the life and power that once made the members of that church a terror to evil-doers, has departed, and why all their revival efforts end so nearly a failure, asks the following question: "Where is the boundry line between the Church and the world?" He then goes on to remark:

This was the first and great question settled by the founder of Methodism. He took God's compass and chain, and was very careful to remove everything that would attract the needle, ran the lines by the aid of the Holy Spirit, and ran them right. And when he and his faithful associates had established the corners and lines, they founded the church, and the gates of hell did not prevail against it. There was a marked separation. All could see it. On farm, on the street, in the store, in the field, or on the sea, a Methodist was known as much as a Quaker. But leaving the farm, street, store and field now, and going into the church during the hours of service, who can pick out the Methodist?

"I had business in Canada a few years ago, and when I reached the line that divided the two nations I found there a grocery store that made both governments much trouble. It was built exactly on the line. The goods on one side were in the United States, and on the other in Canada; hence the trouble. Had the owner put that store twenty feet north or south from where it stood it would have been no difficulty, but he preferred this mixing up because he could make money by it.

"I can put my finger on my nose and on my cheek, but to touch the spot where the nose leaves off and the cheek begins, requires one more skilled in anatomy than I am. I take a God-fearing man by the hand, and I hold one that Wesley would enclose and welcome into Church. I reach across the aisle and grasp a theatre-going, stock gambling, pleasure-loving man, and I hold two as far apart in spiritual life and influence as heaven is from hell, both members of the same church. Where does the church leave off and the world begin? What concord hath Christ with Belial? "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. vi.

I was once called to the bedside of a dying young man, whom I found in great distress of mind. He had once been a light and pillar in the M. E. Church. He was prepared to die. Why was this? Why? It was because our church had been moved on to, or over the line. He attended a donation party at the church, paid twenty-five times its value for a piece of cake, and drew a gold ring. This created an appetite for gambling, which he continued until he had spent five hundred dollars, all his hard earnings, and now lay upon his death bed in the greatest agony of soul, a subject of charity.

"Attending a church show, where money was wanted for a new carpets we saw over a round glass, 'View, of Flats on the Rhine,' ten cents Thinking it cheap, we paid the money and looked in, and saw several flat-irons on the rind of a large cheese. Can Barnum beat that? Question—where does the church leave off and the world begin? Draw the line, and conviction will be deep enough. Sinners will know when they are converted, and can tell the congregation for themselves without troubling the preacher to do it for them.

"Should Christ appear among us with the scourge of small cords, and visit our temples, we fear there would be a terrible scrambling among the money-changers to get out of the way."—The Christian.

"SPEAK EVIL OF NO MAN."

The above request, made by one of the apostles, when addressing a congregation of believers, is full of meaning when we think of the accountability arising from speech and also of thought, knowing that God who made heaven and earth and all things, knows every thought before it ripens into action. Reader, how many thoughts pass through the mind that you wish no one to know, yet they are known to God, and the numerous words that escape thy lips in the presence of some are confidentially, and in a soloquizing manner that God will require you to answer for? Pause and think! Think calmly and fearingly lest they be the means of closing the New Jerusalem against you. Rather let pure and holy thoughts pervade thy mind, and words of peace, adoration and thanksgiving escape from thy lips. Think of an individual, who, while in the company of another, talks as though all is on the best of terms till after a separation,—then what a contrast! What a different color is thrown on the character of the absentee, and often both are professors of religion, and frequently both members of the same congregation. What says the Spirit, the Word of God? "If you have aught against your brother tell him his fault between him and thee alone,"&c. Remember this is a command, the violation of which we will have to answer for. What a heavenly life men and women could live here on earth if they would obey the injunction of God's word, knowing that if we deceive men we cannot God, and such words and actions are closing heaven against us. How can we consistently pray for kings and rulers and then arise and curse them, and speak in many ways evil of them, and ask God to "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors?" When we do not carry out our own request, it becomes a vain petition, for if we do not forgive, God will not. Then we know that our debt is increasing and will eventually consume us, for by our words we are either justified or condemned.

Dear reader, may you and I so order our speech or words that we may not be ashamed of being heard when we speak, having them seasoned with heavenly salt, so that they will be a means of winning souls to Christ,—drawing men and women from degredation rather than sinking them; sowing the seeds of peace rather than strife; a healing virtue, not wounding, upbuilding, not tearing down; a forgiving spirit, not condemning; in short, of a godly conversatin that will lead to the right to the Tree of Life; an entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven where all is peace and love, in the presence of God and all the redeemed and holy angels. There let our conversation be, and the world will know where our treasure is. WM. SADLER.

HOW TO LIVE CHEAPLY.

How to live cheaply is a question easy enough to answer if one will be content with a cheap living. Substitute comfort for show. Put convenience in the place of fashion. Study simplicity. Refuse to beguiled into a style of living above what is required by your position in society, and is justified by your resources. Set a fashion of simplicity, neatness, prudence and inexpensiveness, which others will be glad to follow, and thank you for introducing. Teach yourself to be without a thousand and one pretty and showy things which wealthy people purchase, and pride yourself on being just as happy without them as your rich neighbors are with them. Put so much dignity, sincerity, kindness, virtue and love into your simple and inexpensive home that its members will never miss the costly fripperies and showy adornments of fashion, and be happier in the cozy and comfortable apartments than most of their wealthy neighbors are in their splendid establishments.

It does not follow that, in order to live cheaply one must live meanly. The great staples of life are not costly. Taste, refinement, good cheer, wit and even elegence are inexpensive. There is no trouble about young people marrying with no outfit but health, and love, and an honest purpose, provided they will practice the thrift and prudence to which their grandparents owed all their succes, and make their thought and love supply what they lack the means of display. Those who begin life at the top of the ladder generally tumble off, while those who begin at the foot acquire steadiness, courage, and strength of arm and will as they rise.—Ex.

ENJOY THE PRESENT.

It conduces much to our content if we pass by those things which happen to trouble, and consider what is pleasing and prosperous, that by the representations of the better, the worse may be blotted out. If I be overthrown in my suit at law, yet my house is left me still and my land, or I have a virtuous wife, or hopeful children or kind friends, or hopes. If I have lost one child, it may be I have two or three still left me. Enjoy the present, whatever it may be, and be not solicitous for the future; for if you take your foot from the present standing, and thrust it forward to to-morrow's event, you are in a restless condition; it is like the refusing to quench your present thirst by fearing you will want to drink the next day. If to-morrow you should want, your sorrow would come time enough, though you do not hasten it; let your trouble tarry till its own day comes. Enjoy the blessings of this day, if God sends them, and the evils of it bear patiently and sweetly, for this day is ours. We are dead to yesterday, and not yet born to to-morrow.—Jeremy Taylor.

WAR'S WASTE.

Give me the money that has been spent in war, and I will purchase every foot of land upon the globe. I will clothe every man, woman and child in an attire of which kings and queens might be proud. I will build a school-house on every hillside and in every valley over the earth; I will build an academy in every town, and I will endow it; a college in every State, and fill it with able professors; I will crown every hill with a place of worship, consecrated to the promulgation of the gospel of peace: I will support in every pulpit an able teacher of righteousness, so that on every Sabbath morning the chime on one hill should answer to the chime on another around the earth's wide circumference; and the voice of prayer and the song of praise should ascend like a universal holocaust to Heaven.—Rufus Stephens.

THE SEA CAPTAIN'S CALL.—In the year 1775 the captain of a Greenland whaling-vessel found himself at at night surrounded by icebergs, and "lay to" until morning, expecting every moment to be ground to pieces. In the morning he looked about, and saw a ship near by. He hailed it. No answer. Getting into a boat with some of the crew, he pushed out for the mysterious craft. Getting near by, he saw, through the port-hole, a man at a stand, as though keeping a log book. He hailed him. No answer. He went on board the vessel and found the man sitting at the log book, frozen to death. The log book was dated 1762, showing that the vessel had been wandering for thirteen years among the ice. The sailors were found frozen among the hummocks, and others in the cabin. For thirteen years this ship had been carrying its burden of corpses.

So from this Gospel-craft I descry voyagers for eternity. I cry, "Ship ahoy! Ship ahoy!" No answer. They float about, tossed and ground by the icebergs of sin, hoisting no sail for heaven. I go on board. I find all asleep. It is a frozen sleep. O, that my Lord Jesus would come aboard, and lay hold of the wheel, and steer the craft into the warm Gulf Stream of his mercy! Awake, thou that sleepest! Arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life. —Rev. T. De Witt Talmage.

"He will subdue our iniquities.' He will do it; He is engaged by promise, by office; it is his glory to save His people from the dominion of their sins. On Him, therefore, they depend for continual victory, and according to their faith so it is done unto them.

If you have an enemy, act kindly towards him and make him your friend. You may not win him over at once, but try again. Let one kindness be followed by another, until you have accomplished your object

Often the ark of Life waits till a dove's wings of light bring some leaf of assurance from the world of our longing.

It is of no advantage to have a lively mind if we are not just. The perfection of the pendulum is not to go fast, but to be regular.

In the assurance of strength is there strength; and they are weakest, however strong, who have no faith in themselves or their powers.

If the best man's faults were written on his forehead, it would make him pull his hat over his eyes.

BENEVOLENCE.

There are some persons, who apparently, never do anything unless they expect to derive some personal benefit from it, and this selfish and indifferent spirit, to the wants and comforts of others, is what causes a great deal of unhappiness in the world. We fail to meet the design of God concerning us in this respect for He intends that we shall help one another, and if we love Him and stand in the relation to him that we should, we will feel, morally, bound to assist our fellow men at all times, whether it will tend to our own personal interests or not. This idea is frequently taught by Christ. "He says, "From him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." And again, "If ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thanks have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." This seems to be the central idea of all acts of benevolence as shown by the world; they expect to receive either some pecuniary benefit or self aggrandizement. This however is not the motive of the Christian; he acts from a sense of the relation which he sustains to his fellow man, and when he lends or assists him in any way, he does it not hoping to receive again.

The true idea of benevolence is beautifully illustrated by an incident which is familiar to every school boy. An aged gentleman was busily engaged in planting fruit trees, and a young man passing by thus accosted him: Why do you plant trees? you are old and cannot expect to enjoy the fruit. The old man replied, "It is true, I am old and cannot expect to enjoy the fruits of my labor, but some one has planted trees before my time and I have enjoyed the fruits. Should I not now endeavor to return the compliment? Should I not labor for the benefit of those who succeed me?"

The young man represents the sinners that the Savior speaks of who lend or assist their fellow men expecting to receive the same again, while the old man represents the Christian who loves his fellow man and is willing to assist him, although he may not derive any benefit, or receive anything in return for it in this life.

Reader, which of these do you represent? Do you love your fellow man? Are you desirous of promoting his happiness? Do you assist him merely that you may receive the same in return? If you do you are not truly benevolent, and with this selfish indifferent spirit are not fitted to enjoy this life nor the life to come. It is truly said that "happiness in this life consists in making others happy." When do we realize more true and real enjoyment, than when we are conscious of having made some one happy? It is then that we experience something of a higher order than the gratificatton of self can afford us. Then truly,

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

THE SCHOOL MEETING.

We have just returned from the Educational Convention and as there is still a little room open yet, we will occupy it by giving our readers a brief description of the meeting, in addition to the report given in another column. On Saturday morning we took the train for Cove Station, where we found several conveyances from Clover Creek congregation, expecting a number of eastern representatives, and seemed to be disappointed that there was but one; but still they had the pleasure of getting loads, as the western delegation was somewhat larger, consisting of brother H. R. Holsinger, and family, E. J. Myers, and Franklin Forney as delegates from Berlin congregation. According to arrangment we were all unloaded at Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh's where we were well cared for. In the afternoon, in harmony with the design of the meeting, we went to Martinsburg to examine the School buildings where we were met by Prof. L. Cort, the present proprietor, who very courteously escorted us through all the different apartments and gave us all necessary information. The buildings are pleasantly located, tolerably well planned, and perhaps, cost fully as much as represented.

Our very charitable brother James Camerer, who resides just back of the building, in the meantime prepared supper for the delegation then present, where we afterwards repaired and partook of his liberality with thankful hearts.

In the evening there was an appointment for preaching in their new church in town, where we were called upon to lead in the services, followed very appraprintely by James A. Sell. Eld. Jacob Steel, H. R. Holsinger, Henry Clapper, Brice Sell, and a part of the resident ministers were also present.

Sunday, a. m., was the regular appointment at the Clover Creek church where the funeral service of brother J. D. Brumbaugh's child was attended to; James A. Sell led in the preaching. In the evening there was another appointment at Martinsburg church, conducted by Grabill Myers, and Brice Sell. There was also an appointment at Clover Creek, but not being there, do not know who preached.

On Monday morning at the hour appointed, we met in the church at Martinsburg for deliberation, the result of which you have in our report. The representation was much smaller than was expected and the cause would seem to demand, but what was there meant business, and we do not suppose that there was ever a a body met, having different local interests at stake, that deliberated more harmoniously. The advantages of the different localities were fairly discussed, and we think we done the very best that could have been done under the existing circumstances and and all that is now needed to make the move a success is, for all those who are in favor of having their children educated under proper moral and religious influence, to put their shoulder to the wheel and help it along,

PREPARATION—SPOILED SERMONS.

We have often wondered how preachers could talk all day and then expect to preach at night. It must surely require more than an ordinary mind to discourse intelligibly on any subject without some forethought, and indeed it is certainly not a very commendable course for a minister to pursue. There is too much importance connected with preaching to enter into it so thoughtlessly, and the minister who truly feels the responsibility of his position and the weight of precious souls hanging upon him, will certainly feel that it his duty to spend all the time he can command in the careful and prayerful study of his subject. O a thought struck upon the mind! Who can tell what it may bring forth? A good thought or impression may redeem a whole life from sin and misery, while a wrong one may work a corresponding amount of ruin. How important then that the minister should use his greatest endeavors to impress correct Gospel truths upon the minds of his hearers. If a man should ever tremble it is when he essays to impress convictions on the mind, for he will touch chords strung by the infinite organist of creation which will vibrate when time with us shall be no longer. If then the minister by negligence and indifference to his high calling, should make impressions (and you are held responsible for what you do) that would tend toward the ruin of some poor soul, what a dark account that would be! It is thought by some that it is not necessary for ministers to study their subjects; that they should look to God to impart unto them what they should say, but this is certainly a mistaken idea. No one could expect to give his neighbor bread if he had none himself, neither could he expect to have any to give unless he labors for it. So it is with the minister who is to impart the heavenly manna; he cannot give unless he has some himself, and he cannot reasonably expect to have it, unless he labors for it. "God helps those who help themselves." He must do his part first, and then only can he expect divine assistance.

But the minister is not always to blame. When he would make the necessary preparation he is often annoyed by the laity who should give encouragement to study and preparation rather than be a hindrance. In reference to this an exchange makes the following reasonable remarks;

"Ministers of the Gospel must have time for thought and reflection, or run dry. He who talks with others all day long, when he is to preach at night, is very sure to have a hard time preaching. Some of our good friends do not think of this, and will keep the preacher talking constantly at the expense of the interest of the meeting. When a Minister has preached the best he knows how, and emptied his "pitcher," he must have time for quiet prayer, study and reflection, when he preaches extempore.

I was once forcibly reminded of this necessity. I preached on a Sunday morning, and in the afternoon felt the need of quiet, so that I could have time for reflection and prepare myself for the evening. But there were two good sisters where I stopped that kept up such a continuous talking (and I was obliged to remain in the same room with them), that they talked me dry and empty; and when I tried to preach in the evening, tho' I had a full house, I felt my emptiness, and so did all present.

Preachers must have a chance for quiet prayerful reflection. Do not accuse them of lacking sociability if they are not inclined to talk all the time. There are extremes to be sure. At times fireside preaching accomplishes the most good; but a minister cannot talk constantly about this, that, and the other, or listen to gossip about A. B. or C. without his leanness and unfitness for his holy position standing in "Christ's stead before the people. Let ministers have a chance and a place for quiet."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE EDUCATIONAL MEETING HELD AT MARTINSBURG, PA., MARCH 16, 1874.

The meeting was held at the Brethren's meeting house in the town at Martinsburg. After opening in the usual order, by singing and prayer brother H. R. Holsinger was chosen Chairman, and J. A. Sell, clerk.

The object of this meeting was then stated by the chairman, to be

1st. To ascertain the sentiment of the friends of education present, upon the importance or necessity of having a school of a higher grade, under the control of our own membership. And if so, then.

2nd. The question would arise, when shall we prosecute the project of organizing and establishing the institution. The importance of having such a school under our control was then discussed by the chairman, H. B. Brumbaugh, Grabill Myers, Geo. Brumbaugh and it was unanimously agreed that such a school is needed.

It was also resolved that the wants of the Brotherhood demand such action as will most speedily put into operation such a school as will furnish the accommodation sought after by our youth.

A letter was read from brother S. Z. Sharp, and also his amendment to the plan proposed by brother H. R. Holsinger.

Plans were then called for by which to raise the funds for the endowment of the school. H. B. Brumbaugh requested and obtained an explanation of the plan proposed by the chairman. The plan proposed by brother Sharp viz: that one hundred brethren raise one thousand dollars each, was discussed.

Suitable locations were then nominated, as follows:

H. B. Brumbaugh named Huntingdon Pa.

George Brumbaugh named New Pleasant Grove, Huntingdon Co., Pa.

Franklin Forney named Berlin Pa.

H. R. Holsinger named Wooster Ohio.

John H. Stiffler named Martinsburg Pa.

The nomination then closed and the meeting adjourned for one hour.

In the afternoon the meeting proceeded to discuss the question whether it would be advisable to purchase the buildings at Martinsburg. It was agreed that Martinsburg was a suitable and convenient location for such a school, but that it is not advisable to purchase the proposed property as more convenient buildings could be constructed for about the same money.

The chairman gave the sentiments of other brethren, with whom he had correspondence relative to the location of the school, all agreeing that the success of the enterprise greatly depends upon its location.

The merits of Martinsburg as a location, was then discussed in which it was agreed that it was suitable in point of healthfulness, easy of access, Church influence, religiously, but not so good pecuniarly. Only a few thousand dollars of stock could be secured at the meeting.

Huntingdon was next discussed, and was shown to possess superior advantages in the way of railroad facilities water works, and gas light, but wanting in church influence and other points.

New Pleasant Grove and Wooster were not pressed.

Berlin, Pa, was then taken up. It was shown to possess advantages of healthfulness; 2. Easy of access, being warranted to have railroad connection before the school could be put into operation. 3. Church influence, in patronage, religious and pecuniary influence, and in sending pupils. The delegates from Berlin also offered to secure $30,000 stock in the school and to donate $1000 in cash to the enterprise, if the school would be erected at Berlin.

It was then unanimously agreed to adopt Berlin as the location for the Brethren's school. The following resolution was adopted unanimously: Resolved that we raise a fund of not less than one hundred thousand dollars, in shares of five hundred dollars each, each share holder to be entitled to one vote. Twenty five per cent of the amount subscribed to be paid in as may be demanded, and the balance to be secured by mortgage for ten years, upon which six per cent interest shall be paid annually with the privilege, however of paying in the entire amount if preferred by the subscriber; the school to be located at Berlin, Somerset Co. Pa.

It was unanimously Resolved that H. R. Holsinger be appointed general solicitor to secure the endowement. It was also resolved that the proceedings of this convention be published in our weekly perodicals. The exercises were then closed by singing and prayer and the meetings adjourned, with the best of feelings and in confidence for the success of the enterprise which it had organized.

H. R. Holsinger, Chairman.
James A. Sell, Clerk.

Dear Pilgrim:—

The reference which you made last week to the first four verses of the 13th chapter, of Romans is not a query. Neither is Bro. Miller's position of it the answer to a query, nor an explanation. The scripture is evident enough to all that have ever read it or heard it read, yet to many, and indeed to almost all there is some hidden mystery couched in it. The propriety of simply asking for an explanation of any portion of scripture is the same as to simply ask for an explanation of M, the 13th letter of the english alphabet. It would indeed be considered silly enough to ask for an explanation of M, without telling what sort of an explanation; because M is a powerful letter occurring very frequently and with varied influence all through an infinite world of literature. The letter M, is an element in the foundation upon which English literature is built. The above named scripture is an element in the foundation upon which the salvation of every soul is built. It is vain to think of saying or writing all that can or ought by any and every body to be said or written about this or any other portion of the word of God.

The same truth applies to the request for a full application to the Christian of the 42nd verse of the 5th chapter of Matt. The person who undertakes this task is like one who sets his foot on a ship and starts out on the Atlantic ocean with a determination to know and give its depth at every point all around the globe, measuring the contents of it exactly. There are however fragmentary meanings lurking in the request which can be fully complied with, but they are not what the inquirer intended it should convey. An essay may be written upon the verse by any person who will try to write his best thoughts about it, and to consciously discourage such an effort should be far from every Christian. It is one of the most beautiful and important subjects that can enter into the mind. A simple skimming over the top of it, stultifying every desire to dive down deep through the letter into the spirit, though it be done a thousand times, and then to expect a benefit is the same as to look into a cook-shop window and suppose that by so doing, you are fed. A full application of the verse to the Christian may be made by any one who will apply the verse fully to himself, or himself fully to the verse, just whichever way you choose to say it. But that application will not be full for every body else. What? does not the word of the Lord teach all men to mind and do the same things? Yes that is the gem. But scripture must be compared with scripture. Christ says "The same that said thou shalt not commit adultry also said thou shalt not kill. Now if thou commit adultry and yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor. Again, when the devil took Him on the pinnacle of the the temple, and said cast thyself down for it is written. He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." Christ said. It is written again. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

The spirit of this example should be strictly followed in every application of the scriptures. For instance if any one should ask you to give or lend him your Bible, and you knew he would trample it under his feet, you should of course not give it to him, and if he were to urge his claim by quoting the passage "Give him that asketh" &c. you should meet it with such scripture as this "give not that which is holy unto dogs" and "cast not your pearls before swine." This is our application. Here is another. If a man comes to you asking you to give or lend to him, and you are convinced by the above and all the other scripture that you know, that you should grant his request, then you should certainly do so. Here is still another. I do not yield an unlimited obedience to this happy fundamental injunction; neither do I claim such an obedience for any of my brethren, morever I deny that any one who is of a sane mind does or would yield such obedience.

J. B. Garver.

Mount Union, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:—

After my usual delay I will comply with my promise to send you the item on baptismal controversy.

Sometime during the early part of last summer, Dr. Teter of Richmond, Va. an eminent Baptist, traveled through several European countries, and sent minute accounts of the most interesting scenes and circumstances to the Religious Hearld, a leading baptist perodical, of which he is the editor.

He visited the Catacombs at Rome, and in one of them he saw a representation of the form of primitive baptism. As correctly as I can remember them I will give the account substantially in his own words.

"In one of the rooms I saw a representation of the primitive mode of baptism engraved on the walls. The position of the parties indicated that it was administered by the forward mode. The arrangement of the picture rendering it impossible to represent any other form." He failed to inform his readers how it was impossible to represent the backward action, if that was the proper form. He is of the opinion that it represented the form of baptism in the infancy of the church, though others date it several centuries subsequent. The Dr. owes it to his brethren and to us to give a more detailed description of that painting, to enable us to see how that impossibility occurs.

Another interesting circumstance connected with his travels, reveals the fact that he met many of his denomination who have preserved the apostolical injunction of the salutation of the kiss. As that commandment is considerably below par among the Baptists in this country, it must have taxed the Dr's. prejudices heavily to pass through service in a christianlike manner. The scene would doubtless have been quite grotesque to an American Tunker to see the skeptical Baptist give the sacred salutation. A few years ago he attended an association of his church in their part of the State, and the Rev. Robert Tunsford pastor of Glade Creek congregation, a zealous land marker, that is one in favor of the ancient form of worship, warmly advocated the importance of the ordinance of feet-washing. The Dr. responded to him in a jocular manner, and avered that on his return to that neighborhood, the Bro. would expect to kiss him. Since his European experience I think he could endure the operation with credit to his exalted position of D. D.

We hope the Rev. tourist will not be too severe hereafter in his animadversions on the usages of his Tunker brethren, who hold in violate these sacred and heaven ordained commandments

OUR PECULIARITIES.

Bro. Pilgrim: As I see the minds of your contributors are somewhat active upon the above subject, I thought I would also cast a mite in that direction. It is doubtless a matter of importance, or the Apostle would not have mentioned it. At present I wish to speak more particularly of our external "peculiarities," not that I regard that as the greater, but as being the necessary outgrowth of the seed cast into the heart of man through the agency of the mind, and as the mind receives and conveys to the heart, so the heart returns the received matter to the mind, and thereby the mind is renewed, and hence the visible change in man or woman, whose mind has been renewed by receiving and exchange of truth through these agencies. Now as this character has been changed by the renewing of the mind, he or she receives a new character or in other words is made "a new creature."

Then as he was carnal before, he is now spiritual. So there is a visible change wrought, which must be fully developed in the character, otherwise he cannot be a light to the world, for the worldly man cannot discern the things of the spirit, hence the necessity of an external mark. I know it is said this light must be seen in our life and daily walk. Very true my brother, but must a man live in the midst of a city till he is acquainted with its rules and the people before he can see it? Which must be the case, if this hypothesis be true. But are we to suppose that the Savior would use a figure that has no semblance at all, which would doubtless be the case, if man is to be known as a disciple merely by the character as developed in his life.

But the stranger can see the natural city as soon and as clearly as the native. So when the members are arrayed in their humble and simple costume, the stranger can see who are members and who are not, just as easy as we can ourselves, hence the beautiful likeness, "cannot be hid."

Again, "I am the vine and ye are the branches." Now as every branch in the vine partakes of the sap or life of the original stem or vine so every branch thus receiving life from the root or first cause, is naturally clothed with the same style of leaf, and the fruit is the same. Does it not show us then that our peculiarities are not wholly internal, but also external.

So my dear young brethren and sisters, let us be very careful how we treat the admonitions and exhortations of our faithful old brethren and sisters, for they watch for our souls, as they that must give account. More anon.

A. HUTCHISON.

A LETTER TO SISTER ELIZABETH FLORY.

OAK HILL, W. VA. MARCH 8, 1874

My Dear Sister, of Buffalo Col.

While sitting perusing the PILGRIM this Sabbath morning and meditating on the goodness of God, I thought of you and your dear family away in a distant land. Knowing that you are a reader and lover of the PILGRIM, I thought I would let you hear from us through its columns. We are all enjoying a reasonable portion of good health, and truly hope, through the mercies of God, if these lines reaches you, they may find you all enjoying the same great blessing. Yes, my dear sister, I often think of you and your dear ones in that far off Territory, but am happy to learn that you are well pleased with your move so far, and that you all are blessed with good health, and happy to learn you have preaching and can worship God under your own vine and fig tree. Oh may the Lord bless your dear companion and our dear Bro. that he may go forth in the discharge of his duty in proclaiming the true gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and that he may be instrumental in turning poor careless sinners from the power of satan unto God the Father.

Dear sister, I suppose you would love to hear something about our little band of brethren and sisters here. I am happy to say that we are all getting along, on the good old way, in love and union, as much so or more than any previous time. The Church met in Church capacity last Saturday, being the last day of February. We had a very pleasant meeting of brethren and sisters together. Bro. Wm. Bailey from Raliegh Va. was with us. All things passed off in love and harmony. Bro. Bailey preached for us on the Sabbath following. His discourse was truly a good one and had a good congregation. We have had no addition since you left, but hope to have better news to tell you before long for I can truly say,

"I long to see the season come,
When sinners shall come flocking home,
To taste the richness of Jesus' love,
And seek the joys that are above."

Dear sister and brother, we miss you at our meetings—when sitting in the house of the Lord and seeing brethren and sisters gathering in, there appears to be vacant seats that cannot be filled by those whom we miss most, but thy will be done O Lord. Many tears have been shed on account of your vacant seats, but I hope our loss is or will be your great gain in this world of sorrow and the world to come. Dear sister Bettie, I can truly sympathize with you being so far separated from all your kindred by the strong ties of nature, but that very same sorrow has often caused tears to trickle down my own cheeks for I am also separated far from my dear relatives.

I will inform you that my dear daughter Hettie and her family, has moved from Mo. to Ark. and I have but a faint hope of ever enjoying the pleasure of seeing them again in this world of sorrow and trouble, but I have the hope, the blissful hope that we all shall meet in Heaven.

While we are parted and scattered abroad, let us pray for each other and trust in the Lord.

I saw your mother not many days ago. She was well as usual, and we talked of you all. Ida is here staying with us. She says she wants to see all those little cousins. I hope to hear from you soon. From your sister,

NANCY CROUSE.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I suppose evidently you are aware that among your many readers, there are some scattered here and there over this broad land of ours, that have not been gathered into the folds of the church of the true and living, God. To them this is addressed. Why is it that we thus idly loiter, and procrastinate the time that the God of our fathers, in his infinite mercy, has given us for to improve in serving Him? Why is it that we neglect so great a salvation? How ardently he pleads for us to come to him in the midnight hour in a still small voice summoning us to our duty; for we know not which day, hour, or moment, we may be called away by death to our judgment. And what will be our doom if we should be called in our sinful state? It makes me shudder to think of the day when all mankind are gathered as if by magic, and to see those that so earnestly plead for us in their prayers for our Salvation, and we sat by and listened as unconcerned as though we had no duty enjoined upon us, go into the mansions of immortal glory with "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the millions of blood washed saints" that have gone before, and we have to stand aloof and hear the awful doom, "Depart from me ye wicked into everlasting shame and contempt." Where is our anchor of hope and consolation? Have we not cast it into the dark abyss of the slough of despondency? How sad to contemplate!

Let us realize for a moment the situation we are placing ourslves in in the great day of reckoning. Have we any promise beyond the grave? I cannot find any within the lids of God's holy book. The fountains of eternal bliss beyond the grave, are closed, if we do not live up to the requirements of the divine teaching. Let us henceforth and forever make our best endeavors to enter in at the strait gate that leads into the narrow way having our eyes directed steadfastly on Jesus the Savior of the sinful and dying world. He died for all, for you and for me. Realize for one moment dear friends, the awful seeds on calvary's bloody brow, the solemnity of the ninth hour when the sun was darkened and the moon refused to give her light, and the vail of the temple was rent in twain, and the rocks were broken. Is it not enough to turn our adamantine hearts into living and refulgent streams of waters, smoothing and curbing our evil passions which ought not to abound within us. Heaven and earth had almost, forsaken him when in the most excruciating agonies he cried in a loud voice, "Father forgive them they know not what they do." What would the inhabitants of this earth anticipate at this coming anniversary if an ordeal similar to the one past, should occur again? What would be the state of affairs? What a weeping and gnashing of teeth, there would be! Solemn indeed would be the condition of affairs. Now dear readers I shall leave all to your candid judgment hoping you may eventually profit by it. Your reward will be reserved for you, if you fight a good fight. D. H. JONES.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

To the brethren, sisters, and friends intending to go to the A. M. in Ill. I will say I have succeeded in making the usual half fare arrangements with Baltimore and Ohio R. R. Co. over its main line from Baltimore to Columbus Ohio, and all its branches. I wish all to understand the conditions, and comply with them. To wit: buy your ticket at the place you take the road to Columbus, at any time you may choose to start, ask the ticket agent no questions, he knows nothing of this arrangement, at the place of the A. M. you will be furnished with a certificate (at a mere nominal price to cover my expenses making the arrangements,) which will return you free of charge from Columbus to the place from where you started.

Now brethren, in making arrangements, the company agent says, "I shall expect you to use your influence so as to bring the bulk of those going to your meeting over our line." I will say, you know that this road has always given the Brethren half fare privileges not in name only, but in reality, and yet the brethren in return gave the road but a very limited patronage, going to the A. M. For instance, last year some brethren came a much longer distance to get around the B. & O, and then had to pay their way back, simply because some protoinent brethren led them that way. And while I am on this subject I will say, if the brethren do so this year I wish them never again to ask me to make half fare arrangements for them.

I propose to the brethren from Philadelphia and the Eastern part of Pa. to come via. Baltimore, from there they are assured to be returned free 509 miles of the whole distance. The brethren farther west to Harrisburg and surrounding country come by the Cumberland Valley R. R. to Hagerstown Md. where you will strike the B. & O. R. R. from there you will be sure of returning free 406 miles. The brethren in the Western counties of Pa. come by the Pittsburg & Connellsville road to Cumberland where you will strike the B. & O. R. R and you will be returned free 331 miles. The brethren from the Valley of Va. come on there Valley road to Harpers Ferry and from there they will have a distance of 431 miles, but the Valley road is controlled by the B. & O. to Winchester Va. and for aught I know farth r South.

As I am requested to use my influence I am thus particular, and I hope the brethren will be influenced. I think the brethren in District Meetings should so instruct those intending to go.

The western brethren will please designate a line from Columbus, and publish that line, not by its initials, but by the full name, also where from, and where to. What do strangers know when I say the W. M. R. R, but if I say the Western Maryland Rail Road, leading from Baltimore to Williamsport on the Potomic river, via Hagerstown, then strangers are not left in ignorance.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE.

We were very suddenly alarmed on the 4th of this month, by seeing clouds of smoke rising from brother David Lytel and sister Susanna Pinkerton's buildings. We ran to their assistance but all was in vain to save the buildings. There were three houses on fire, The fire is supposed to have caught from a chimney in the old house up stairs and got a good start before it was noticed. The old house had been used for a shop and was full of furniture and other valuable articles of which we did not get a piece out We fought manfully to save the brick house, but all was in vain. We were driven back by the flames and heat, and were cut off from getting water. The women and children were then compelled to go to the nearest house, which was very difficult to do on account of sickness. When we saw that we could not save the houses we ran to the barn, which was in great danger. At the time there was a strong current of wind which took the flame and burning cinders towards the barn, our help being scarce we rolled out what we could. We got nearly all the goods out of the first and second stories; we could not save anything out of the upper story. We got but little out of the cellar on account of the smoke and fire.

Brother and sister Lytel bore their loss very patiently, which we were glad to see. Their loss is estimated at $800 or $1000 on goods and articles that burned The farm on which they lived was sold last fall to Mr. Ore who had the buildings insured, but there was no insurance on the contents.

When I saw the smoke of the buildings curling upwards I was made to think of that great city Babylon, that mighty city, which John the revelator speaks of, that the kings of the east wailed and wept over when he saw the smoke of the burning. We rang the bell for one hour which brought many to our assistance, which we put to work in loading goods and moving them to to the farm of David B. Hoff.

Brother Lytel expects to move on the 19th of this month. He purchased a farm last fall and has heavy payments to meet which rests upon his mind. There are many things that he stands in need of at present. We succeeded in getting some of his meat and that is all we got saved in the eating line. His lard, apples, potatoes, apple butter, and dried fruit, are all burned.

Sister Pinkerton lived in the same house with him and has not been stout for some time, but she is in reasonable health at present considering the great excitement she has had through the fire. Now brethren and sisters, here is a chance of doing good, of lending to the Lord, as they stand in need of many things to make home comfortable. Now let us who have and to spare, lend a helping hand. Brother David Lytel is a hard working man, has worked day and part of the night this winter and had his shop filled with work, that was ready to go out, and now it is all burned and his labor is lost. He has met with trouble and sickness, and has been unfortunate in other matters, by losing stock. He however takes all patiently and feels as Job that servant of the Lord that said the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away again.

MAITLAND, PA., March 12, 1874.

H. B. Brumbaugh,

Dear Brother: If you think the following worth publishing please insert it in the PILGRIM.

1st. I wish to say a little about the tent that our Western brethren intend to have to hold the Annual Meeting in this Spring. I for one, do think that the brethren west of the Ohio river might get one, if they think so, and if our brethren east of of the Ohio river are pleased with the tent and wish to get one, they could get one also. By so doing we would save shipping every year from west to east, and from east to west. I think it will be necessary for the brethren at the District Meetings east of the Ohio river to consider this matter this Spring in order to be prepared to know what to do or say at the A. M. respecting the tent.

2. Would it not be right for those arms of our church in the Middle District of Pa., that have not reported to brother George Brumbaugh, whether they will or will not help to raise means for to build a Meeting-house in Altoona, to consult their members, and report at the District Council this Spring?

3. Would it not be right for every arm of our church to consult their members whether they wish the proceedings of the Annual Meeting published in full? Throwing all prejudice aside, I do think (if I know myself aright), the whole transactions of our Annual Conference should be published, so that those at home can see, hear and know, as well as those present at Conference. I do think it would have a tendency to lessen the expense of holding the meeting, and be a great satisfaction to thousands at home. May our good God direct and control us in the right way is my prayer. JACOB MOHLER.

Dear Brethren:—

Not knowing how soon my subscription for the PILGRIM ceases, and fearing I might miss a number, I herewith enclose one dollar and fifty cents for another year.

I oft'times am unable to attend church, to hear the word of God preached by the brethren, and were I to be deprived of the privilege of reading the blessed truths contained in the PILGRIM, I very often would feel lonely and sad, but, when I am depressed in spirit, and read the letters, and the different passages of scripture explained by some of the brethren and sisters, it is as food to my never dying soul.

And I again feel refreshed both in body and spirit, and feel thankful to my heavenly father, that I am yet spared, and able to worship him in my poor, weak way.

Oh! how thankful we should be, that we are allowed the privilege of meeting together to praise God's high and holy name.

May we all strive to work out our own salvation, and stand as shining lights before the world, so that in the world to come, we may meet each other as holy angels, worshiping around the throne of God, in the eternal heavens above, is the humble prayer of your sister in the Lord.

AN EXTRACT.

Dear Brother:—

Our winter has been a singular one for Cal. We have had more snow and cloudy and damp weather than I have ever known since in Cal. (17 years.) To the friends who may see this account in the PILGRIM, desiring to come to Cal. I would say, this will be a propitious season as the rains in the San Joaquin Valley this winter promise a bountiful harvest which will begin about the first of June.

ELD. GEO. WOLF.

Lathrop Cal.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Since my last writing I held several meetings in Bro. Joel Shivley's District. Eight were added by baptism, and much feeling manifested, and I think many more will yet come. May the good Lord carry on the work until many will be gathered into the fold. Yours fraternally,

JESSE CALVERT.

JOHN ZUCK.

DIED.

SHOCK.—In the same Congregation, Mar. 5, '74, Mary A., daughter of brother Daniel and Hannah Shock, aged 3 years, 3 months and 3 days.

She was a very pleasant little girl but death has torn her from a kind mother's embrace. Of such is the Kingdom of heaven. Funeral discourse by John Knisley and A. Appelman.

LEADAN.—In the Manor Congregation, Washington Co. Md., March 2, '74, Dora Ellen, infant daughter of George D. and Eliza J. Leadan, aged 1 year, 1 mo. and 24 days. E. J. L.

ZIMMERMAN—In the Hopewell Congregation, Bedford County Pa., March 8, '74 George Elmer, son of friend Henry and sister Maggie Zimmerman, aged 5 mos. Funeral discourse by the writer.

D. S. CLAPPER.

SWINE—Suddenly February 3d, '74 in Germany Valley, Aughwick branch, Huntingdon Co. Pa., brother George Swine, aged 62 years, 8 months and 3 days. Discourse by the Brethren, from 1st Thess. 4: 13-18. A. L. FUNK.

GRIESMER—In the Springfield Congregation March 2, '74, Anna, wife of Jas. Griesmer, aged 79 years, 10 months and 27 days. Our sister said she was ready, and passed away like the setting sun. May we all follow her example. Discourse by the writer. J. CALVERT.

ULERY—On the morning of Feb. 12, '74, Jesse H., infant son of brother Samuel and sister Mary Ulery, aged 1 year, 9 months and 21 days. May the Lord enable our dear brother and sister to be resigned to his holy will. JOS. ZAHN.

HILDEBRAND—At Conemaugh, Cambria Co., Pa., March 13 '74, Charles H., youngest son of brother J. S., and sister C. A. Hildebrand, aged 2 years, 4 mos. and 2 days. S. HILDEBRAND.

SHELLER.—Henry R. Sheller was instantly killed at Altoona by the cars, on the 13th day of last July. He is a son of brother John A., and sister Mary A. Sheller. Age 21 years, 3 months and 12 days.

This was shocking news to the parents and brothers, and to all around here, and also a warning to us all to be on a lookout on railroads. He was buried in the graveyard at the Dry Valley Meeting-house. Funeral services by the Brethren.

JACOB MOHLER.

REARICK.—Also in the same congregation February 14, '74, brother Israel Rearick, aged 31 years, 1 month.

He leaves a kind wife a sister, in the church, and one child to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse by Eld. John Knisley.

YOUNG—On the 25th of February '74, brother Samuel, son of brother Lewis Young, near Prairie City, Desmoines Valley Church. He was thrown by a cow against the end of a log and died the next day. He leaves a dear companion and many friends to mourn their loss. He follows a dear little daughter, Nora, that shortly preceeded him. Funeral discourse by the writer to a very large concourse of people. G. R. BAKER.

JONES—December 14, '73, in the Pipe Creek Church, Madison Co., Indiana, sister Sarah, wife of friend Henry Jones, and daughter of brother Harrison Allen. Sister Sarah was an highly esteemed member in the church, a respected neighbor, beloved wife and a kind and affectionate mother. Her remains were followed to the Union Meeting-house, where a sermon was preached by the writer to a large and solemn audience, from the words, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their works which do follow them."

After preaching the remains were conveyed to the grave-yard near by, and consigned to the tomb to await the resurrection of the just. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn their loss.

ISAIAH G. HOWARD.

SLIFE.—In the Union Congregation, Marshall Co., Ind., March 7, '74, of lung fever, our much beloved brother Frederick Slife, aged 55 years, 6 months and 7 days.

He leaves a sorrowing wife and 4 children to mourn their loss. He bore his afflictions with Christian fortitude, talked much about things heavenly and divine. He was annointed in the name of the Lord at his request, as he wished to obey all. The dear sister has lost a kind husband, and the children a loving father, the neighborhood a good citizen, and the church a worthy brother. Brother Frederick was a member of the church nearly 30 years, a deacon 17 years and ready to fill his place at all times in council and Communion meetings. His children are all members of the church except the youngest, and we pray as he grows up he may follow the example of a Christian father. Funeral services from St. John 11: 26 by David Rupel, John Barnhart and John Knisley, to a large concourse of people.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is said that since the revival began in Great Britian, the great publishing-house of the Bagsters, London, has not been nearly able to keep up with the increased demand for Bibles.

The snow storm in the Sierra Nevada Mountains continues, and railroad trains are delayed by the snow-drifts. Snow plows are constantly employed in breaking thro' the drifts. This is the severest storm ever known in this part of the country.

Intelligence of a shocking calamity in the Mediterranean has been received. The steamship Laconia, while on a voyage from Alexandria, Egypt, for Algiers, having as passengers 278 pilgrims returning from Mecca encountered terrific gales. One huge wave which struck the vessel, washed over board from her deck 117 of the pilgrims, and all were drowned.

"One requires to live in this once stronghold of the church [Rome] to realize the great change that has befallen the once mights Papal power. The monasteries and convents, those monuments and aforetime instruments of despotism, are being turned into more useful purposes than living tombs for God's creatures. The kitchens belong to the monks of the ex-convents of the Carmina, at Rome, consisting of fifty spacious apartments, are undergoing transformation into soup kitchens for the poor and needy." —Letter from Rome.

At the March session of the Baptist ministers at Chicago, 162 baptisms in that city during the month of February were reported. At the same meeting Rev. Dr. Arnold, in an exegesis of 1 Cor, 15; 29, interpreted that passage on the principle of ellipsis, as though it should be read, "What shall they do who are baptized for (the hope of the resurrection of) the dead." In this view the most of those present seemed to concur.

The Famine in Bengal is very severe. Reports from different sections speak of the intense suffering. The special correspondent of the London NEWS telegraphs that the villagers in Eastern Tirhoot are slowly starving to death, and the future looks terribly ominous. Another correspondent says: "In one village alone there have been eighteen deaths from starvation in four days. The number of applicants for government aid has increased from 15,000 to 50,000 within a week." An Indian paper says: "Over a million people are starving to death in the famine stricken districts."

—Not long ago, some of the fathers of the Jesuit Order, who had come from Rome to Florence, narrowly escaped being mobbed by the Florentines. When it was known that they were in the city there was an outburst of indignation among the populace. A public meeting was speedily convened—upwards of 4,000 people assembled, and it was resolved by them to intimate to the authorities that the peace of the city could not be guaranteed unless the Jesuits were expelled.—In Umbria societies have been formed for promoting parochial freedom, in other words—to have the choice of the priest vested, not in the Bishop of the diocese, but in the people themselves. In Naples, also, a movement has been begun for the revision of the relations of the Church and State, with the view of limiting the power of the clergy.

LITERATURE.

SEVEN HISTORIC AGES, or Talks about Kings, Queens, and Barbarians; by Arthur Gilman, M. A. (Hurd and Houghton; Cambridge, Mass.) 13 mo. $1.00. Illustrated.

This little volume, by the author of "First Steps in English Literature," that recent valuable addition to the facilities for obtaining literary information, by the young, is prepared with the sensible opinion in view, that, as works of history for the young, the worth of a volume increases in proportion as its size decreases It is a book that will be read, and reread with interest, and profit. In it are presented "a series of grand events in the history of the world from the Golden Age of Greece to the palmy days of France," in a series of conversations upon the Golden Ages of Greece and Rome, England and France, the Dark Ages, and the Ages of Leo X and of Charles V with a list of the characters mentioned, and one hundred dates illustrative of the Seven Historic Ages. We commend the work to our readers, as one worthy of being placed in the hands of the young, assuring them that it will afford them healthful pleasure, educational stimulus, and moral lessons.

—Scribners have secured for simultaneous publication, with its appearance in Paris, in their Magazine, the new serial by M. Jules Verne, entitled "The Mysterious Island," in which the author will endeavor to show how a body of men, thrown helpless upon a desert island, may develop a living from purely scientific resources, without any convenient wreck to draw upon for the materials of life and comfort. It will be commenced in the April number and continued throughout the year.

—Lippincott's Magazine, the handsomest of the American Monthlies, and as interesting and entertaining as it is handsome, greatly pleases us in its March number. It opens with one of Edward Strahan's illustrated papers describing a journey from "Paris to Marly by way of the Rhine." An account of a journey "In a Caravan with Gerome the Painter" is a bright and readable, illustrated article: indeed every article in the number is full of interest and entertainment.

We would like to raise a club, for this excellent magazine at the lowest club rate of $3.00 each per year. Address this office.

—Sunday Magazine for March is even more attractive than former numbers. It should have a wide circulation. (Lippincott & Co. Philadelphia.)

—The Sanitarian completes its first volume with the March number, which is almost entirely devoted to the subject of "Defective Drainage"—with maps. (A. S. Barnes & Co. N Y.)

—Littell's Living Age continues to bring to its readers the cream of the Foreign periodicals. Week after week we are thus permitted to enjoy the productions of the best talent "across the water" in our own homes, being brought together in this repository of literature. The contents are always rich, varied and entertaining. (Littell & Gay, Boston).

Only a few of above symptoms likely to be present at one time. All who use Dr. Pierce's Alt. Ext., or Golden Medical Discovery for Liver Complaint and its complications are loud in its praise.

A CURE OF LIVER DISEASE.

RUSK, TEXAS, May 10th, 1873.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE:

Dear Sir.—My wife last year at this time was confined to her bed with Chronic Liver Disease. I had one of the best doctors to see her, and he gave her up to die, when I came upon some of your medicine. I bought one bottle and commenced giving it. She then weighed 82 lbs.; now she weighs 140 lbs. and is robust and hearty. She has taken eight bottles in all, so you see I am an advocate for your medicines. WM. MEAZEL.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no traveling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun. $2 00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns. Daily circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 60 cents a month or $6.00 a year. To clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

THE BANNER OF IMMANUEL.

BY WESLEY.

Inspired by the ardor true,
Which doth each Christian bosom swell,
My eyes with deep emotion view
"The banner of Immanuel."

Its crimson folds embrace the air,
Where sin's depraved disciples dwell:
'Tis Heaven's chosen sons who bear
The banner of Immanuel.

They rally 'neath that peerless flag,
And satan's battlements assail;
Whilst mortals base to earth would drag
The banner of Immanuel.

The battle rages fierce and wild,
But ne'er will Heaven's forces quail;
Defeats foul stain has never soiled
The banner of Immanuel.

It still in matchless beauty waves,
Though swept by hell's malignant gale;
Whilst martys' tears and life-blood lave
The banner of Immanuel.

In vain may infidelity
Her vapid tales to Christians tell;
'Tis faith's keen eye alone can see
The banner of Immanuel.

And when eternity's bright dawn
Shall list to times convulsive knell,
Assembled world's shall gaze upon
The banner of Immanuel.

Upon triumphant Zion's dome,
Placed by the hand of God, shall swell,
To float through cycles yet tocome,
The banner of Immanuel.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

NO. 6.

Father into thy hands I commend my spirit.—Luke 23 : 46.

I. INTRODUCTION.

With this article we close our remarks upon the above subject. We have endeavored to arrange and treat those expressions, which Jesus uttered while hanging on the cross, in as logical an order as our ability would permit. The expressions of Jesus as we have given them, do not occur in any one of the Evangelist's writings, but in all of them, as a gospel, and because the language heading this article is not found in Matt. Mark and John, does not make it any less the word of God, or part of the Gospel of Christ. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

And as the words heading this article breathes sentiments worthy of a departing spirit, and coming from the source they do, are the more worthy of our considering them carefully, knowing as we do that we too, sooner or later, must exchange time for a long and endless eternity, and from whence no traveller ever returns. To comment upon the dying words of Jesus is truly a solemn task.

II JESUS' RESIGNATION.

1. Its significance.

By presenting this division of the subject to you my reader for your consideration, I do not mean that Jesus was not resigned to the will of God the Father, under those other circumstances in which we have already viewed Him, but we do mean that his resignment at this last and important expression was significant, grand, and soul-cheering to all such as loved him. It is also a great model of Christian death, and should be treasured up as such in the heart of every Christian—Christ-like man and woman.

And as Christ died one of the most shameful of deaths, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree," it makes His resignation the more significant. Not only was it shameful and barbarian like, but we utterly fail to depict the mental and physical suffering he had to endure before death was produced. His death was a slow torturing one; which makes His calm and cool frame of mind the more worthy of admiration. Many have exhibited noble resignment at death under the sanctifying and comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, and the soothing words of kind friends, who stood by their bedsides to alleviate and diminish their sufferings; but who like Jesus, surrounded by the bloody hands that were taking His life, the most bitter of enemies that can be imagined, with none to soothe or comfort Him in his last moments, but an approving conscience, has died so triumphant a death?

2. His commitment.

"Father into thy hands I commend my spirit." The word commend in this sentence has various meanings, according to use, but the one we think conveys the proper idea as it is used in the above sentence is, to commit. Hence Jesus' commitment.

It was into His Father's hands that He committed His spirit. Into that Father's hands who had sent Him into the world to seek and to save the lost. He that Jesus declared had not left Him alone, "And He that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please Him." —John. 8 : 29. He of whom Jesus said, My Father worketh hitherto and I work. Into His hands, refers to the care, protection, and ruling power with which the Father controls all His designs.

He commends His spirit into His hands, who deals gently with all spirits, for He Himself is a Spirit, and whose watchfulness is so minute as to notice the sparrow that falls to the ground, and to number every hair of our heads. God is the Father of spirits, and His hands holds the destiny of all spirits, in the spiritual world. Jesus had known the Father, and this knowledge enabled him to commit the most precious of all treasures into His care and supervision. This stands as the basis of all safeguards to obtain any glorious end in the commitment of any trust appertaining to this life or the life to come.

3. Concluding remarks.

The apostle Paul said, "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."—1 Cor. I : 22-24. He that preaches Christ crucified of a truth preaches the power of God, which is nothing less than the word of God. And as Christ said of Himself, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men to myself." We have been endeavoring to cite you, dear reader, to behold Jesus on the cross, and to the important expressions which He uttered whilst extended between Heaven and earth.

It seems as though His language whilst He was thus uplifted, was designed to cover the whole groundwork of the plan of salvation. The great doctrine of non-resistance, is nowhere in the Bible more fully taught and exemplified than Jesus taught and exemplified it on the cross. Here He did good for evil. When He was smitten on the one cheek He refused not the other also. He was willing to lose His life for the truth's sake and thereby save his life. Behold how He loves His enemies, how He sympathizes with the bereaved, and provides for the wants of the needy. How he pardons and blesses the penitent, and gives assurance of salvation. How diligent He is that all things concerning Himself should be finished, that He might enter into His glory. And lastly, how resigned He was as He breathed out His departing spirit.

And now dear reader in conclusion, let us look within the chambers of our own poor and needy souls and examine. Let us solve the question by viewing Jesus on the cross, whether His spirit rules and reigns in our own hearts, and whether the mind which was in Christ Jesus is in us. May God add His blessing upon our humble efforts and sanctify them to the convicting and converting of souls, that many may be able to say with confiding trust and full resignation to God in death, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit," is my prayer.

[For the PILGRIM.]

WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT FOR YOUNG PILGRIMS.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

Never doubt the existence of God as He is revealed in the Scriptures. When you are convinced of sin repent immediately. Long continuance in sin hardens men in it. Repent by believing that God will forgive, if you go your way with a genuine intention not to sin again. Go about your business, if it is good, cheerfully as being directly under the eye of your master in heaven. If your business is not good quit it, and engage in a good one. "If thou art called being a servant, care not for it, but if thou canst be made free, use it rather." Do not be too anxious nor yet too careless about what you eat. Do not eat merely to gratify or satisfy taste or appetite. Eat to receive strength and to prolong life for your purpose. Pay more attention to your body to keep it pure, clean and healthy than the clothes you wear. Be neither too particular nor too careless about plainness, neatness or fashionable dress. The life is more than meat and the body is more than raiment. Above all, eat, dress and do everything to the glory of God. Not to the glory of men, or to your own glory. Get wisdom. Strive for a knowledge of truth. Receive instruction, no matter what it may be called when it comes to you. But do not be all "book learning," else where were the pilgrim. In "book learning" do not be all grammar, else where were your education. Do not centralize your chief affections upon anything that is earthly. Go on your way rejoicing. It has been said that the apostle Paul had two guns and when he discharged the one he said "Rejoice," and when he discharged the other he said "And again I say rejoice." Obedience to this commandment should leave you in such a delightful state of mind that self and all tribulation would be lost in blessedness, as a good musician looses himself in his tunes, unconciously moving his vocal organs and touching the keys of his instrument. He does not stop to consider or contend in his mind which is B or D, but he strikes the right note instinctively and enjoys the essence of music. So the Christian will instinctively do right and enjoy the essence and quintessence of the religion of Jesus Christ. Firmness, proper decision of character, and to know how to think or do are the only words that mean "Be instant in season and out of season." "Pray without ceasing." Pray the Lord to help you, but do not expect Him to help when you will not use the power He gives you to help yourself.

As well might you pray him to turn flour into bread when you can do it by his help.

Let "day unto day utter speech" to you, and let "night unto night show knowledge" to you. Remember that "Youth is the time to improve the mind." Make good use of your time It is a precious gift directly from the hand of your creator. Take heed to the spare moments They are truthfully said to be the gold dust of time. If you should live to be an old brother or an old sister, then oh! the pleasure of a well spent life. But alas! the misery and remorse caused by one carelessly and badly spent Idleness, carelessness, foolishness, frivolity loose-mindedness &c. only other words that mean "superfluity of naughtiness" which must be put away. "Let your adorning be the inward hidden man, of the heart, a meek and quiet spirit." What gentle soothing word of comfort and encouragement!

"Be courteous" Let no mortal be beneath your notice in the sight of God. Let your sympathies reach down and reform and lift up the meanest and lowest wretch. "Let your light so shine." Let heavenly light shine all around you. Be a man or a woman among men and women, lifting them from earth to heaven.

Be merciful. "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy." Do not hastily or rashly censure even guilty persons. Do not retaliate "Avenge not yourselves" "Vengeance is mine saith the Lord." "Render not evil for evil but overcome evil with good." Be patient. Forbear. Wait a little longer. "Let patience have her perfect work." It will be seen that the words quoted from the gospel are by far the more encouraging. They are indeed like "apples of gold in pictures of silver. Therefore "comfort one another with these words."

Mt Union, Pa.

BUILDING ON THE FOUNDATION OF THE APOSTLES AND CHRIST THE CHIEF CORNER STONE

"And are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."* Eph. 11: 20

Foundation is the basis or groundwork of anything, and on which anything stands, and by which it is supported. Building is a fabric or edifice constructed for use or convenience as a house, barn, shop &c. To build is to frame, construct, and to unite materials into a regular structure for use and convenience &c. The foundation spoken of in the text is the basis of Christianity, or the visible Church and the building spoken of in the succeeding verse is the Church which is built on this foundation, but another foundation can no man lay than this that is laid. And should there be any other laid? Is not this one sufficiently strong for the whole world to build the hope of salvation upon? Hath not the Lord God declared that He would "lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation?" And has not Jesus Christ the Son of God declared that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it?" Surely, then, we need no other one, and hence Mahomet and Joe. Smith are innovators and impostors.

Christianity, or religion resting on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner, man must build the hope of his salvation on the doctrine taught by them, for these teachings are the materials with which to build the visible Church on; and by rendering strict obedience to them, we, "in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom we also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." We search the Scriptures to know their doctrine and system of teaching.

The Apostle says "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon," for there seems to be a variety of materials men may, in their fancy, choose to use to build with, which will not stand the test of the great day of the Lord. There is the material denominated "gold, silver, and precious stone;" materials that will stand the test of fire. These evidently signify the teachings of Christ, the apostles, and the prophets. Then there are materials denominated "wood, hay and stubble," these, it is equally evident, signify the teachings and traditions of men who have sought out many inventions, cunningly devised fables by those who walk in craftiness, and handle the word of God deceitfully." These are materials that will not stand the trying test of fire. To take heed with what materials we build on the Christian foundation, then, is very obvious: equally so is the necessity that we know what the materials are, for, "every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what it is." And if it be of of wood, hay, or stubble it will be burned and he will suffer loss.

Christ being the chief corner, has himself laid the foundation on which his church shall be built; and though heaven and earth pass away this foundation shall never pass away. And this foundation is recorded by St. Matt. 5, 6, and 7, to which I refer the reader. And the man who with gold, silver and precious stones, (the true principles of the doctrines of Christianity) will build on this foundation, storms may come, rain may fall and floods may beat against his house (religion) it will never fall because it is built upon the rock. But to build on any other foundation, than that which is laid, though the material be good, in the fiery trial, the building will fall because it was built upon the sand.

Let us see some of the stones (so to speak) which Christ has laid in this foundation, and contrast them with the sand bars interpolated by man. "I say unto you swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: Neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than this cometh of evil." This is a stone in the foundation laid by Christ Jesus who is the chief corner himself and has direct reference to swearing what is termed the legal oath. For he refers them to the legal oath under the law which required the swearing or taking the legal oath. "Ye have read that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not foreswear thyself, but perform unto the Lord thine oaths." Is it not evident to hold and construe this to mean profane swearing, and building a religious faith upon it, is to build on the sand, and in the day of trial will fall, and great will be the fall, though the material be ever so good. A simple affirmation on the honor or veracity of the christian character is the foundation for the Christian's legal qualification, and whatsoever is more than this comes from evil and is a sand bar interloped by man.

Again, Nonresistance is a stone laid in the foundation by Christ that will remain when all other powers have crumbled and decayed. Not resisting evil with evil but overcoming evil with good. And to love not only thy neighbor, but also thy enemy, to feed him when hungry, and clothe him when naked, and pray for him while he is cursing thee, &c., are principles in the foundation on which the church must be built, and stand in manifest contrast with the sandy foundation on which professing christians build their claim or right for wars, law-suits, and self-defence as they term it. All wars and litigations stand not on the rock that will never be undermined; but on the sand that will wash out, cave in, and be swept away; and all who build on it will fall along with it.

Again, alms-giving and prayer in secret are prominent features laid as stones in the foundation by Christ. "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets, that they may have glory of men." If ye do, "otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven." "When thou doest alms let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward the openly." In the days the Lord Jesus laid this stone in the foundation of Christianity, there were professors of religion who gave alms publicly in the synagogues, and in the streets that they might have the praise or glory of men; but the Lord pronounces them hypocrites. And will he do otherwise with the so-called philanthropists of our day who do the same thing, whose large donations are not only published in the church and avenues leading to it, but it is promulgated through news papers over the whole civilized world? The act rests on a sand bar. It is all their reward. Even so with prayer. "They love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward." That is, to be seen and heard of men is all their reward; they will have no more. The true and sure foundation for prayer is, "But when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward the openly." How striking is the contrast with the praying hypocrites of that day, and the fashionable praying of the present. Standing in the pulpit with a standing congregation, and the public prayer-meetings of the day. Sand bars laid by men on which to build religion will not stand the test of Him who is the chief corner stone. Let this suffice.

Having briefly sketched some of peculiarities of the foundation on which the Christian religion rests, I will notice the gold, silver and precious stone, materials with which to build it upon. The foundation being good, building on it with good material, both will stand the floods, and test of fire, and the builder shall have a reward. While to build on a sandy foundation, laid by man, with wood, hay, and stubble, the floods will sweep away the foundation and the fire will burn the structure, and the builder will suffer loss, having neither foundation to stand on, nor good works to follow him. Jesus Christ being the chief corner in the foundation gives regeneration, or being born again as the first material to build with. "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." How man can be thus born, Jesus here does not say. That is he does not here say what man must do, so that in the doing he will be born again or regenerated, but elsewhere he tells. "The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." (Mark 1: 15.) And the Apostle again explains. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." (1. Pet. 1: 23.) The principles taught in the word of God, received in the understanding, impregnates the mind, enlightens the understanding, changes the heart, and consecrates the soul. And to enter the Christian service, the Church, or building on this foundation, he must be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. For Jesus says. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." St. John 3: 5. And being the chief corner, has all power in Heaven, and in earth; therefore he commands to teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Matt. 28: 19; and associates the promise of salvation with faith and baptism. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Luke 16: 16. With these materials the apostles went forth building the Christian church, and assures the repentant believer that by faith, repentance and baptism they should have remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Acts 11: 37—39, and chapters 8, 16, and other places,

Different were the arguments the the apostles used, and the means of grace God employed to convince the sinner of his sins, and the necessity of building on the foundation which as the Poet says:

"God in Zion laid."

But in all cases after conviction was established. Repentance, Faith and Baptism were the only materials enjoined by the apostles, and are evidently the gold, silver and precious stone materials which will endure the the consuming fire of God; while all theories of men, such as the baptism of infants before they are capable of repentance, or faith, &c., are surely the wood, hay and stubble, which the test of fire will consume, and the poor builder will suffer loss.

Repentance and faith in the Gospel, are the materials Christ Jesus the chief corner stone has provided. St. Mark 1: 15. And the apostles puts them as the first principles in the building, or foundation, Heb. 6: 1, 2, and must precede baptism, which stands third on the list. Jesus will have the people taught before baptized, Mark 33: 19, and he will have the Gospel preached in all the world, and the believer baptized for salvation. Mark 16: 15-16. The apostles will have men repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ before they are baptized for the remission of sins, and for salvation. Acts 2: 37-38, 8: 12-37, and 16: 14-15, 31, 32, 33

*The word "stone" is marked as not being in the original it need not be read: Jesus Christ being the chief corner, is the true import or meaning.

Repentance being first on the schedule, I will speak of it first, and speaking of repentance, I mean not that repentance called legal repentance, which is merely a sorrow from the fear of punishment, being only excited by the terrors of legal penalties,—this may exist without an amendment of life. But I want to speak of evangelical repentance which is accompanied and followed by amendment of life, and not merely consisting in sorrow, pain and grief for a wrong done. Sorrow properly felt, if it be a godly and not a worldly sorrow, will work repentance; such as will stand the fire. This is the repentance the apostles and prophets taught. It is to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Titus, 2: 11 12. The repentance taught by the prophet is, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reason together saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as wool; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Isaiah, 1: 16 18. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Isaiah, 4: 5-7. This is repentance unto reformation, and building with this kind of gold, silver, precious stone material has the approbation of God, and will stand the test of his consuming fire.

The prophet Ezekiel, chapter 18 and 33, declares that if the wicked turn from his wickedness to righteousness he shall live, and his wickedness shall not be mentioned against him. &c. This is repentance unto salvation which need not be repented of, it is building with gold, silver and precious stone. But the wood, hay, stubble materials are the forms and pretentions of religion under the forms and inventions of men, and manifests itself in boisterous displays of pretended spiritual manifestations; and in the sacrifice and liberal gifts and donations for church purposes, &c., and is minutely described by the prophet, with the answer of God annexed. "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts, and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hands to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them. And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you, yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood. Is. 1: 11 15, This is building with wood, hay, stubble, surely, and the poor deluded builders works will be burnt up, and O, how great will be the loss! And this is the current religion of the age. From $10 000 to $1.000.000. church edifices, and appointed revival, mid-day and union prayer-meetings; forty days fast, and weeks of prayer, with fastings, pride, vanity and wickedness abounding in it all, is the order of the day.

Faith stands second, and the question may well be asked, what is faith? St. Paul says, "It is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." And Webster says, "It is the assent of the mind to the truth of divine revelation on the authority of God's testimony, accompanied with the cordial assent of the will, or approbation of the heart; an entire confidence or trust in God's character and declaration of his will, and in the character and doctrine of Christ, with a full and unreserved surrender of the will to his guidance, and an entire dependence on his merits for salvation; or a firm belief in God's testimony and of the truth of the Gospel, as the power of God unto salvation. It it that which influences the will, and leads to an entire reliance on Christ for salvation on the terms prescribed by him in the Gospel."

With this elaborate definition of faith I might dismiss the subject, but as there are grades of faith, I will promise a little. What is termed general faith, is a dependance on the truth or veracity of another, and relies on the truth of a promise, &c. This faith often deceives us. Divine faith is a firm assent of the mind to things upon the authority of divine revelation. This faith can never deceive us. Historical faith, is a mere speculative knowledge of, and a bare assent to the truths revealed in the Scriptures as we have learned it from others. This is the faith the devils have, (James 11: 19,) and I fear many men have. it produces no action in godliness. A temporary faith, with a knowledge of, and assent to revealed truths has an approbation and joy in receiving it. But this joy arising from some worldly consideration soon vanishes and comes to nothing, as in Matt. 13: 20, and with many others who for some similar consideration, laid their hands to the plow and afterwards looked, or went back. This faith is the product of a high state of physical excitement and amounts to nothing. The material being so combustible the least trial consumes it, and is unfruitful. All these grades of faith in religion are but wood, hay, stubble. But justifying faith is a saving grace wrought in the soul by the spirit of God, whereby we receive Christ as he is revealed in the Gospel, trusting and relying upon him for righteousness, justification and salvation, only upon complying with the conditions laid down in the Scriptures; being righteous by walking with God in all his commandments blameless. This is the faith which begets sincere obedience to his word in life and conversation, and is the faith James will show by his works. It is the gold, silver, precious stone faith which will not only stand the test of the storms of trial and temptation, but also the consuming blast of the fire of God. This faith embraces the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

United with this repentance and faith is baptism third on the list of materials, and was by the ancients, and by the true builders still is, the the immersion of the believer face forward three times in water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And to the believing penitent for salvation. St. Mark, 16: 19; for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Acts 2: 38; for the washing away of sins. Acts, 22: 19; and for salvation with the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. 1 Peter, 3: 21. Such repentant baptized believers are washed, are sanctified and are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God. 1 Cor. 11: 11. And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; and that their building may be fitly framed together and grow unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom all may be builded together for a habitation of God thro' the Spirit and must be taught to observe all things commanded them by the Lord and his apostles, by whom the foundation was surely laid.

PRAYER!

"When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father who is in secret: and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."

Secret prayer is here clearly inculcated by the Savior: of its necessity there can be no doubt. While the hypocrites prayed in the synagogues and on the corners of the street to be seen of men, the Savior tells his disciples to go to their closets, and shut the door and pray, where no human eye can see nor ear can hear. Go where none but God is, and there, under the solemn conviction that His eye is upon us, "pour out your hearts before Him;" tell Him all, confess all, and ask for all we need. There is none here whom we can deceive; none here before whom we can make a vain display. But here we feel that we are with God alone, and the heart turns upon itself, conscious of its own need and guilt; will implore supply and pardon from that tender Father, who mercifully invites us to his sacred retreat, with the promise that He will hear and grant all that we need. An hour in the closet, if properly spent, will do more to bless, strengthen and comfort us, than days of ordinary service in the congregation. All the ancient worthies were distinguished for their devotion to the closet. They devoted much of their time to the duties and privileges of secret prayer. David says: "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried unto my God; He heard my voice out of His temple, and my cry came before Him, even into His ears."

Our worst enemies are often found in our own hearts; then let us go to our closets and pray, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." This secret communication with our God increases our love. Hence, when Moses came down from the Mount, where he had been alone with God forty days, his "face shone," so that he had to veil it while he talked to the people. We might produce many examples upon this point from the scriptures, but one more will suffice. The son of God often retired to the mountain. He continued all night in prayer to God. In the garden of Gethsemane, He left his disciples to watch while He went forward and prayed. Let us realize that daily private prayer is indispensable to our spiritual existence. It is as possible for a man to live without lungs as a Christian to live spiritually without prayer. If the Savior sought His Olivet for his retirement, meditation and prayer, shall not every Christian have his Olivet also? There is a painful lack of self examination, of private meditation and prayer. If we expect to be patient and submissive under the trials of life, and gain the crown at last, we must daily resort to our Olivet (though it may have a Geths mane of trial at its foot), where we can commune with God, realize our own wants and weaknesses, plead earnestly for pardon and divine aid, and get new strength from communion and fellowship with Christ. Daniel found his in his chamber; Elijah found his on Carmel; Peter his on the house-top, and Paul his in the cabin of the storm-tossed ship. In the brightest hour of prosperity we can not afford to dispense with our daily visits to this sacred retreat; but when the dark hours gathered around us, and sorrows and trials throng our way—when friends and comforts are passing away—it is then we value and improve most those hours of blessed communion and fellowship with Him who was the prince of sufferers, and knows how to feel for us.

"No words can tell what sweet relief
There for my every want I find:
What strength for warfare, balm for grief,
What peace of mind!"

How precious are the fervent prayers of the needy, suffering children of God. The four creatures and twenty-four elders, whom John saw falling down before the Lamb, had "every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints."

Our God delights in the prayers of his children. They soothe our afflictions, increase our humility and dependence, subdue our wills, and make the will of God our own. O for an increase of "the spirit of prayer and of supplication!" Until this is the case, Zion will languish, the family altar will not be erected, and the voice of prayer will not be heard morning and evening in the households of the professed followers of Christ. Remember the admonition of the Savior, "Watch and pray."—Christian Examiner.

LOOK ON THE BRIGHT SIDE.

How often we might lighten our troubles in this world by "looking on the bright side." It has been said that "every cloud has a silver lining." Yet how prone we are to view the dark side only, of life's trials, and disappointments. Oh! if we could only learn to let each minute and each hour bear its own burden only, and not freight it with the cares of many yet to come, (and which God only knows whether we shall ever see,) how much happier would be our lives, and how much unnecessary pain and misery would we be spared. Our lives are what we make them. We know it is the lot of mankind to be happy and miserable both. Every life has its clouds and sunshine. But how much avoidable pain and misery, this world of ours contains! How many imaginary troubles! How much of the happiness, and sunshine, which our lives should have, is lost, merely because we look on the dark side. Let us be hopeful. "If fortune plays us false to-day, to-morrow shall be true." God doeth all things well, and every thing will work together for good to them that do his will. Look up desponding Christian, and see the ominous clouds rifted, and the bright sun shining through.

"Be still sad heart, and cease repining,
For behind the clouds is the sun still shining."

M. E. Taylor.

Conscience is a delicate seed planted in the heart by God, and no one can so well quicken its growth as mother.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., MARCH 31, 1874.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

Books.—We have orders for several hundred Hymn Books, but cannot fill them until we get a supply from the publishers. We hope our friends will exercise a little patience, as we will attend to all the orders as soon as we receive a supply.

Bro. Jesse P. Hetrick, of Oakland, Pa., informs us that he expects to pass through this place on the 6th inst., enroute for Philadelphia, where he expects to labor with the brethren for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

Sad Intelligence.—We have been been informed that our respected friend, Harry Engle, one of the proprietors of the Marietta Nurseries, has been called away by death. He was a man of rare business ability, and was much loved and esteemed by all who had the pleasure of making his acquaintance. The busines will be continued by his brother. This firm we consider perfectly responsible and any of our readers wanting anything in their line can order it with the assurance that they will be fairly dealt with.

Our Bro. of the Companion in last week's issue gives rather a lengthy paper on the "comparison." He admits that we have more reading surface, but thinks, or tries to think at least, that the Companion contains one-fourth more reading matter. For Charity's sake we shall not contradict our brother, and further, we are quite willing to leave that matter to the judgment of our readers. We are not in the least fearful that we will suffer any loss, or lose any patronage from his declaration, and shall not refer to it again in our columns.

J. B. B.

We call the attention of our readers to our advertisement of Poems on the eighth page. The reading of these poems affard us so much pleasure that we feel like recommending them to our readers. That you may have a glimpse of the depth and beauty of the poems we will give a few extracts. From the "Out Cast" we have the following stanza :

Away, in the bright long ago,
Ere time drew his saddening lines—
When clear streams of pleasure did flow
From fountains so pure and sublime—

From "Address to Christmas,"

The aged hail thy glad return,
Though life's dim flame but feebly burn;
In gratitude their hearts they raise
When thy blest beams salute their gaze.

And from "The Night before Christmas,"

"To-morrow is Christmas;"
How soft falls the voice,
Then sinks into silence
Its prattle and noise; [night,"]
And quietly kissing mamma a "good
It dreams of the Christmas tree blooming so bright.

Do not ask, "Can there any good come out of Nazareth?" but send along your orders and be convinced that they are the sweetest poems you ever read.

THE CALL.

Sometime ago we made a note of a sister who on account of a misfortune thought they could not take the Pilgrim with the assurance that some of our liberal hearted readers would contribute their mites towards paying for it. In this we have not been disappointed and can now inform our sister Effie that her Pilgrim has been cheerfully paid for and that you have the warm sympathies of loving hearts. We are all brethren and we are glad to know that we can feel each others woes.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED.

This seems to be a general question and we do not wonder at it, as we all stand in the same relation to God and the conditions which promises salvation to one promises it to all, hence if we can determine just how much our neighbor must do to be saved, we have a standard by which we can measure out our own destiny, that is, if we regard it as a measurable commodity to be obtained for a stipulated amount of labor or seeking after. Notwithstanding we all protest against such an idea, yet how often do we hear the expression, "If that man or that woman can be saved, I do not think that I need to have any fears." This is making our own standard of religion and locating it between our own case and that of some other sinner whom we judge to be a little less pious than ourselves, forgetting that God has fixed the standard and that it is our duty to come up to that, though there be a thousand grades of sin beneath. Because I am a good moralist and my neighbor an out-broken sinner, I may congratulate myself on being much better than a number of other men, or at least much better than the common publican and sinner. In a moral point of view this may be so, but the measurement is taken from a standard of my own making and will not, therefore reach the case nor the question under consideration. This thing of measuring by and among ourselves, it is said is not wisdom.

But who shall be saved? We next resort to the church of which we are members. From a knowledge of its laws and regulations, we fix another standard and then commence comparing our life and deportment with it, making allowance for grace, &c., and if we can persuade ourselves that we have been pretty good church members and are on the safe side, that we will be among the saved, especially if we think that our righteousness exceeds that of our brethren. This again is passing judgment from a wrong basis and therefore cannot decide the question before us.

To answer this question fully we must consider, first, from what we are to be saved. This we learn from the Bible, which tells us that to have eternal life and happiness, we must be saved from our sins. Sin is the result of violated law. "By the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, but by the obedience of one, many shall be made righteous." Then we understand, that what was lost by disobedience, may be regained by obedience, or in other words, as in Adam all men died, so in Christ all shallbe made alive.

We are then to be saved from our sins and the law of Christ makes it very plain how this can be done. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." This seems to answer our question fairly and squarely. Faith then is the starting point in salvation, for without faith it is impossible to please God. As many as believed to them gave he power to become the children of God. By faith we lay hold on the promise of eternal life and are thus enabled to comply with the conditions upon which salvation is promised. Having then, this plain and pointed answer to our question, let us not be deceived for God is not and will not be mocked.

VESTOL'S GRIT.

The Tennessee Quaker Who Refused to Fight in the Late War.

As we are busy and have not time to write much editorial this week we give the following believing it will be of general interest and profit.

The following interesting account of young quaker who could not be induced to fight in the late war, though conscripted, is from the pen of a prominent citizen of this State—a leading member of the bar of an adjacent county, and an ex-Judge Advocate and officer of the Confederate States army in the late war. It is a faithful narration of one of the most interesting and curious events of the war:

I have just read in the Banner of the 16th inst. a fragment of Gov. Foote's reminiscences, headed, "How a Quaker Refused to Fight," As I am familiar with the facts and circumstances alluded to, and as the case greatly interested me at the time I have thought it might be of some interest to your readers to go into details more than is done in Gov. Foote's brief allusion to the case,

The young Quaker alluded to is Tilgham R. Vestol, who lived near Columbia, Tenn. When Gen. Bragg's army was at Shelbyville, Tenn., young Vestol was conscripted and sent to that place; he was assigned to duty in the Fourth Tennessee regiment, commanded by Col. McMurray, of Nashville. He reported to the regiment as required to do, but utterly refused to perform military duty of any character or description. Neither by threats nor persuasion could he be induced to alter his determination. The officers of the regiment were as humane as they were true and gallant, and, after every effort had failed to induce Vestol to perform the duties of a soldier, they gave the matter up in despair, and told him to leave and go home, which he did. But shortly thereafter another conscript officer came along and Vestol was again duly enrolled as a conscript and ordered to report at Bragg's headquarters. Not being ready just then to leave his home, he asked and obtained the time of two weeks within which to report, some citizen of Columbia—Chancellor Fleming, as I now remember—going his security that he would report at the end of the time. Before the two weeks had expired Gen. Bragg had fallen back to Chattanooga. All alone and on foot, Vestol went to Chattanooga, and reported at Bragg's headquarters. By a most singular coincidence, he was again assigned to the Fourth Tennessee. Col. McMurray, from his Shelbyville experience, knew he had a tough customer to deal with, He concluded he would try the force of moral suasion, so one day he sent for Vestol to come to his quarters, and undertook to convince him from the Scriptures that he was wholly wrong in his ideas and position. But the young quaker was rather too much for the gallant Colonel in the Scripture argument and the Colonel sent for his Chaplain to talk to Vestol and convince him that he was altogether wrong in his refusal to fight or to perform military duty. The Chaplain came and opened the argument after this wise: "I wouldn't give a cent for a religion that is opposed to my country." Said Vestol. "I wouldn't give a cent for a country that is opposed to my religion." The argument lasted for some time, but left the young Quaker unconvinced, and determined to do no military duty of any description. He refused to police the camp, or do the least thing that could be tortured or construed into military duty. At last Col. McMurray, wholly unable to do anything with Vestol, sent him to brigade headquarters. Here he was reasoned with, and every effort made to induce him to go and perform the duties of a soldier, but he was firm and inflexible as the everlasting hills. He was told that if he persisted in his course he would be subjected to severe punishment, and finally would be shot for disobedience of orders. He replied that they had the power to kill him, but neither the Federal nor Confederate army possessed the power to force him to abandon his principles, or prove false to his religion. I remember endeavoring to persuade him one day to pay the $300, which the law provided a Quaker might pay, and be exempt from military duty, and asked him if he couldn't raise that amount and pay it and thus get rid of the troubles that I plainly saw ahead of him if he persisted in his course.

He said he could raise the money without any difficulty. "But," said he, "suppose I pay the Confederate Goverement $500—that will enable them to employ some one else to fight and it will be equivalent to my hiring another man to do what I think is wroog to do myself. I can't do that."

I then said to him: "suppose I could get you the position of nurse in a hospital, to care for the sick, wouldn't you be willing to do that?' He said: "I regard it my duty to do all I can for the sick and afflicted in either army, but if I were to take the position of nurse in a hospital, I would thereby occupy the place of some other man who would go out and fight." and so declined to do that. Learning from him that he knew how to make pottery or earthenware, I told him there was a manufactory of that sort in Georgia. "Now suppose you could be detailed to work there, would you not be willing to go?" He replied: "If it is a private establishment I will go," but if it is a Government establishment, and run in the interest of the war, I can't go." Everything that could be construed, directly or indirectly into military duty, he refused most emphatically to engage in. He was only about 18 years of age. I soon became satisfied that he acted from principle, and would go to the stake, or meet death in any shape it could assume, rather than swerve one particle from what he conceived to be his duty. It was the sublimest exhibition of moral courage I had ever witnessed, and it was the more remarkable from being found in a boy of only 18, away from his family and friends. I asked him one day if he had no sympathy in the contest—if he had no preference as to which side should be successful. "O yes," he said, "I would prefer to see the South victorious, as I live in the South and among Southern people." I heard a gentleman say to him, "Vestol, did you ever exhibit any emotion about anything in your life—did you ever cry in your life?" "O yes," he said, "I have cried in my life." "Well," said the gentleman, "I would like to know what were the circumstances that caused you to cry." "Well, sir" he said, "when I left home to come here, my mother cried when she told me good-by, and I cried then." "Yes," said the gentleman, "and if your mother were here now, and could see how you are situated, she would tell you to take your gun and go out and do your duty as a soldier." "No, sir," he quickly replied; "the last thing my mother said to me was to be true to my religion, and I mean to do it." It was during his stay at Gen. Maney's headquarters that Vestol had his interview with Gov. Foote. Gov. Foote was at that time a member of the Confederate Congress, representing the Nashville District, and was a candidate for re-election, being opposed, as I now remembered, by Col. Savage. The soldiers from Tennessee in the army were allowed to vote, and the Governor was out electioneering among the soldiers. While at Gen. Maney's headquarters some one pointed out Vestol to him, as a Quaker who wouldn't fight, when the following conversation occurred between them:

Foote—"What, young man, won't you fight—you are a stout, good-looking young man—is it true that you refuse to fight?"

Vestol—"Yes, sir."

Foote—"Why, you are all wrong about that. Suppose you were to marry a beautiful and accomplished young lady, and some ruffian were to come into your house and grossly insult her, wouldn't you kill him?"

Vestol—"No, sir,"

Foote—(Jumping from his seat in a very excited manner)—"Why, I'd kill him in a minute."

Resuming his seat after a minute, the Governor surveyed Vestol, and again commenced a conversation with him.

Foote—"Young man, you are all wrong about this matter, even from a Scriptural standpoint. When Christ was upon earth he directed his disciples to pay tribute to Cæsar. The money thus paid went into the Roman treasury, and was used in carrying on the wars of the Roman people."

Vestol—"No sir; you are mistaken about that. The Temple of Janus was closed at that time, and there were no wars going on."

Foote—"I believe he knows more about it than I do. I don't know whether the Temple of Janus was closed then or not."

Such was substantially the interview between this remarkable boy and this remarkable man. Perhaps two more opposite characters, in many particulars never came to contact.

Gov. Foote, as before stated, was at that time a member of the Confederate Congress. Whether he voted for the conscript law, the officers appointed under which he denominates the "blood-hounds of the Davis despotism," I know not. It was passed during the time he was a member of the Confederate Congress, whether with his sanction or not, I have no means of ascertaining. One thing is certain—he used all his power of persuasion to induce Vestol to bear arms on the side of the "Davis despotism," and was seeking the votes of the soldiers who were bearing arms at that side, and obtained the votes of hundreds of them with the understanding—implied, at least—that he was in full accord with the South in her struggle. On no other ground could he have received a vote.

But to return to the young Quaker. His case was such an extraordinary one that Gen. Polk wrote the facts to the War Department at Richmond, but never received an answer, so far as I am advised. Vestol was ordered to Knoxville and from that place he found his way to Virginia army, and was assigned to the Fourteenth or Seventeenth Tennesee regiment—I do not now remember which. Here he was ordered to military duty, but firmly refused, as he had done before. The Brigadier in command, knowing nothing of his history or antecedents, ordered him to be bayoneted for disobedience of orders, and the bayonet was applied to him repeatedly. He bore it with the spirit of a martyr, and the soldiers, seeing that he would die willingly in preference to sacrificing his principles, refused further to punish him. No punishment or threats could shake the settled purpose of his soul for a moment. He was under arrest all the while. Frequently, on retreats, his guard would lose sight of him, but in a day or two Vestol would march up alone into camp.

He made such an impression on me that, after the war was over, I inquired of all those rebs I supposed would know what became of him, and whether he had survived the war, but none of them could tell me.

In the year 1871, I was sitting in my office one evening, when a young man walked in and spoke to me, and asked me if my name was not so and so. I told him yes, and asked him to take a seat, that I would talk to him in a few minutes, as I was engaged just then. He remarked that he didn't think I knew him. I looked at him more closely, and told him I did not. he asked me if I remembered a Quaker at Chattanooga that refused to fight. I at once recognized Vestol, and was really glad to meet him, and made him give me a history of his ups and downs in the army after I parted with him at Chattanooga. He told me he was in Castle Thunder for awhile, at Richmond, but was finally permitted by the Secretary of War to go down to North Carolina to school, and was there at the time the war closed. Feeling that his education was not sufficient at the close of the war he went to Rhode Island, and there continued his studies and taught school a portion of the time. He informed me that it was seven years from the time he left his father's house to report to Bragg at Chattanooga before he returned to his paternal roof. He had invented a mode for taking off and putting on wagon bodies, for which he had obtained a patent, and was selling the right when I met him.

I suppose he is still living in the neighborhood of Columbia, Tenn.—Nashville (Tenn.) Banner.

A LETTER.

—TO—

Brother William C. Clemmer, and family, Norristown, Montgomery Co., Pa.

Dear Brother William and family:

By the mercies of God we are still among the living enjoying good health and all necessary comforts of life.

Your letter directed to us through the PILGRIM, was read in the family circle. Its breathings of christian love carried our thoughts back to the time when we were first born into the family of God's people. We remembered the sweet hours we spent together as "little children in Christ." After drying a few tears, I felt as we sometimes used to sing in Pennsylvania,

'By the grace of God we'll meet you,
In the New Jerusalem.'

Although there is a thousand miles between us, and we are at present not permitted to see each other's faces, my heart greatly rejoices in the blessed privilege we have in conversings together through this medium, through which we can learn each other's welfare and encourage each other onward in the work of righteousness and deeds of love.

My dear brother and sister, I know that you are living in a place where you are beset with many trials and temptations, and that subtle enemy, pride, lifts her head high among many professors around us, and if one thing is more dangerous to us than any other, it is pride. Pride among us as a people and our destiny is sure. Knowing that you are like-minded with me in everything, I take this privilege to say, dear brother and sister, let us still be of one mind and oppose whatever may be contrary to the doctrines of our captain Jesus, and spend our short lives on earth in the service of the Master. Yes, let the world have all her honor and glory, her lofty positions, lusts of the flesh and pride of life. I for one can say, go on in your drunkenness, but let me pass my days in sweet meditation upon my King, his wondrous works, his perfect law, and unfathomable love and wisdom, and when our days of trial are ended I do hope we may sit down in the kingdom with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and all that follow him through the regeneration. As far as I can learn, besides the Brethren, there is no other church that observes the "Lord's Supper" in its full meaning. Is it not reasonable that they who observe the type shall also enjoy the anti-type? All earthly ties are broken here through death. But the ties that bind us as a family of God's people are spiritual and death cannot sever them. Here at the Hickory Grove, we are getting along as usual. We had some very pleasant meetings through the winter, much to the edification of the Church, but none added to our numbers as yet, but we feel fully assured the labors of our dear brethren were not all in vain.

From the Rock Creek, twenty miles south of us, in Whiteside county, where the Hoomings and Haltermans from your county have settled, we have very cheering news. The little Church there was freely visited this winter, by our laboring brethren with good results. They had baptism there several times during the winter, and quite recently eight more were baptized, among whom were two sons, four daughters and one daughter-in-law of Elder Samuel Halderman's family. Truly, if there is joy in Heaven and among the saints on earth, when one sinner repents, how shall we imagine the joy of brother Samuel Halderman and his family? We saw how with many tears they prayed for the conversion of their children. We can now mingle our tears of joy with theirs, for in one day so many that were lost have been found. Their youngest daughter, "Little Sallie," yet very young, has also joined her elder brothers and sisters to help fight the battles of the Lord. May God give grace that they may all grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, fight a good fight and finally be crowned in the Lord's kingdom above.

I will now close. Hope you are all well, and if convenient to the editor, please let us hear from you again through the PILGRIM.

Our sincere love to you and all the dear brethren and sisters in Norristown. Amen. JESSE Y. HEISLER.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

Dear Brother, The white winged messenger of yesterday's issue from the PILGRIM office has reached us. I was perusing its columns, and have just read the touching piece of sister Effie Oppermans, and I thought I could not proceed further until I would pen you a few lines and enclose $1.50 to pay for sister Effie's PILGRIM. Truly such cases should move to action our most earnest sympathies. We see many calls in our religious periodicals for help for the needy poor, to build churches, to send missionaries, &c, which I fear are not heeded as they should be, by those who profess to bear the title of Christians. There are members in our denomination who I believe could spend hundreds of dollars in response to such calls, without ever missing it, but we are so prone to covetousness and to set our affections upon things of this life, that we may receive some interest rather than to give a little of the principle, and are forgetful of the fact that we are only stewards over the manifold blessings which God, in his unbounded mercy, has so kindly bestowed upon us. No doubt there are many of us who think there are others who can better afford to give than we can, but if we consider how far beyond our deserving we have been receivers of this world's goods, we will find that we have enough and to spare. I do hope that those brethren and sisters who are being lulled to quiet repose by an easy conscience, may be awakened to a sense of their duty in this direction, and that you with the other editors, may recieve the necessary sums to supply the needy. I often think if we would be a little more self denying and be content with the real necessities of this life, what an amount would be saved for charitable purposes. Some traveling pilgrims who have drank deeply of the bitter waters of affliction and have been denied the privilege of attendance in our earthly sanctuaries, and week after week and month after month have been compelled to remain in their rooms. Oh! could not such poor hearts be made glad by the weekly visits of our religious papers. How many hungry starving souls could be fed with the bread of life! How many cups of joy could be filled and made to run over, (If we know how to do good and do it not unto us it is sin) and not only in charity and alms-giving is the church neglectful of her duty but in many other ways does she need reform.

We deeply sympathize with sister Effie and her dear husband in their severe affliction, but consoling thought! they are only transitory. I fondly trust that they may in the "Sweet by and by" fully realize how much richer their temporary sorrows have made their permanent joys.

Dear brethren, may your editorial labors be richly rewarded. Press onward and upward, and if you are faithful unto the end, when you reach the sunny banks of eternal deliverance, "crowns of glory will be waiting for you."

We feel interested in our church papers. May those who feel adequate to contributing thereto be influenced to write that which will most tend to the edification of Zion, their columns continue to grow more and more instructive, and be the means of bringing many freighted souls in humble attitude to the foot of the cross.

May we all eventually be heirs to sparkling crowns, such as monarchs never wore, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

H. ELIZA BOSSERMAN.
Gettysburg, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:

The usual quiet of our neighborhood was considerably disturbed recently by the discovery of a number of human skeletons They were plowed up by one of our neighbors, and are found in the last stages of decomposition; are of ordinary size, and represent the infant, the youth and the adult. The indications are that they were deposited there many ages ago, and that they are the sad relics of the Aborigines of this country. They are about one foot below the surface, and ashes and coal, charcoal, are generally found around them.

The probabilities are that they were destroyed by there enemies and burned, as we cannot explain the existence of charcoal on any other hypothesis.

We have had an unusually mild winter. The thermometer has not been below 27° below freezing, and at times it has been as high as 40° for a week at a time, and on the 22nd ult. it reached 80° in the sun. Winter grain looks well, and stock have fully appreciated the favorable temperature.

But the most important item of news that I have to communicate to you at this writing is the return of another prodigal to the Father's house. At our next meeting, the 2nd daughter of brother and sister Pardue enters the fold of the true Shepherd. She is youthful and has the prospect of enjoying many happy days in the service of our gracious Master. May she realize the verity of the numerous "precious promises" of the Holy Book, and under the influence thereof, may her life be a living epistle to be read by her associates, and thereby win many to the compaoy of the faithful.

We are preparing for our D. M., which will assemble in Franklin Co. Business of more than ordinary interest will be transacted doubtless.

We think that the D. M. of the brotherhood should favorably consider the subject of the "Mennonite Appeal." It commends itself to the approval of all non-resistant churches.

We contemplate introducing the proposition of establishing a Publishing House under the auspices of the Church. An institution of this kind, well, conducted would accomplish much good.

You shall hear from me shortly on the subject of the 'Mennonite Appeal.'

Your brother, D. C. MOOMAW.
Blacksburg, Va

Editor Pilgrim:—

Your paper of Jan. 27, 1874, stated that the Sabbath has never been changed. Read Daniel 7: 25. "And they shall think to change times and laws." The church of Rome left out the second commandment, changed the fourth, changed Christmas from Jan: 6, to Dec. 25th. Changed the beginning of the year from March to Jan. changed the day of Easter from the last to the first of the week.

In the year 321 Constantine issued the following, "Let all the judges and town people, and the occupation of all trades, rest on the venerable day of the sun; but let those who are situated in the country, freely and at full liberty, attend to the business of agriculture."

You assert that the law was given to the Jews alone, and was binding on no other nation. God had no other chosen people. Salvation is of the Jews. "If ye are Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed" Gal. 3: 29 "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart" Rom. 2: 28, 29. Because of unbelief the Olive branches were broken off and wild Olives (Gentiles) grafted in. Rom. 2:

The ceremonial law of circumcision and sacrifice ended at the sacrifice on the cross. The decalogue had an independent origin. The commandments the Lord spoke "with a great voice," and added no more Deut. 5:22. "All the commandments are sure they stand for ever and ever" Psalms 111: 7. The Sabbath was given at creation and is two thousand three hundred years older than the Jew's who are the decendents of Judah. The Bible never says Jewish Sabbath. The Sabbath is to be kept in the new earth Isaiah 66: 22, 23.

You say the law is abolished. Abolish means to make void.—Webster. "Do we then make void the Sabbath through faith? God forbid, yea, we establish the law." Rom 3: 35. Christ says, Mathew 5: 17. Think not that I am come to destroy the law. I am not come to destroy but to fulfill." To fulfill a law means to obey it. "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least (have no part) in the kingdom of Heaven." Mathew 5: 19. Who but a transgressor would abolish the law by which we know sin? Says Paul "I had not known sin but by the law." Rom. 7: 7.

You say eight days after the resurrection they met. The Word says "after eight days." Eight days from the Sabbath would be the first but after eight days from the first would miss your day entirely. Christ appeared to the apostles while on a journey, not celebrating a day, but when they were fishing, not resting or celebrating. So you have no authority in this. As there is but one Lord there is but one Lord's day, the day the Lord blessed, sanctified, and hollowed—the Lord's holy day. "The Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath" day (Mark 2: 28,) not the first day. He never mentioned the first day in any way. Why then call the day of the Lord's birth, resurrection or ascension, the Lord's day without authority? Why wasp the word to suit your works?

Early writers never called the first day Lord's day for nearly a century after John had his vision which was ninety six years after Christ. Baptism is the authorized memorial of Christ's burial and resurrection. Rom. 3: 3, 4. CLARA MORRISON.

March, 14, 1874. }

Dear Pilgrim:—

My pen has been so occupied in answering correspondents that I have neglected to write to you, only occasionally by way of answering to many who have asked, What are the colony prospects. I will say, from present indications we have good reason to be encouraged. During February brother Christian Myers and family and son-in-law (John Moler) of Iowa arrived, also Bro. A. H. Hamm and family of Ill. Bro. Aarou and Bro. Levi Hofferd of Illinois, James A. Flory, (son of Bro. Flory of Ind.) Elias Eby (son of Bro. Eby of Mich.) and wife and a young man all arrived here, and all seem to be well pleased so far with their move. A few days ago a party from New York came in and located, and also another party of 9 from Kentucky, most of whom have taken claims here. I am now looking every day for three families of brethren that intended starting a few days ago, and when the excursion train arrives, the 4th of April, we look for a number of families of brethren and quite a crowd in general. The agent in charge of the excursion train, writes to me to have all the teams we can muster in the valley at the rail road the 4th of April. There will be a number of teams there for those who want to take a ride up the beautiful valley of the Platt. Let me say here to those who have not a correct idea of as new a section of country as this, you cannot expect plenty of work and good wages as soon as you arrive, but by and by any one not afraid of work, can work his way into business of some kind, and business and improvement will be the result of emigration and settlement, not business and improvement first and then emigration as some seem to think. From every prospect there is going to be a heavy emigration to this valley by the first of May. Already the first waves are seen where soon will roll a human sea. From Eastern papers we see there is quite an excitement about the Indians. It is singular we who live near the frontier don't know anything about the said to be troubles until we read of them in Eastern papers The fact of the trouble is there is more humbug about the matter than truth. We have the first Indian to see in this valley yet outside of the city of Denver, and know of no trouble to the whites by them.

The slaughter of the Bufalo still goes on here by the thousand. Hunters from Kansas, Nebraska and other places are here by the score and doing their daily work of slaughter and waste, many killing for the hides only. If the game law was enforced they would have to suffer heavy penalties.

The weather is now mild and pleasant, plowing and planting has commenced. The wild Geese have come, but not so the merry songsters whose voices we long to hear, reminding us that dreary winter is gone and pleasant spring is at the door. More anon.

Truly yours in love.
J. S. FLORY.

Later. March 17th. Since writing the above Bro. J. A. Reichard and wife of Md. Bro. S. S. Hummer's son, of Pa. Bro. A. E. Troyer and family and a brother of Indiana, arrived all safe and well, and on yesterday we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Brubaker and two brethren by the name of Frantz from Illinois, who are out "prospecting." i. e. looking at our valley. So you see still they come and there "yet is room."

NORA SPRINGS, IOWA.

Dear Editors:—

As you are hearing from the different churches throughout the Brotherhood, you would perhaps like to hear from the litle band of believers here in Floyd Co.

We now number about 45 members. W. J. H Beauman is our elder. John Eby and Philip Workman are our ministers. William Workman, Jacob Eby, Jacob Ankney and William Hickman are our deacons. We are doing as well as we can, are searching after truth, and do not forget the assembling of ourselves together. We have preaching nearly every Lord's day. We have had no additions recently but think there has been many good impressions made, which we hope will terminate in the conversion of many sinners. We pray that the good seed may soon not be lost, but that it may be as bread cast upon the waters to return many days hence. Though we are living up here in the cold north, our hearts are warm, but we need the assisting grace of God and the prayers of his people. We have an enemy to contend with that is ever trying to lead his people astray, and we hope dear brethren and sisters, that the little band of believers in Floyd Co. may be remembered at the throne of grace, that we may hold fast to the faith which was once delivered to the saints, and walk in the commandments of the Lord, thus setting an example to our children and the world, showing them that we have been with Christ and learned of him. Brethren and sisters, pray for our laboring brethren whose duty it is to hold forth the words of truth, that they may not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, and contend for the old land marks of the church, that it may be kept pure, so that when the master comes she may come forth ready to meet the bridegroom.

G. M. NOAH.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I will inform you of a series of meetings held in our church known as the East Nimishillen district Stark Co., Ohio. The meetings commenced on the 27th day of December and lasted six days. The Brethren that labored were J. B. Shoemaker, Stephen Yoder Moses, Weaver and others. The attendance was large and good order. We hope the Lord will bless the dear brethren for their labors of love, as there was 2 baptized, and on the next Sabbath 5 more. May they all prove faithful to the end.

Yours in love.

SAMUEL MARKLEY.

Dear Pilgrim:—

On the 17th of January, I went 9 miles to preach, in the evening, in a Presbyterian meeting house. Had a good turnout, and good attention. Spoke from Gen. 4:7. On the next day—Sabbath—I preached a funeral discourse at the same place. It included two mothers—Sister-in-laws—and four children, each mother two children. They all died a few months previous to the funeral services. I spoke from Rev. 15:22, to a very large and attentive congregation.

QUERY.

Will some brother or sister please give me an explanation through the PILGRIM, on the 7th chapter and 6th verse of Matt. "Then give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine lest they trample them under their feet and turn again and rend you." I want to know who the characters are spoken of as being the swine and the dogs, and how we may cast our pearls before them.

A. W.

CORRECTION.

In a letter of correspondence some weeks ago to the PILGRIM, in making mention of the visit of brethren Neher and Wolf of Illinois, the type made me say "two deacons of the same faith," instead of "two dear ones of the same faith" as I had it in the manuscript. As a matter of justice to brother L. Wolf please correct, as he never, to my knowledge, claimed the title of deacon.

TAKE NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that application will be made during the present session of the legislature for an extension of the act passed on the 14th day of April 1869, which applied to the courts of certain offices of the county of Huntingdon to W. C. Wagoner, J. R. Simpson and M. M. McNiel, Prothonotors of said county, and to D. R. P. Neily late Sheriff of the same, and to their assigns.

MARRIED.

SHELLY—SNIVELY.—At the PILGRIM home, by the editor, March 24, Mr David Shelly to Miss. Nancy J. Snively, all of Blair Co Pa.

DIED.

HOOVER.— On Feb. 7, 1874, Ella Isadora Hoover aged 14 years 2 months, and 17 days. Funeral services by the writer from Matt. 9:24. SAMUEL MURRAY.

BUFFINGTON.—Also on Feb. 19 1874, sister Elizabeth Buffington, aged 65 years 11 months, and 3 days. Services by the writer assisted by brother John Ulrich, from Rev 14:13. S. MURRAY.

WOLF—In Stark Co., Ohio, March 5, '74, Daniel Wolf, aged 70 years, 11 months and 20 days. He was buried at the East Nimishillen Church. Funeral services by brother David Young. S. MARKLEY.

SMITH.—In the Salimony Church, Huntington Co., Ind., March 6, '74, brother Calvin Smith. Funeral services by the writer and brother George Genet.

We could not get his age correctly, but suppose about 30 years. He was subject to spasms, and it is supposed he died in one of these spells as he was found lying on his face dead in his bed. He was on his way to a church meeting, and went as far as Samuel Friedley's were he remained over night, but instead of getting to the church meeting, he went to his long home. He leaves a wife and one child.

S. MURRAY.

BRALLIER.—In the Yellow Creek branch, near Claysburg, Blair Co., Pa., March 21, '74, sister Elizabeth Brallier, aged 85 years, 8 months and 20 days. Occasion improved from Rev 14:12-13 to a large audience by the writer. She was an exemplary sister for many years. Peace to her ashes.

STERN.—Near Woodbury, Pa., March 20, 1874, Peter Stern, a member of the R. Brethren Church, and cousin to the writer, aged 71 years, 4 mos., and 29 days. Occasion improved by Abram Bowers and John Stoner, from 1 Thess. latter part, to a very large audience. He led a pious life. He left 7 children and a discoosolate widow to mourn their loss.

(Companion please copy.)

LEONARD FURRY.

BAKER.—Near Bloomfield, Yellow Creek branch, Bedford Co., Pa., March 23, '74, Bro Levi S., son of Daniel dec'd, and Catharine Baker, aged 24 years, 9 mos, and 17 days. Occasion improved by brother J. Miller and the writer from Amos, 4:12, "Prepare to meet thy God," to a large audience. Bro. Baker was received into the church some time ago, but through heavy temptations, nature of disease and partial insanity, had withdrawn, now by sincere and penitent prayer returned to the church 6 days before his death. L. FURRY.

(Companion please copy.

MILLER.—In the Buck Creek Congregation, Miss Sarah, wife of brother Daniel Miller, March 12, 1874, aged 29 years, 5 months, and 26 days.

She was one of those peaceful creatures who are permitted out a short time to remain. She has been a devoted member of the Church for a number of years. Her death was sudden, while she was thought to be enjoying a refreshing sleep it was soon discovered that it was the sleep of death. Well might the Savior say "Be ye ready." She leaves a sorrowing husband a minister, and three little ones to mourn their loss. Her remains were deposited in the Etter burying ground near the home of her childhood. Services improved from Rev. 22:12, 13, 14, by brother Adam Pile and the writer. D M FOGELSANGER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The time for making Maple Sugar has come and we long for some "cakes," who will send them?

—Our Clover Creek brethren contemplate building a church at the lower end of Morrison's Cove, some four miles south of Williamsburg.

—Bro. J. B. Moore has just issued another work for the Brotherhood and the world. Send in your orders at once. See notice in another column.

—The Local News is a sprightly sheet just started in this place by our townsman Hugh Lindsey who, by the way, is said to be one of our best of local editors. Terms, $1.00 per year.

—Our readers seem to be on the wing as there is an unusual call for changes of addresses. It all would be careful to give us the office from which they wish them changed, it would save us considerable trouble.

—The Pilgrim from the first of April to end of the year will cost $1.15. Our agents and friends will please continue their solicitations. Each subscriber will continue to receive an Almanac free.

—We call the attention of our readers to "Lands in Colorado" in another column. Now is the time for our brethren, in want of homes to strike, as such opportunities may not always be afforded in the far West, especially in sections where the society of brethren can be enjoyed.

—Houses in West Huntingdon are being built in every direction, and the present indications are that we will have a large number of houses erected during the Summer season. If any of our readers have money to invest, come and see our inducements.

VULCAN ENRAGED.

The greatest physical eruption known in the United States, is now apparent in N. C., and we clip the following account of it from an exchange.

RALEIGH, N. C., March 10, 1874.

Intense excitement prevails here at this moment over the startling discovery of the commencement of an astounding physical convulsion in the midst of a country which for hundreds of years—as far back as tradition extends—has lain undisturbed in the perrennial growth and maturing of superficial nature.

Bald Mountain, in the western part of this State, is in a state of volcanic eruption. People who have recently arrived here are eager with the information that the farm houses and cottages along the sides and the base of the mountain have been thrown down by the rocking of the great mass to its foundation.

Many of the inhabitants have fled in fear and terror to seek safety elsewhere from the terrible devastations which may result from the amazing phenomenon.

A thin vapor issues from the top of the mountain, and an upheaval of fire and lava from the deep bowels of the earth is hourly expected. There is a low, rumbling sound of mighty volume constantly audible over the entire surface of the mountain, and the snow melts as fast as it falls from the heavens.

A messenger who arrived here this morning is in search of some scientific man who will visit the scene and make a report upon the natural events that may occur. The newspapers will dispatch correspondents to-morrow. I will start for the volcano at the earliest possible moment and describe it from personal observation.

LITERATURE.

—Scribner's Monthly, for April contains the opening chapters of "The Mysterious Island" by Jules Verne. It is profusely illustrated, and promises as much ingenuity and interest as the former writings of this famous author. In Edward King's continuation of the Great South we are treated this time to a "Ramble in Virginia." The same author also contributes a poem on the death of Parepa-Rosa, which must be admired by all who read it. The paper which will attract the most attention is from the pen of Augustus Blaurelt, on "Christ's Resurrection Scientifically Considered," which occupies twenty-two pages. Among the remaining contents are papers of interest on various subjects. (Scribner & Co., N. Y.)

—Atlantic Monthly for April, in addition to its recent improvements, has now caught the inspiration which the Spring has bro't, and this month, is more than usually attractive in the variety and quality of its contents; varied as they are from grave to gay, from lively to serene. The poems are by E. C. Steadman, C. P. Cranch, Elizabeth Stewart Phelps and others, and are of the readable kind. David A. Wells discusses the currency question, and exposes the fallacy of an irredeemable paper currency. Every department is full and interesting. No one can go amiss by subscribing for the Atlantic. (H. O. Houghton, & Co. ; Boston.)

—Popular Science Monthly, which completes its fourth volume with the April No. continues to increase in worth and interest with each successive issue. The Age of Ice, The Pathology of the Passions, Images and Shadows, Vivisection, What the Chemistry of the Rocks teaches, Evolution and the Origin of Life, On the Aesthetic Sense of Animals, A year of Geographical Work, The Mantis or Praying Insect, Sketch of Prof. Huxley; all this with very much besides contained in this number. (D. Appleton & Co. ; N. Y.)

—The Sanitarian has removed from 111 & 113 William street, to 234 Broadway, opposite the Post Office. The April number commences a new volume, and comes to us greatly improved, and with a very attractive table of contents.—Drainage for Health, concerning College Life, Warming and Ventilation, Water, Nitrous Oxide Gas, Artificial Feeding of Children, are among some of the articles, the last named of which itself is worth many times the annual subscription price. (Sanitarian; N. Y.)

—St. Nicholas, which is acknowledged to be the best and handsomest youth's magazine ever published, still continues under the able editorship of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge. The April number contains thirty-six illustrations, and many articles on topics sure to interest and instruct the young, by the best writers in the land. It is difficult to conceive how so much that is meritorious can be brought together, month after month, in one periodical. (Scribner & Co. N. Y.)

—The Phrenological Journal, in all matters of progress occupies the front rank, even greatly in advance of more pretentious periodicals. Every number contains interesting texts enough from which to fill volumes. (S. R. Wells ; N. Y.)

—To-day Printing and Publishing Company is pushing forward its work with commendable enterprise. To-Day, the paper which gives its name is still improving, and presents a healthful appearance. Every subscriber to it is presented with his choice of one of the beautiful chromos executed for that purpose—"Just So High," "Little Sunshine," or "Among the Dew-Drops." Each of these is a gem of art, and would compare favorably with the more expensive pictures. The new book of "American Humor" by Max Adeler,—Out of the Hurly-Burly—announced some time ago will soon be ready. (To-Day Pub. Co. Philada.)

—The Christian at Work has more than fulfilled every promise of excellence, and it possesses attraction and a value to the Christian reader seldom found in any other periodical. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage is editor, and Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon of London, special contributor. These, besides many other able writers, constantly contribute to enrich its pages, with wholesome christirn instruction. It has recently been enlarged and we hope, may accomplish great things for Christ and His Kingdom. (H. C. King: N. Y.)

WANTED TO BE HEARD FROM.

If anybody has ever used the thorough and scientific course of treatment recommended by the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for the cure of Catarrh and has not been perfectly cured, the proprietor, Dr. R. V. Pierce, would like to hear from that person, and by addressing him at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., such person, if there be one, will hear of something to his or her advantage, as the Doctor is in earnest when he offers $500 reward for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, and is perfectly able to pay it if he fails in a single case, as any one may ascertain upon inquiry. The thorough course of treatment referred to and recommended by Dr. Pierce consists in the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche which is the only means by which the fluid can be carried high up and applied to all parts of the nasal passages and the chambers connected therewith in which ulcers exist and from which the discharge proceeds. In addition to this thorough application of the Remedy which should always be used warm, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery should be taken earnestly as constitutional treatment, without which few cases can be cured as the disease is always constitutional and must be treated accordingly. This treatment has no unpleasant features about it, and has the advantage of never driving the disease to the lungs as there is danger of doing by the use of strong, irritating snuffs or poisonous solutions.

PLAIN FACTS.

FRANKFORT, Mich., Sept. 12, 1873.

A year ago I had a bad cough from the Catarrh which had got in my throat. I tried a good many things but got nothing to do me any good until I used your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They cured me in three months for which I am very thankful.

THE SUN.

WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies and the markets for the men, especially the cattle-markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have The Weekly Sun at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

We have no travelling agents.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six columns. Only $1.00 a year. No discounts from this rate.

POETRY.

PRAYER,—A SONNET.

BY WESLEY.

The power that thwarts the purposes, matured
Where dwell lost spirits, by sins glitter lured;
Lifting the soul from out Egyptian night,
To bathe in oceans of eternal light,
Vanquishing the last of fair virtue's foes,
By which the world would fain the march oppose.
Prayer wafts the incense of the sacrifice
Which up from Calvary's crest doth sweetly rise,
Perfuming ever with a holy balm
The heart of fallen sorrow—laden man:
Prayer brings the Christian o'er the surging wave
Which unbelief's dark mountain-base doth lave,
And when the portal he by prayer doth win,
Prayer ope's the gate and lets the pilgrim in.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay. Matt. 28: 6.

Being about the time in the year that our Savior arose from the dead, I thought proper in this essay to say something on this point, inasmuch as it is a prominent one in our faith, and the finishing stroke of the Christian religion. Christ had repeatedly told His disciples of His death and subsequent resurrection, but it seemed dark and mysterious to them. He did miracles too wonderful for any one to perform, but a divine personage, and on one occasion, Peter, the leader of that little band, boldly and unhesitatingly acknowledged Him to be "Christ the Son of the living God." But when he was taken by wicked hands, and condemned by the Roman Governor to be crucified, and they beheld Him slain on mount Calvary, His dead body pierced with a spear through His pericardium, whenceforth issued blood and water; buried in the rock, and a great stone rolled against the door of His sepulcher, and sealed with Pilate's seal; yea, even with a guard surrounded to watch His lifeless body, their faith failed, hope lost and they returned with a despondent heart and a troubled and perplexed mind. "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel: and besides all this, to-day is the third since these things were done," said some of them, as he appeared unto them incognito. But holy women, who loved their Lord too dearly to be forgotten by them, who previously had prepared "sweet spices" to anoint his body, came early in the morning, the first day of the week, "at the rising of the sun, unto the sepulcher, reasoning among themselves, "Who shall roll away the stone from the sepulcher?" But "Vain the stone, the watch, the seal,

Christ hath burst the gates of hell,
Death in vain forbids his rise,
Christ hath opened Paradise."

Mary Magdalene to whom the Lord appeared first, after His triumphant resurrection, had the honor to preach or announce her lovely Savior's victorious resurrection to his chosen followers. "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee and there shall they see me." This was the second charge they had received to make this declaration. (Matthew says, two women, and Mark mentions only one.) The angel that rolled away the stone said unto them, "Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here for he is risen as he said, come see the place where the Lord lay, and go quickly, and tell his disciples, that he is risen from the dead."

Is it not remarkable in the arrangement of Divine Providence that women should be commissioned by a messenger from God, and from the great Redeemer of mankind to first spread forth the glorious news of the rising of Him who is the resurrection and the life; and through whose power every man will be resurrected? May not God have a design in it, as women are said to be the weaker vessel yet being heirs together with men of the grace of life? As woman has been deceived, and thereby been the first in transgression, so by a woman was born the Redeemer of man; by a woman His head was anointed for his burial; and woman had the honor of seeing Him and making known His resurrection previous to man, signifying that the female sex have the same privilege to the Gospel means, to secure a right to the Tree of Life. Glory be to God, let His power be exalted, and praise be to His holy name, and thanks be multiplied for the invaluable boon, the precious gift in sending His Son, Jesus Christ our Savior and Redeemer! He has loosed the bands of death, burst its bars and triumphed over the grave. He led hell captive and opened the gate into Paradise He destroyed the power of the devil over death, and obtained forever the "keys of hell and death."

"He lives forever, wondrous King!
Born to redeem and strong to save;
Then ask the monster where's thy sting,
And where's thy victory boasting grave?"

Brethren and sisters let us not forget the resurrection, for it is the crowning of our Christian religion, it is the climax of our faith, the top stone of our hope, as an anchor for the soul, both sure and steadfast and will bring us within the vail and into the presence of Him who was the first in the resurrection, and the first to enter in at the portals of heaven, in order to enjoy never-ending bliss, and incomprehensible happiness. Come then with the Marys and see where the Lord lay, and do not shrink from the terrors of death, neither be afraid of the grave, where your body must return to corruption. No, no, Jesus died that we should live. He was laid in the grave, the door was fastened with a heavy stone, sealed with the Governor's seal and the grave watched by a strong guard; but what can man do against the power of God. "He arose for our justification..and if we live faithful to the end, though our vile body must return to dust, yet shall our souls live by the power of God. In the bright morning of the resurrection we shall be called from our graves, clothed with an immortal body and springing into everlasting life, there to live in the presence of God and the Lamb forever and ever. Amen.

THE WILL.

For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother sister and mother. Matt. 12: 50.

This is an expression Jesus made when his disciples informed him of the desire of his mother and brethren who were without to speak with him; and we are informed that he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples and said, "Behold my mother and my brothers;" hence the above as a subject concerning the will, and in that will we are informed that "God so loved the world that he gave his Only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world might be saved." John 3: 16, 17. And now may arise the question, how is this salvation to be, and what from? The answer is, from the second death. For it is declared that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. Now in this passage may be understood the death of the body as also a spiritual or divine death, for as in Adam all die, so in Christ all are made alive. Unto Joseph it was revealed to call his name Jesus for he shall save his people from their sins.

But my dear brethren and fellow travelers to the bar of God, what dark and solemn scenes hung behind the curtain, before the plan of salvation was fully exemplified and the will ratified. Suppose we go back to little Bethlehem and behold the babe wrapped in swadling clothes lying in a manger, as the wise men beheld him, poor in worldy comforts. But the crafty and treacherous Herod was disappointed, by the providence of God, the wise men not gratifying him in his request. How solemn consequences! The little children from two years and under put to death. Think of it fathers, think of it mothers, brothers and sisters, what the little martyrs of Bethlehem had to endure as a beginning in the plan of salvation, and all this sorrow and suffering was brought about by the envy and malice of the devil, and that we understand to annul the promise of God to Adam and Eve when they were deceived and overcome. But thanks to God, he did not succeed nor never can succeed in fighting against God. This is a glorious consolation.

We will now direct the reader, concerning the will, to the gospel of St. Luke. Read the whole chapter. I will quote the 49th verse. "And he said unto them, how is it that ye sought me; wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." This we must remember was spoken by the Savior of the world at the age of 12 years.—This—his parents did not understand, but we are glad to know that some in our day understand some of the things of the will at the age of 12 years, and are willing to try and do them, and thus become willing to be subject to their heavenly Father's will, as he was to his earthly parents. Now the next account we have of Jesus is when he was about 30 years. He leaves Nazareth a town in Galilee and comes to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him, but John forbade him, but the answer of Jesus was according to the will, "Suffer it to be so for thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness." Then he suffered him. And O happy approval! Heaven opens, the Holy Ghost descends in a bodily shape like a dove and lighting upon him, the voice from Heaven calls him his beloved son in whom he is well pleased.

Next we find this loving Jesus following up the will in the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. But here he comes in quite a different way from his agents at Bethlehem. "If thou be the son of God command that these stones be made bread," trying to get Jesus to disbelieve his divinity and obey the devil Reader, is he not a crafty devil? What he cannot accomplish as a roaring Lion he will try to do in sheep's clothing.

But to the comforting reply of Jesus, "Man liveth not by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Dear reader, observe as good feelings or meaning may dictate, like King Saul of old and loose the legacy offered in the will, but by every word that proceedeth out of the erful for the great cause of peace and many would thus be brought into such intimate relations with us that the work of "teaching them the way of the Lord more perfectly" would be more than half accomplished.

The voice of humanity alone should be sufficient to impel us to action. If they are unable finally to escape their persecutors it is easy to perceive the great distress that will surround them. The rigid discipline of the army knows no mercy and but one fate will await them and that fate is death, either temporal or spiritual.

A surrender of principle is always worse than death, and if they preserve that inviolate they have no alternative but the inexorable sentence of the merciless courtmartial.

Being thus impelled by humanity, by conscience, by the Gospel, by prudence, and by every principle that urges men to action, we will respond with commendable ardor the appeal. Let every District meeting constitute itself a committee to raise all the available means, and transmit them to the point where they are wanted. I think that the brethren should have its agents associated with those of the Mennonites in order to insure general satisfaction. As there are others that have a larger experience in arranging the practical parts of such enterprises, we will close this communication by praying the divine blessing upon His holy cause. Your brother D. C. MOOMAW.

Blacksburg Va.

WORK IS HONORABLE.

Dear Pilgrim: —

Christ said, "Go work to-day in my vineyard," that is to us who are living. To-day he calls upon us, to-morrow may come, but for it we have no promise—it belongs not to us but to God, and if it does come to us the command still is, go and work in my vineyard, and ought to be still more binding as we are one day nearer our end, one day less to live. If to-morrow was promised we would put off the important work one day longer and still be no better prepared, the work would still be left undone, hence the Savior says, "To-day." One day at a time is sufficient for both temporal and spiritual labor, and if well used and to-morrow should not come, we are ready for the change, and if it does come our accounts are squared and we are prepared to commence work with a conscience that will allow us to look our fellow men in the face, and with a light heart, have the assurance of a reconciled God.

When the PILGRIM made its first visit to my family we were all much pleased with its eight pages filled with precious promises to cheer up the hearts and minds of the family circle. It was soon read by each member of the family, affording a general good time to all, the clouds were swept away from our minds, the burden from our hearts, and we not only enjoyed a treat but a feast. As we found the new comer an agreeable friend and full of instruction, and loved by the children, I concluded that I had better write a few lines to the editor, under whose control it comes forth, and invite its weekly visits, and as I did not feel to be selfish and enjoy all the good things myself, I got to working for it so that others might also have the pleasure and advantage of reading its pages. This I think to be a work that the workmen need not be ashamed of, as the cause which the PILGRIM advocates is a good one, one that should be heralded forth to the world without reserve. The PILGRIM's field should be greatly enlarged and could be done if the Brotherhood could give its united support. Not only should a few known cases of want share the sympathy of the good, but hundreds and thousands should cast in their mites until the publisher could afford to send it broad cast over the United States, until every valley shall be made to rejoice at the glad tidings it brings. May it go from city to city and from State to State until the young are led to Christ, the middle aged to know God, and the old and infirm made to bow to their Creator God.

A SUBSCRIBER.

SOMETHING FOR THE CHURCHES TO CONSIDER.

As the time is drawing near for the holding of the District Meetings, and prepare matter for Annual Meeting, we propose a query for all the churches to consider, and then send it up to the District Meetings and then to Annual. Many are fully persuaded that a more systematical, economical and judicious manner of holding our Annual Meeting is needed, that the high and holy character of the Church and the humble religion of Christ may be exhibited in its own true colors, lest it becomes a second centennial exhibition instead of prophets and apostles bearing the ark of the New Covenant. We believe from the tenor of the Scriptures that when Jesus was in council with the Father, he retired either in the mountain or some desert place (it may be said to pray), yes, that he may know and do his will. How unlike in this fast age of the world. If the object of the Annual Meeting is to learn or know the will of the Father, would not that end be more readily gained by a properly organized body in a more retired manner, and not solicit all the rail road corporations to throw open their lines to all the world to flood in and swell the number by which the object and virtue is lost by the great commotion.

Therefore we now propose that the churches consider the following query: 1. Resolved that the churches form the Annual Meeting, and not the Annual Meeting the churches, as the different churches were formed first. Then, if so, Resolved that each church organized, shall representatively form the Annual Meeting, and that each church or organization be represented by two delegates, and each district send one as standing committee, those to constitute the Annual Meeting, continue the liberty of free discussion as before, but all queries to be decided by that body. And further, that we favor a report of the proceedings, which will give ample satisfaction, so the rest will tarry at home and meet in a church capacity in prayer and fasting in their behalf.

We now submit this to the churches hoping some will feel interested enough to have the matter considered. Yours in love. PETER S. MYERS.

McVeytown, Pa.

That there is a needed reform in the manner of holding our Annual Conference is evident to every one who has given the matter a proper investigation, especially to that part of the church that is interested in the result of the deliberations of our Conference. That many queries do not receive the care and investigation they should, must be admitted, yet we do not feel to censure as they are done about as well as the present arrangement will admit, hence the Church feels to demand a change, and the above plan submitted by brother Myers certainly presents some advantages over our present system. This plan has been submitted to the Church before and was favorably received by a large number of the membership, and we hope that all such churches as feel interested in a move of this kind will have it brought up to the District Meetings and thus prepare it for the adoption of our Annual Conference.

BUFFALO, Col., March. 19, '74.

Dear brethren and sisters: —

Having promised many brethren and friends in Indiana to write to them after we landed in Colorado, we now inform them that we are still well for which we try to be thankful to the Giver of all good. Myself and family left Bro. Sturgis, South Bend, Ind., March 10, and landed at Julesburg, Col., on the morning of the 12th, where we had the pleasure of meeting with brother Christian Myers, who took us to his home. After three days travel up the Platte River we came to the house of brother Myers, Saturday, 14, found his family well and well pleased with the country. We were much better pleased with the country than we really expected. Sunday. March 15, we, in company with brother Myers' family, traveled up the Platte River about twelve miles when we came to the house of brother J. S. Flory, had a good little meeting. We were addressed by brother Flory, from the words, "What must I do to be saved?" We think brother Flory did his part. O, how pleasant to see brethren and sisters agree, all of one mind, all willing to obey God.

After preaching, we took dinner with brother Flory, then we, in company with brother Flory, returned to brother Myers' and stayed over night. Monday morning, 16, myself and brother Reichard, in company with brother Flory, went up the River to take claims, where we expect to soon locate. This is a fine country for health, agriculture and stock raising. In our judgment there is no better place than the South Platte Valley of Colorado. Brethren who have not good homes in the Eastern States we think can do well in coming to the Platte Valley, Colorado. We hope if the good Lord be willing, to soon have a prosperous church here. May the Lord be with us all now and forever is my prayer.

A. E. TROYER.

South Platte, Col.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—

I will try to offer a few thoughts through the PILGRIM in order to stir up our minds, as it seems to me that some of us are getting too careless about our souls Salvation. If we would think a little more of Jesus and His sacred truths it would be far better for us than it is, but it seems that Satan is still at work, and we are willing to hear him in his falsehood, rather than hear Christ and his word. The reason is that it suits our carnal mind better but brethren let us get rid of that and get the mind of Christ, when he said "Get thee hence Satan for it is written thou shall love thy God and him only shall thou serve." Often we step aside that we would not, if this was our mind, and we also would be more and more concerned about our Father's business as he was always trying to do good. I some times think brethren if we would go to church more, we might do more good, than we do. I am sorry to say that some brethren get an idea that they can not do any good by going to meeting; but I would say that you are sadly mistaken, you can do much good, your presence is a great help to your speaker; it helps him much and makes your light shine brighter, and not only so, it will do your soul good and cause you to live a more christian life. So brethren and sisters, let us all be a little more careful the few days we have yet allotted unto us for we no not when the Son of Man cometh. O then let us have our lights shining bright, and the oil of grace in our vessels that we may be able to enter in when the Bridegroom comes.

May God help us to be faithful until death is the prayer of your unworthy servant.

G. W. FESLER.

Dear Pilgrim

As an explanation is requested on Matt. 5: 42, I will give a few thoughts on the subject.

The Scripture reads as follows:

"Give to him that asketh thee; and to him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away."

The Scripture means what the Savior intended it to mean, but to apply it to every case and circumstance that we may be placed in, will not do. For instance, a person may be intoxicated and ask you to give him a quarter of a dollar, and go right away and spend it for more ardent spirits.

We are taught in the Holy Writ to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, so if we know, or have fears that a person would spend what he asked for, in a way that would not be beneficial to him, and be as ungodly as drunkenness or the use of tobacco is; wisdom will teach us not to give it and likewise in every other case that we know our means would be spent in ways which the word of God forbids. We would better withold them from such people because we would, by giving, help them to commit sin. So I don't believe that our Savior means that we should give in every case, but has a great regard for the needy, which I do believe our Savior had more particular reference to. If we question those who ask of us, we can very often detect them when there is an ill design. but we should be very careful and not refuse to give to the needy if we have it. But the question may be asked, what are we to do with those beggars who are going through the country, who we are not acquainted with, and are not able to detect them? Well, the Savior does not say how much we are to give, and my way of doing with such is to give them something, yet at the same time if I knew my money will be used for an ill purpose, I would keep it from them. But let us ever have an eye on the needy, for "God loveth a cheerful giver," and there is a query given to us in Scripture saying, "whoso hath this world's goods, and sees his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in that man."

J. B. MILLER.

ANSWER TO QUERY

In PILGRIM No. 13, by A. W.

The characters represented by the words dogs and swine in those texts are doubtless the persons who are really or nearest like those animals with respect to Divine things. The animals named dogs and swine are living creatures possessing many instinctive qualities and forces of the natural man, and are also susceptible of a degree of culture and development; but they are wholly destitute of the divine element. There is no avenue by which that element can reach their being to be a constituent part of it.

Think of taking consecrated bread, of giving thanks for it as such bread, and of administering it to a hungry, whining masstiff admitted to the Lord's table! This is the germinal, primary or natural condition of the word of God as "a savor of life unto life," but there will always be a transition from the natural to the spiritual. Therefore if we know persons whose condition morally and spiritually represents that of the best dog, we should not give, nor consent to the giving of such holy things to them.

Imagine of a number of fierce, gaunt, hungry wild boars in hot pursuit of you, and of throwing diamonds worth millions of dollars before them to keep them from tearing you! There is a word in the english language,—expediency, which I think overleaps the same chasm as the text about swine. When these subjects are spiritually discerned the natural dogs and swine drop off like shells from kernels. They grow into principles which the followers of Christ apply more particularly to themselves than to others. The animals mentioned are like guide-posts along the way, which you regard as directors and not as the place to which you want to go.

Dear Pilgrim: In order to save so much writing to our brethren and sisters who wish to help us some towards building a house of worship, I give this notice. I have received several letters lately asking at what office to have the orders payable. My nearest point is Forest City, Holt Co., Mo. Be sure that you spell my name correctly and in a plain hand. It is important to have the name of the person to whom the money is sent spelled correctly. There is now a letter in Moond City directed to John Miler instead of John H. Miller. It contains money and the post master will not let him have it, because it is Miler instead of Miller.

Brethren, we are happy to know you have love toward us and God our heavenly Father by sending your mite to aid us a little toward building, and we are sorry to lose any kind gift you send us, and that by not having the name correctly spelled. Please notice how our names are spelled. A. J. Correll, Craig, Holt Co., money orders payable at Forest City, John H. Miller, Mound City, Holt Co., Mo. Money orders payable at Forest City, Mo. We have received $58 75. Our love to all.

Mr. Editor:

In reply to the query asked in No. 8, Vol. 5 concerning the two witnesses spoken of in the 11th chapter, 3rd verse of Revelation, by A. Wood, I beg to offer my humble opinion who I think the two witnesses are.

We read in the 7th verse of the same chapter, that the two witnesses are two olive trees.

Let us refer to the 4th chapter of Zech.: 3—6, where it is explained that the two olive trees are taken to represent the Word of God. Our Lord and Master says of the Old Testament Scriptures: "They are they which testify of me." John 5: 36. "My works bear witness of me."

Now, it is only through the medium of the New Testament, where we find them recorded, that His works bear witness of Him to us. It is written, "The Gospel shall be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations."

Now by comparing the one with the other, i. e., the Old with the New, I think we can come to the conclusion that one of the witnesses is the Old Testament, given in the one dispensation, and the other is the Gospel dispensation.

HENRY HERSHBERGER.

DIED.

CHILCOT E.—At Matilda Furnace, on the 14th ult., Hethcote Chilcote, aged about 74 years.

COMANCE.—In Logan congregation, Logan county Ohio, Sarah Comance, aged about 70 years. Disease, dropsy. Funeral service by the writer, by request, from 1. Cor. 15: 22.

KAYLOR.—In the same congregation, on the 10th inst., infant son of brother Jos. and Sister Jemima Kaylor. Funeral preached by Eld Jos. N. Caulman.

J. L. FRANTZ.

FISHER.—In the Mexico Church on the 13th day of March 1874, Sister Martha Fisher, aged 28 years, 9 months, and 12 days. Funeral services by the brethren, from the following, "Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24: 44.

J. B. LAIR.

CLINE.—In Hopewell congregation, Bedford county Pa., on March the 19, 1874, Sister Esther Cline, wife of David Cline, aged 39 years 9 months, and 27 days.

Disease, measles. She leaves behind a husband and six children, to mourn the loss of a kind mother. Funeral services by the writer from Rev. 14: 13. J. S. RUSH.

HART.—Sister Mary Annie, consort of brother Samuel Hart, and daughter of Daniel Garver deceased, late of Wayne county Ohio.

She was born January 26th 1824, united in matrimony with Samuel Hart Dec. 11 1843, and both united with the Brotherhood, lived in Ashland county and were members of the Black River congregation. On Monday March the 2nd 1874, she had a presentiment that something was wrong at her sister's who is married to Joseph Hull, living in Logan county, about seven miles off. This she had from a dream which she had the night previous, in which she saw many people and carriages &c., at Hull's, and as brother Hart was going to Wellington that day, she said she would go along as far as Hull's, and see what it meant. She found all as usual at Sister Hull's, but she never returned to her own home until she was brought home a corpse. On the night of the same day in which she arrived at sister Hull's she received a violent attack of sickness which baffled all the aid that human skill could bring. On Monday morning the 9th her spirit took its flight we trust to brighter worlds on high. On the 11th her remains were deposited in the graveyard at the Homer meeting house, a very large concourse of people being present. Occasion improved from 2. Cor. 4: 6, 7, 8. She had expressed herself in the memorable words of St. Paul, "I have fought a good fight," &c. Thus ends the earthly career of the faithful wife, the affectionate mother of 8 children, the kind neighbor and exemplary Christian. To her children we would wish to dedicate her good name and christian virtue.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bro. J. B. Garver of Mount Union, Pa., has moved to Cumberland Co., Pa. May success crown his efforts in his new field of labor.

THE Brethren of the Aughwick congregation, Huntingdon county, Pa., are building a new meeting house in Hill Valley. They expect to have it completed some time in May.

THROUGH an oversight Bro. Sayler's article of last week is not continued this week as it should have been. Will appear next week. Please excuse.

We direct special attention to the resolution proposed by brother Myers in another column. It is surely a matter worthy of consideration by the Churches.

THE first of April is here, and our friends should be at work soliciting subscribers for the PILGRIM. Please look around and do not fail to call on all who ought to read it. Only $1.15, from the first of April.

THE Rev. Henry Ward Beecher in the congregational battle leans against the strong support of Plymouth Church, and defies his assailants. He expects to stand until Plymouth church gives way.

OUR Correspondents in writing to us will please send us all the news. You need not be lengthy in detail. Give it in the fewest words possible, and it will be the more acceptable to our readers.

WE would much prefer that those sending obituary notices would not send poetry in connection with them. Our columns are too much crowded to admit poetry, and further it is not beneficial to our readers.

THE Christian Oynocure, a paper devoted to the opposing of secret societies, is to be enlarged. It is a neatly and well gotten up paper, and those of our brethren who desire to be versed in the evils of secret organizations will do well to read it.

BRO. Quinter of the Companion has now moved with his family to Dale City, where he expects to devote his time and attention to the Companion. Our impression is that Bro. Q. is the "right man in the right place," and hope much good may result from his labors.

LOTS can yet be had in West Huntingdon in good locations for fair prices for cash. Any of our brethren who might desire to locate here, will do well to call around now and make a purchase. We would be much pleased to have some of our brethren make their home here, and we think a more desirable location can not be found anywhere in town.

THE Poems appearing under the signature of "Wesley" are not selections from the Rev. John Wesley as some of our readers suppose. Wesley was by no means a noted poet. The poems are written expressly for the PILGRIM by a young man residing in this vicinity. See in another column advertisement of poems, which every one should have. Send for them; they are worth double the price asked for them.

SISTER Kate Gambell of California says, "We are having beautiful weather now. The crops are looking splendid and promise fair for a bounteful harvest. Farming is carried on very extensively here, one farmer putting out as high as a thousand acres. We think our rainy season is about over, though we have occasional showers. The hills and valleys are covered with wild flowers, and the orchards are in full bloom. Grass and clover is up a foot high. It looks like May or June in the Eastern States. I am going down South about 200 miles or perhaps farther, and then I will give you a description of the country down there, as it may be interesting to some who think of going there.

A Subscriber says, "I am not a member of your church, yet I feel it my duty as a subscriber to acknowledge the value of the PILGRIM as a Christian paper. I esteem it because its columns are filled with religious instruction, such as we should accept and improve upon, and become better men and better women, and thereby better qualified to labor in the Christian cause."

Just so, and we hope you may ever continue thus to appreciate the PILGRIM visits to your home. Its object is to do good, and we hope that ere long you may labor with us having "obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

WHAT LIQUOR COSTS THE COMMUNITY.

From the official record of 1870, multiplied by four, bringing it down to this time, it appears that the cost of stimulating drinks (alcoholic) in the United States was, in round numbers, $5,948,000,000; time lost in retailing stimulants, at $2 per day, for four years, amounts to $408,800,000, value of time of those whose lives (600,000 in four years) have been destroyed by strong drink, at $2 per day, in the last four years, $430,000,000; expenses for crime committed, lawyers' fees, and prisons—a large share of which is chargeable directly or indirectly to strong drink—$360,000,000; making in the aggregate from these four sources, $7,146,800,000. This does not include the pauperism and suffering directly and indirectly from this cause.

The taxation for crime and pauperism comes out of men who have no sympathy with this branch of doing evil. It is true it yields some revenue to the Government; but what is this to the unparalleled destruction of life, and property, and happiness? Let the people look upon these figures and facts, and then at the heavy burdens they are bearing in all departments in business, and inquire if they are able to stand the satisfying of so expensive an appetite, doing no citizen good, but sending to a premature grave 600,000 persons every four years. Let "workingmen" talk of the oppression of capital; what does this compare with the oppression of the very thing they pay for by the 5 and 15 cents per drink? Let Grangers talk of "monopolies," what are they in comparison to the whiskey-monopoly spreading blue ruin all over our country.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

CAN'T DO WITHOUT IT.

A brother in writing to us says, "I thought I would do without the Pilgrim for 1874, but I feel lost without it, and must have it." This has been the way with a large number of these who concluded to do without the Pilgrim this year, and no doubt before the volume closes all will renew their subscriptions. We are glad that the Pilgrim is giving general satisfaction, and from the many words of approval we are receiving from our correspondents, we feel much encouraged, and will labor to make it more and more appreciated by its patrons, and while we are thus laboring we hope to have the united efforts of our friends to help us.

THE LORD'S PROMISES.

When men make a promise and do not fulfill it for a long time, we infer that they are likely to fail in meeting their engagements. This failure we may attribute to a number of causes. They may have changed their plans, they may have forgotten their promises, they may not have the ability to perform them, or it may be a want of principle, and hence regardless of their obligations. All these interferences may prevent men from fulfilling their promises, and often, very often, are promises unfulfilled.

But none of these interferences will prevent the fulfillment of God's promises. They may seem to be long in the future yet we can feel assured that they will all come to pass, and we should not become impatient and disheartened in regard to them. There is no doubt a grand purpose in delaying these glorious promises. God earnestly desires that men shall enjoy them, and therefore gives time and opportunity to prepare, so as to be the worthy recipients of these promises. In view of this the apostle Peter says, "The Lord is not slack concerning His promises, but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Let us not then become impatient; the apparent delay is only for our good. The promises of the Lord are sure, saith the Psalmest, and if we improve the time and secure salvation, we shall speedily realize how glorious and good they are. J. B. B.

BE NOT IDLE.

A friend who has a vineyard remarked that there would be enough work in it to keep him busily employed during the entire Summer, and this reminded us, that Christ likens the Kingdom of Heaven unto a man that had a vineyard, and there was so much to do in it that he employed every man he met. He went out at a very late hour in the day to employ hands, and when he saw some standidg idle, He saith unto them, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" Reader, Christ bids you go and work in His vineyard, and there is enough to do in it to keep you employed all the days of your life. He is out early in the morning, at the third hour, at the sixth, at the ninth, and even at the eleventh, trying to hire you. Will you stand idle when there is so much to do? You who are young and in the morning of life, has no one hired you? Has not Christ bid you come into His vineyard? Ah, yes, He has not only bid you come, but He is earnestly pleading for you to come, and yet you stand idle. What do you suppose the good man would have thought of those who were standing idle if they had not been willing to be hired? Would he not have censured them much more severely for being idle? Yes, verily so. And so will you, who are unwilling to labor in Christ's vineyard, come under the censure and displeasure of God. An idler! How indifferent we are towards the idle, lazy man. There is no sympathy for such, and if they would not work at all, the industrious would be disposed to let them starve. What will be the condition of those who stand idle all the days of their life when Christ comes to reckon with them? Will He give them a penny? No; mercy will be overcome by justice, and, like the man that hid his talent in the earth, the idler will be cast into outer darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then why stand idle when you are so earnestly solicited to labor for Christ? Is the promised reward not sufficiently great and glorious? O who can stand idle in view of the exceeding great and precious promises to the faithful servants of God?

Reader, get to work. Your service is needed. The Church needs you to help advance the Master's cause. It needs you in the sanctuary, in the Sabbath school, in society in general, to hold up Jesus and the cross to a dying world. You who are young are needed; your influence is wanted in favor of Jesus and His cause. You who are older should not be idle because the day time of your life, the time allotted unto you for to work, is far spent. Then

"Work for the night is coming.
Work through the morning hours;
Work while the dew is sparkling,
Work mid springing flowers.

Work while the day grows brighter,
Work in the glowing sun;
Work for the night is coming
When man's work is done."

J. B. B.

REPENTANCE.

"Except ye repent ye shall likewise perish.

This is the terrible denunciation of Jesus to the Jews who were at that time listening to his discourse. And this declaration is just as positive, and terrible to the sinner to-day. Except you repent dear reader, you will perish, perish soul and body, and that too, everlastingly. Perish! What amount of misery there is in this little word! Can any one comprehend its full import? Not any but lost souls, and they are ever discovering it to be woe deeper and deeper. This woe, this incomprehensible misery, will be yours unless you repent. Dear reader, let me entreat you to think of this matter. Tremble at the thought of this misery, and pray God to give repentance."

But what is repentance? Is it merely a sorrow for sin? From what the apostle says we infer that it is something more. "Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of." Sorrow for sin is a part of repentance, but is not in itself repentance, for the Scripture quoted evidently makes a distinction between them. Men may grieve over their sins yet never repent of them, that is, they may mourn over the consequence of sin, but not on account of sin itself To illustrate: We may wrong our fellow man and he may require us to repent of that wrong, and make certain conditions, by which we can be reinstated into his favor and confidence. If these conditions are just, so long as we fail to comply with them we sin against him. There is a penalty affixed to these conditions and absolute power to enforce it. We as subjects when contemplating upon the nature and severity of this penalty, may feel sorry that we have been disobedient, not that we have any sympathy for the man whom we have wronged, but simply because of the punishment. We may have feelings of the greatest enmity towards him, yet we may feel sorry that we have not required with his conditions in view of the approaching punishment which he has power to inflict. So it with God; we have wronged him, and now he requires us to repent of that wrong, and has given certain conditions by which we may be reinstated into our primeval state and condition. These conditions are just and to them there is a penalty affixed that follows from disobedience. As long as we are disobedient, we are sinners against God, and when we are sorry for our sins merely because of the punishment, we have not truly repented. We must feel that the conditions are just, we must feel that we have wronged God, we must have an affection for God; our sympathies must be awakened, in short, there must be a change of mind. This we think is the true idea of repentance. It requires an entire change of men's views, conduct and disposition.

Having noticed the idea of true repentance, we will notice some of the things embraced in repentance. 1. There is a conviction of sin. Christ said "when he (the Spirit) is come, he shall reprove the world of sin." John 16: 8. Every true penitent will feel these reprovings; he will know and feel that he is a sinner; he will feel his guilt and depravity. He will learn it from a view of his own life and conduct, his walk and conversation, and then too, will he learn it from the word of God, that bright and reflecting mirror. Oh how little, how insignificant, and how depraved does the penitent feel when he sees himself in the gospel light. It portrays clearly his many imperfections and so unclean and unholy does his life appear, that he feels scarcely worthy the notice of God. Oh that every impenitent soul would look into this gospel mirror and see how depraved they are! Surely they would feel to repent in sack-cloth and ashes.

2. There is self-condemnation included in repentance. Self is wonderfully idolized by the impious, but the penitent condemn it as being unholy. The apostle speaks of the effects that the love of self will have in the last days. Then, he says there shall be perilous times, because men shall be lovers of their own selves, and in consequence of this, they will be coveteous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, bisobedient to parents, unthoughtful, and unholy. All these things are the gratification of self, but the true penitent will condemn them all. Like the prodigal, he will feel greatly in want and that he is, himself, the cause af it all. There will be no disposition to lay the blame on any one else, it has all been my own fault; I have now come to myself, I see it all, and although I have been so disobedient and ungrateful, I will acknowledge my guilt and then perhaps God will hear my plea. Such is the feeling of the penitent soul. Our own carnal inclinations, our self-indulgences, will all be condemned, without any disposition to justify our unholy life.

3. In repentance there will be a sorrow for sin. Sinners are in distress more or less on account of their sins, and this distress is caused through sympathy for God whom they have sinned against. When the impious are once made to see through the light of the gospel, their relation to God, how closely they are allied to him as the objects of his creation, what he has done for them, and how far they have, through disobedience estranged themselves from him, it naturally creates a sorrow. Oh how sorry the awakened sinner feels that he has been so disobedient, so unkind, so ungrateful to God in view of what he has done for him. Ah yes, there is sorrow, and such too that worketh repentance. If one of our friends were to endure suffering and at last lay down his life for our sake, we certainly would feel under the greatest obligations to him, and any unkindness towards him, would be the greatest injustice. Jesus has done more for us than any man can or will do, and the awakened sinner, those who are made sensible of their unholy and sinful life, and their estrangement from God, must surely feel the deepest sorrow.

4. There is also included in repentance a hatred of sin.

It is sin that kills the soul, that which is of more value to us than the whole world. What an aversion we have to the man who attempts to destroy our natural life which is of little consequence in comparison to our spiritual existence. It is sin that is constantly seeking to destroy the soul by leading it to hell. Why should not the penitent hate sin? It is powerful, it is crafty, it is deceitful, and in view of this the apostle exhorts his Hebrew brethren to beware "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." Oh how deceitful sin is! She pretends to have joys for us but after all cheats the soul of the joy of heaven, and chains it down to eternal ruin. Well has the poet said,

"Sin has a thousand treach'rous arts
To practice on the mind;
With falt'ring looks she tempts our hearts
But leaves a sting behind."

Such, dear reader, is sin, and we hope God will enable you to see it in this light. While flesh, sense, and passion reigns, the pleasures of sin will, no doubt, be sweet but when we become dead to these, which every true penitent must and will, then it is that he is enabled to see the odiousness of sin.

We have noticed very briefly and imperfectly what repentance is, and some of the things included in repentance, and as there are, no doubt, some of the readers of the PILGRIM who are yet leading an impious life we hope they will receive these thoughts upon the subject as from the pen of one who is interested in your eternal welfare in the world to come. May God help you all to repent and secure the remission of your sins before it is too late.

AN APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS, INDIVIDUALLY AND COLLECTIVELY, ON BEHALF OF THE CAUSE OF PEACE.

It is well known to our Christian brethren that the religious Society of Friends has ever believed that all war is entirely forbidden by the Gospel, and that, in accordance with that belief, its members have, as a rule, refrained from taking any part in carnal warfare; and for refusing to comply with military requisitions, or to pay fines for thus refusing, many, in years past, have suffered distraint of goods to large amounts, and not a few have been imprisoned. Beside a passive testimony thus borne by members individually, the Society has from time to time, issued its public protest against this heathen and wicked custom.

But while we have cause to feel thankful for the amelioration of military laws, whereby our members are now generally exempt from suffering we are pained in knowing that war, with all its horrors, is yet allowed and practiced by all the Christian nations, and sanctioned by the larger portions of the Christian Church. As Christians, we all believe in the fulfillment of prophecy. Dr. Chalmers, more than fifty years ago, testified that "The mere existence of this prophecy of peace is a sentence of condemnation upon war, and stamps a criminality on its very forehead. So soon as Christianity shall gain a full ascendency in the world, from that moment war is to disappear."

Believing that it is only by a full and proper application of the Gospel in the affairs of nations, as well as individuals, that the prophecies in regard to war will be fulfilled; and believing, as a branch of the Church which has so long seen the true character of this heathen abomination, that we were not doing all that we should do toward enlightening our brethren on this important subject, most of the Yearly Meetings of Friends have united in the organization of "The Peace Association of Friends in America," to which is delegated this important work, with instructions to labor expressly on their behalf in the more general promotion of the cause of Peace.

The association, in the fulfillment of its trust, has thus far mostly confined its labors to the printing and circulation of books and tracts, and the publication of a monthly paper MESSENGER OF PEACE. During the few years of its existence, millions of pages have been distributed far and wide, and many acknowledgments have been received of the convincing effects of the truth therein inculcated.

The attitude of millions in the prime of manhood, now kept constantly armed and equipped for mutual slaughter by the nations of Europe and the sudden uprising of the war spirit in our midst, convince us of the necessity of further and more direct efforts to arouse and awaken the public to a clearer appreciation of the true character of this monstrous evil. If it is only by the full application of the Gospel that war can be abolished, surely it is the duty of the Church to labor for its proper application.

But, in view of the apathy that so generally prevails, we feel constrained to appeal directly to our Christian brethren, individually and collectively, earnestly entreating them to take this subject into prayerful consideration in all its bearings. Can we believe that if the members of the Christian Church everywhere were entirely to refrain from taking part in carnal warfare, that professedly Christian nations could any longer continue the custom? If we believe this, we must also believe that the responsibility for the continuance of war rests upon the Church. Dear fellow-professors, can you rest satisfied in continuing to bear the weight of this awful responsibility?

While statesmen and publicists are laboring to relieve suffering humanity from the blight of this dreadful curse, the Church of Christ remains silent. Surely it is time for it to arise from its slumber, and to proclaim its supremacy! Is not eighteen hundred years long enough for its white robes, which should be pure and spotless, to have been stained in blood? Must the skirts of the visible Church be longer polluted with the gore of the battle-field, and stained with the tears of the orphan and the widow? While war, as has been said, seems to aim at setting up the kingdom of Satan in the earth alas! the Church remains to be its very bulwark!

Surely it is time to wipe out this reproach against Him, at whose coming into the world. Peace on earth and good will to men was proclaimed, and engage in this holy warfare against the supremacy of Satan's kingdom.

Therefore, in behalf of suffering humanity, and in behalf of the cause of the blessed Prince of Peace, whose mission on earth is not fulfilled while wars continue,—in true Christian love, we again entreat you to give this subject the consideration it justly merits.

On behalf, and by direction of the Peace Association of Friends in America.

An Invitation To Examine Our Doctrine.

To my relatives and friends scattered abroad greeting:

Beloved, as I am strongly attached to you by the ties of nature, it behooves me that I make every effort that lays in my power to rescue you from the power of error and lay in your reach that form of doctrine that was delivered unto us by the Lord Jesus himself. What I mean by error is, the popular doctrines that are born of men and wrapped in a mantled will worship, claiming to emanate from God, when in fact, they are soaring on the wing of Lucifer under the cover of the spirit of the prophetic beast, from whom they receive subtlety to win men and form them into organizations against God and his anointed. The power of error is so strong that men may thus be organized and made to believe that they are doing God's service, when in fact, they are destroying the Church of God and wasting it.

I, myself, was reared in your midst with all the influences of Geg brought to bear against me, clothed by the goddess of fashion, the mark of the beast, almost discernable, the palm of my hand and the light of the gospel veiled from my vision by the dust that raised from the temper of the goddess Diana. But being rescued from her power, my feet loosed from her stocks—the chain that bound me being severed, the light of the Gospel penetrating and shining into the avenues of my heart, having for my staff the helmet of salvation and my feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, I can feel myself as an humble instrument in the hands of Almighty God, wrestling against spiritul wickedness in high places. I invite you in the language of the prophet, to "bring forth your strong reasons and I will bring forth mine. As I am acquainted with yours, it is not necessary, but as you are not acquainted with mine it is essentially necessary that I bring them forth, but in the first place, I desire to know whether my labor will be appreciated, for it is not wisdom in me to speak when your ears are closed to the sound. Be not alarmed at this language for seeing we have received this ministry, we use great plainness of speech. The following will show your assent:

Subscribe for the weekly PILGRIM and through its columns we will reason in regard to temperance and judgment to come We will speak of our doctrines that emanate from the word of God, showing that He requires obedience to His word, and how that we may be obedient, that faith alone will not save us, in short, we will lay down or instruct you into the plan of salvation that was delivered unto us by the blessed Son of God. Come let us reason together, take the paper and after mature reading if you become fully convinced and let me know I will come unto you and speak face to face.

As I have given an invitation to examine our Church doctrine, I thought it best that a short analysis of the same would be more satisfactory if it could accompany the invitation, therefore I write you to subscribe for the PILGRIM in which the examination will be made. If you will do this I will write eight essays upon the following subject to be investigated in different numbers of the PILGRIM.

1. "Faith," 2. "Repentance," 3. "Baptism," 4 "The essentialty of the Christian Salutation," 5. "Feet-washing as Commanded by the Savior." 7. "The Bread and Wine the Communion, but not the Lord's Supper." 7. "The Importance of anointing the sick with Oil in the name of the Lord," 8. "The duty of Christians to observe all things commanded." It is my intention to fully investigate these proposed subjects. Then after a proper examination upon your part if you desire it, I will comply with my promise.

Yours truly,
JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

Dear Pilgrim:

In my last letter I promised to write you on the subject of the "Mennonite Appeal." It is apparent to every reflecting mind that the cause of these persecuted people is very intimately connected with the cause of the Brethren. We cannot consistently remain idle spectators of the mournful tragedy. On the subject of nonresistance we are one people, and as that is the cause of their troubles, every advocate of the heaven-ordained doctrine of peace should respond generously to the urgent appeal of the sufferers. In fact we can neither be indifferent or neutral without betraying the cause of the Lord, for the cause of peace is the cause of the Lord, and if we turn a deaf ear to the appeal, it proceeds from the same spirit that inspired the heart of him who, in reply to the question "where is thy brother?" exclaimed: "Am I my brothers keeper?" This work should be attended to at an early day, lest the opportunity to strike a blow for the church be lost. There are many generous spirits in this heaven favored land that will rejoice for the opportunity to help these unfortunate people, and if we suffer them to out-strip us in this grand cause, it will be a stigma that neither time nor eternity will be able to erase. How could we ever claim the blessing of the peace-maker, or ask our rulers to grant us the usual immunities as non-combatants if we refuse to appreciate the sore dilemma of the persecuted Russians. We cannot do it. Consistency forbids it. The Gospel forbids. "If we have of this world's goods and see our brethren in need, and we shut up our bowels of compassion, how dwelleth love of God in us." This scripture is eminently appropriate in this case.

Ordinary prudence suggests the importance of making a common cause with our Mennonite brethren. They probably are ignorant of the fact that they are emigrating to a country that includes among its millions, many thousands of zealous worshipers who refuse to engage in the bloody work of human butchery, and who strenuously oppose both by precept and example the terrible tide of fashion that is engulping the popular and fashionable denominations on its awful abyss, and that these people differ from themselves only in our more thorough devotion to all the holy commandments.

Being introduced to us by such an unmistakable evidence of the sincerity of our professions, what happy results might we not naturally anticipate. A bond of union and sympathy would thus be cemented that would be pow-mouth of God. Thus we see the devil failed in his first temptation, which had the appearance of necessity, but it only emboldens the old enemy who next offers the temptation of presumption by setting the Savior on the pinnacle of the temple, but fails again in his undertaking by the short reply "it is written" again. thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and there displays his full colors by asking Jesus to fall down and worship him. But thanks to God, Jesus had an arrow in his quiver to meet and overcome him with; and not as the first Adam to be overcome by him. "Get thee hence satan." Then the devil leaveth him ,now that better company has come. Behold angels come and ministers unto him, and they no doubt were glad for the victory obtained over the devil. and brethren we may be glad too, for having thus far the will secured, and by the word of God which the Apostle calls the sword of the spirit, by which every child of God must live and overcome. To overcome is in walking and obeying all the ordinances and commandments as taught by Jesus and recorded and practiced by the apostles; and class none of the commandments duce creeds and traditions of men as christian worship, in short follow no man further than he followeth Christ as he himself declared. "I am the way the truth and the life and no man come none essential to salvation nor introto the Father but by me." This we understand is the way to do our Heavenly Father's will and thereby become elated with Jesus as brother, sister, and mother.

BEGINNING OF A GOOD WORK.

"Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath began a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." (Phil. 1. 6.)

The apostle's confidence that God will perform the good he begins in man until the day of Jesus Christ, should stimulate, and cheer us to hope, and to persevere unto the end in our high calling of God in Christ Jesus. And for our encouragement we will see how the good work was began in these of whom Paul is so confident that it will be performed, and contrasting it with ours if it contrasts favorably, we may have the same confidence. Paul's confidence was all the members in the church, the saints as well as the bishops and deacons. In all a good work was begun, and he is confident it will be performed in all until the day of Jesus Christ, "when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day;" none in whom the good work was begun and performed will be excluded. The record of the laying of this good work is in the 16th, chapter of Acts.

"And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us to preach the gospel unto them" Philippi being a chief city in Macedonia, and a colony, it was to this place the apostles came; and here they finally organized the church to which this epistle was written. Note, God was in the beginning of all the work, and first the gospel must be preached; for "it hath pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." But "how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard," and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? Hence the beginning of the good work is through the gospel being preached by one whom God sends; for, "He whom God sends speaketh the word of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." It is by this rule we know the preacher whom God sends. St Paul being one in whom the Lord had began a good work; He will send him to preach the gospel, for he shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. The spirit not being measured unto him, he can preach all the truth. Faith, repentance, prayer, alms-giving, fasting, conversion, baptism, feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, the communion of bread and wine, the holy salutation, and kiss of love &c., &c., are all alike dear to him; as they are all ministers of the gospel whom God sends.

This was the character of the first minister sent of God to preach the gospel in Europe. And this is the preacher a certain woman named Lydia heard, whose heart the Lord opened that she attended to the things which were spoken by Paul. Of the things she attended to, her baptism only is specified; because it stands as the door to Christianity, and the church; and the things of the gospel can only be attended to in the church, and into the church the penitent believer can only enter by baptism. Being born of the spirit we see the kingdom of God, the church; and by being born of water (baptized) we enter into it. Jesus says, "Verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water (immersed) and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," (the church.) St. John 3:5. And so believes, and so preaches he whom God sends; and this Paul preached, and this Lydia attended to, and so the whole work was of God; and Paul was very confident that He would perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.

This being the beginning of the good work of the gospel in Philippi. The second case differs in the manner of coming to the faith, but the entrance into Christianity by baptism is precisely similar. In the first instance is a woman and her household; the second is a man with all his. The first is a seller of purple, the second the keeper of a prison, showing that occupation is is no bar to the beginning of the good work of the Lord.

What constituted Lydia's household, and the jailer's all his, different opinions are maintained. Those who believe in, and observe believers baptism only, contend they consisted of such persons as were capable of believing. While those who believed in, and observed infant baptism, contended that there were infants included &c. And this they base on the theory that Lydia was a married woman, and the jailor a married man, and as a natural consequence there must have been infants in their households &c. But as there is not one word expressed or implied in all the record to justify such a conclusion, I will not take up time nor space to show the improbability of it; but will prove at once from the Scripture record, that whether married or unmarried, children or no children, all the members of Lydia's household, and the jailer's all his, were capable of hearing, believing, rejoicing, and of being comforted.

When the jailor was convicted he asked the preachers whom God had sent, what he must do to be saved; they told him he must believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and he would be saved, and his house. This implies that his home would be saved on the same condition. But the God-sent preachers preach so plainly that nothing is left to be understood by implication. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." All, all, whether children, domestics, subordinates, or prisoners (whom the Roman law under which he was an officer made his, so that if one under his charge escape, his life is the forfeit.) (Acts 12: 19.) had the word of the Lord preached unto them; and all could rejoice and believe in God. "And when he had brought them unto his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced believing in God with all his house." Such dear reader were the infants of the jailor's all his; will you be deceived by the sophistry of men.

This same sophistry claims that there must have been some infants in Lydia's household. I again refer the reader to the Scripture record. "And they (Paul and Silas) went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia, and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed." I believe this is not common with baby infants. I don't use this term reproachfully. Our law in equity calls children under 21 years of age infants. I admit that such infants can and do believe, can and are baptized, and are comforted as brethren. This Scripture is conclusive evidence that there were no baby infants baptized in the household of Lydia, and needs no theorizing to sustain it, yet a little will not harm if based upon facts. And the Scriptural fact is, that Lydia was a seller of purple, and was of the city of Thyatira; the geographical fact is, that Thyatira was in minor Asia, and Philippi a colony of Macedonia in Europe, distance about 300 miles, and the critical fact is, that the words the house are not in the original text in that sense, but supplied to make connection. It would be in perfect harmony with Lydia's occupation to supply the words the store or the shop. Lydia being a seller of purple, it is quite probable that she was a dyer also, and if so must have a store room to sell her purple in, and a shop room to do her dying in. The fact that she was a seller of purple is stated in the text, and this fact alone involved the necessity of her having a store; and the reading and they entered into the store of Lydia, would be as well supplied as the words the house which is an indefinite term, while the former is in strict harmony with her occupation. And brethren, her clerks, salesmen, and dyers, could these be comforted by the coming in of the apostles &c. There being no baby infants to cumber this traveling peddler.

Dear readers, having set before you the beginning of the good work in the brethren at Philippi, and have seen that he who began the good work was God by sending his minister in whom the same good work was already began in the same manner as He will have it began at Philippi, and all other parts of the world. A believer in the whole truth, can only preach and administer the whole truth. Had Paul and Silas been of the self sent, and of man made preachers like the Rev. Mr.——, who held a revival meeting near us in the winter of '73, at which some professed to have their hearts opened and wished to be immersed, but coming to the water and seeing the ice the true character of the preacher came to the surface, he said it was too cold to go into the water, and he had no faith in baptism, and so left without immersing them. Had Paul and Silas been such infidel preachers, neither Lydia, nor the jailor would have been baptized. But God through the agency of faithful men begins the good work in men. What is not of faith is sin, says the apostle, what profit then would it have been to the persons above refered to, if the weather and water would have been warm enough for this self sent infidel preacher to immerse them. God sends the faithful minister to preach his word, and God himself opens the heart of the hearer to attend to the truth spoken by his faithful servant, so the beginning is of God, and He will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ, which implies that the good work is not complete in the beginning of the Christian life, but must continue through all the stages of sanctification until the day of Jesus Christ. Conversion, which is repentance from dead works, faith in God, and baptism are the principles in the doctrine of Christ, and from these the repentant baptized believer must go on to perfection, adding to his faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness. and to all these love. If these good things are performed in us and abound, we will be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Being born again we are but babes in Christ, and must be fed by the milk of the word of God; "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the statute of the fulness of Christ."

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God, says Jesus, "and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he (Christ) is pure."—1 John, 3: 3. Purification then is a good work that must be performed in us, and God who began the good work has provided the means whereby we can do it, and so it is God who performs the work. "The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me." St. Peter addressing those who had purified themselves, tells how it was performed. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently."—1 Peter, 1: 22. The truth is the means God has perfected by which he will perform the good work in us, and we obeying it through the spirit unto the love of the brethren, will have the good work of purification performed by God in us.

Holiness is a grace that must be performed in us. God required holiness of his people Israel, saying, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," and the New Testament Scriptures abound with this grace in the saints. St. Paul says, "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Heb. 12: 14. The Saviur prays for his disciples, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." And St. Paul says, "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification."—1 Thes. 4: 3. Holiness is performed in us in obeying the truth in strict conformity to the will of God in all things, and is not actuated by the principles, maxims and fashions of the world, nor governed by the precepts and practices of a corrupt professing Christianity. By these a saint is distinguished from the unrenewed, in whom the good work of the Lord is not begun.

Christian perfection is a grace that must be performed in all in whom the Lord has begun a good work. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in Heaven is perfect," says Jesus.—Matt. 10: 48. And this grace, as that of purification and holiness, the Lord has perfected for us in the Scriptures, for saith St. Paul, "All Scripture is given by inspiration, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17. These are the means the Lord has perfected by which he will perform the good work he began in us until the day of Jesus Christ.

Doctrine, is the act or system of teaching any principle laid down by the master or teacher, whether true or false. Hence the Scriptures given by inspiration of God, are profitable for doctrine or teaching, because they are truth, and teach the true principles laid down by the great Master and Teacher. Teaching us to deny ungodliness, and all worldly lusts, and that we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present life. For reproof. Reproving to the face the one in whom the good work of the Lord is begun for any and every departure from the true principles laid down by the Master or Teacher in his perfect system of salvation. For correction. Correcting all error of manner and habit, bringing the erring into correct habits of moral and christian discipline; correcting false and erroneous preconceived opinions of Christianity not founded on truth, &c. For instruction. To teach and inform the mind of the true knowledge of christian virtue and duty; how to pray, how to give alms, and how to demean themselves in all things religious, civil, and domestic. In righteousness. All the profit and benefit of the Scriptures teachings, center in righteousness. Righteousness as reenderd by Webster is, "Purity of heart and rectitude of life; conformity of heart and life to the divine law,—as used in scripture and theology, in which it is chiefly used, is nearly equivalent to holiness, comprehending holy principles of affections of heart, and conformity of life to the divine law. It includes all we call justice, honesty and virtue, with holy affections; in short, it is true religion."

Dear readers, in the Scriptures given by inspiration of God, we have perfected for us the good work of the first principles of the doctrine of repentance, faith and baptism; and of purification, holiness and christian perfection. And while we believe and obey them from the heart, God, whose word it is, performs the good work in us until the day of Jesus Christ. This being so, the propriety of the injunction, "Be faithful until death," and "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," is manifest, and is it not equally manifest that some shout too soon.

Being confident of this very thing, that he that hath begun a good work in us, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ; and until that day it will not fully appear what the design of it all is. We know that the beginning and performing of it is that we may be the sons of God, but it does not yet appear what we shall be, because we see as through a glass darkly; and we only know in part: and because of this, eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man what he shall be until the day of Jesus Christ. Then we will no more see as through a glass darkly, but we shall see him as he is, and shall be like him. So good Lord perform the good work in us until he comes, and our salvation be complete.

D. P. SAYLER.

If thy conscience smite thee once, it is admonition; if it mite thee twice, it is a condemnation.

WAS JOHN'S BAPTISM A CHRISTIAN BAPTISM?

The above inquiry is one that has perplexed the mind of some earnest Bible readers, and has resulted in different opinions; these however we shall not pause to seek after, or to assign, but remark that the scriptures reflect a plain picture of the subject, as we trust the attentive reader will see.

In answer to the inquiry prescoted in our title, we affirm that John's Baptism is a christian Baptism, and to sustain this proposition will be the labor of this essay.

The first evidence to which we invite the reader's attention in support of the above proposition is, that John's Baptism did not commence, nor occur under the law but under grace. The Savior on receiving his baptism of John spake: "thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." John in his first epistle, 3: 7, tells us, "that he that doeth righteous, is righteous, even as he is righteous;" hence all acts of obedience are acts of righteousness, and obedience is righteousness. The method of worship under the law was all set forth in minute detail. Baptism however was no part of that worship; but baptism is a part of the service under grace, and the baptism that John taught and practiced, "was not under the law, but under grace;" hence John's baptism was a christian baptism.

Our second argument, we base upon the fact, that the scriptures include John and his work, in the christian dispensation. St. Mark affirms that, "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. As it is written in the prophets, Behold I sent my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness," &c. This text clearly asserts, that John's work (which included his baptism,) was the introduction of the gospel of Christ, and no part of the law. The Savior tells us, that "the law and the prophets, were until John." In the text, we want the fact noted, that with John, Christ dates a new era. John was the first to proclaim the commencement of the kingdom of Heaven; indeed his first preaching was, "repent for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand," besides, "from the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of Heaven suffered violence," says the Savior. The above testimonies most emphatically date, "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ," "the preaching of the kingdom of Heaven," and the ushering in of the gospel dispensation with John's ministry; therefore his baptism was, a Christian baptism.

A third argument, to which we invite attention, we term and argument of identity.

1. They were both sent from God. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John," says John the evangelist. Luke also testifies, that "the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias in the wilderness," while the Savior says, that "my meat is to do the will of him that sent me." Both sent of God; hence the identity.

2. John taught his disciples to believe on Christ; Christ taught his disciples, to believe on the same person.

"I, indeed baptize you with water, unto repentance, but he that cometh after me, is mightier than I," &c. In this text, John taught his disciples to believe on Christ, while Christ's own words are, "ye believe in God believe also in me," hence the identity.

3. The analogy in the doctrine, they taught. John's first preaching was, "repent for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Matt. 3: 2. Likewise, "Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Matt. 4: 17. And when Christ sent his disciples out, he bid them "go preach, saying the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Matt. 10: 7. Here is a striking analogy, and hence identity.

4. Identity is also clearly seen, in the prerequisites to baptism viz; faith and repentance. John taught his disciples, (which implied faith) while his preaching was, "repent for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand;" likewise did the Savior, when he came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God saying, "the time is fulfilled, the kingdom of Heaven is at hand, repent ye, and believe the gospel."

5. There was also a oneness in the design of John's baptism and Christ's or the one Christ authorized. Mark, 1: 4. testifies that "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sin." Luke, 3: 3. evidence the same evangelical truth. On the Savior taking final leave of his disciples, he told them that "he would send the comforter, which would bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever he has taught them." This agent in doing its work, led Peter on the day of Pentecost to proclaim, "repent and be baptized every one of you; in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." The same doctrine did Ananias hold forth at the conversion of Paul." "Why tarriest thou, arise, be baptized, wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." We observe plainly, that they were both performed with a view to remit sin, which sets forth identity.

A fourth argument, sustaining the proposition at the head of our article, we gather from the recommendation that Christ gave of John. 1. "The baptism of John, whence was it, from Heaven or of men." Matt. 21: 25. The manner of the above question, and the private reasonings of the Pharisees, clearly show that John and his work was a heaveoly one; and hence a Christian work and was so understood, for they tell us that "all counted John as a prophet." On this, hear the Savior's own words; "this is he of whom it is written behold! I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare the way before thee; for I say unto you, that among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." In the above text, Christ alludes to John as his forerunner, as sent to prepare the way, to give introduction to Christ, and the introduction is included in the volume.

That John's work, had the desired effect, we see in the furtherence of the quotation. "And all the people that heard him, (the Savior) justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John," but the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized of him. "Here we notice that those who were baptized of John, received Christ, and those who rejected John, likewise rejected Christ. And in the above high commendations which the Savior gave of John, he commends his character; in doing this, he commends his doctrine of which his baptism, was a leading part, hence at the close of our fourth argument, we again conclude that John's baptism was a christian baptism.

A fifth point in our train of reasoning is, the fact that neither Christ, nor his disciples, ever rebaptized any of John's disciples, nor did they require it to be done, but recognized it to be a valid baptism. In Acts 18: 24, 28, we read that, "a certain Jew named Appollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord, and being fervent in the spirit, he spoke and taught diligently the things of the Lord; knowing only the baptism of John. And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue, whom when Aquilla and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote exhorting the disciples, to receive him, who when he was come, helped them much who had believed through grace, for he mightily convinced the Jews and that publicaly showing by the scriptures, that Jesus was the Christ." We want the readers attention 1. To the fact that this Appollos, knew only the baptism of John; not by idle speculation, not by theory, but by practice, as Paul "knew nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified," to the Corinthian church, so Appollos knew the baptism of John. 2. Knowledge of Christ was deficient. 3. They did not rebaptize him, although he was one of John's disciples, but they simply expounded the way of God more perfectly to him. They then gave him letters of commendation exhorting the brethren to receive him, as a faithful pastor. We have the following, in the first paragraph of the 19. chapter of Acts; "Paul came to Ephesus finding certain disciples, he said unto them, "have ye received the Holy Ghost, since ye believed, and they said we have not so much as heard, whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, unto what then were ye baptized? And they said; unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance; saying unto the people, that they should believe on him, which should come after him, that is on Christ Jesus: When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Several points to be noticed in this text. 1. They did not know that there was a Holy Ghost. Now John taught that a Christ was to come whose mission was to baptize with the Holy Ghost; hence John taught the Holy Ghost; and all of John's disciples knew of the Holy Ghost, 2. These disciples that Paul met, did not know whether there be any Holy Ghost; hence their ignorance in this, proves that they were not John's disciples. 3. Luke does not call them John's disciples, only certain disciples. They were under the impression, that they were really baptized by John's baptism, as many persons with whom we meet, claim they are or have been baptized with a valid christian baptism; but we like Paul, show them their error, and if we succeed in convincing them, as Paul did, we also rebaptize them. The above clearly shows that if our baptism is not a valid one, it will profit us nothing.

Gilboa O.

Every kindly word and feeling, every good deed and thought, every noble action and impulse, is like the ark-sent dove, and returns from the troubled waters of life bearing a green olive branch to the soul.

Faith makes the discords of the present the harmonies of the future.

LITERATURE.

—Dr. Clark's "Sex in Education," (Jas. R. Osgood & Co.; Boston,) has made more stir among the education of girls throughout the country, and provoked more and severer criticism than any book of late years. The Dr. has thereby received a notoriety which to some might be quite enviable. Old and New for March devotes considerable space to criticisms of the book, and now we have a spirited reply in "Sex and Education," (Roberts, Bros. Boston,) edited by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and is the joint production of several thoughtful women whose long experience should lend might to their opinions, and bespeak for them consideration; and another is "No Sex in Education;" or an equal chance for both Boys and Girls, (J. M Stoddart & Co., Philadelphia,) edited by Mrs. E. B. Duffey, which rejects the idea of natural feminine invalidism, and suggests modes of life by which women may pursue the same mental occupations as men, with the enjoyment of equally good health. It is barely possible that the Dr. may be obliged to change his theories, or at least withhold them from the public in the future,

—Old and New for April deals rigorously with several live topics, and diversifies its rigor with its usual array of stories and verses. Mr. Hale devotes his "Introduction" to the discussion of the question of political organization. He takes no partisan view, but presents for consideration five important points—cheap transportation, education at the South, harmony of the legislative and executive departments at Washington, proper distinction of State and National politics, and a real civil service reform. Rev. Mr. Mastmean resumes his series of papers with a learned discussion of the Romish claim of infallibility. An Anonymous paper, one of the spiciest of the number is entitled "The Rights of Tweed and other Convicts." It takes rather a fresh view of Tweed as a convict and argues that the old man has a right to be converted into a good citizen by those who shut him up before he is turned loose among other good citizens. Besides these the No. contains several papers of interest, and poems. (E. B. Perkins, Agt.; Boston)

—Oliver Optic's Magazine for April has all the freshness of early Spring, blooming with interest and attraction to the young minds who now need recreation from the close confinement, and wearisome study of the winter. The table of contents is varied, and embraces articles by writers of great acceptance, alike to old and young [Lee & Shepherd, Pub.,—Geo. A Foxcroft, Manager, Boston.]

—Mrs. Alice M. Thompson of Boston has written a narrative of European travels, called a "A Woman's Vacation," [Lee & Shepherd, Boston.]

—The Quaker City Publishing House has in preparation, and to be issued about the first of May, "The Life and Public Services of Charles Sumner," by Rev. Elias Nason, which cannot fail to have an immense sale. It is to be sold by subscription.

—What is Darwinism? Dr. Hodge's forthcoming book will answer the query: First from Dawin's own writings; second, from the expositions of the theory given by its aroused advocates; and third from the character of the objections urged against it by its opponents. [Scribner and Co.]

CROP STATISTICS.

The National Crop Reporter publishes the estimates of its correspondents in relation to the percentage of last year's crops of corn, oats, hay, and Irish potatoes which will be consumed the current crop year, the estimates having reference to the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin. In addition there are also very full returns in relation to the fruit prospects in the same States. The following is an abstract of the leadings points:

CORN.

The total production of corn in 1873 in the States named was nearly 315,000,000 bushels, of which amount nearly 65 per cent., or 333,000,000 bushels, will be used at home. Kansas consumes 90 per cent., and Illinois 51½ per cent. of the production in the respective States.

OATS.

The production of oats last year in the same States was placed at 168,500,000 bushels, of which nearly 62 per cent., or 104,600,000 bushels will be required for home uses. The States showing the highest and lightest percentage of consumption are the same as in the case of corn.

HAY.

In the item of hay, the local consumption in the eight States is averaged at 83 3-10 per cent., the total production last year being something over 10,5000,000. This percentage represents nearly 8, 900,000 tons. Indiana rates relatively the lightest consumer, and shows a surplus of about 23 per cent.

POTATOES.

Out of the 28,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes produced last year in the States named, there is an estimated consumption of nearly 75 per cent,, or about 21,666,000 bushels.

FRUIT.

In regard to the condition of the fruit-buds March 1, there is hardly an exception to the most flattering accounts from all localities. There were a great many trees killed last year in various ways, but at present in all living trees the buds are, as a rule, in the best possible condition for a large crop, with favorable weather in the future.

MARKET PRICES.

The average prices of the leading articles in the States named above show for Feb. 15, an advance as compared with Jan. 15, as follows: Corn, 4 7-10 cents per bushel; oats, 4 cents per bushel; hay, 80 cents per ton; swine, 36 cents per 100 pounds.

LET THE PEOPLE SPEAK.

R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your Favorite Prescription has done my wife a word of good. She has taken nearly two bottles and has felt better the past two weeks than at any time in the past two years. No more periodical pains; none of that aching back or dragging sensation in her stomach she has been accustomed to for several years. I have so much confidence in it that I would be perfectly willing to warrant to certain customers of ours who would be glad to get hold of relief at any expense. I have tried many patent Medicines, but never had any occasion to extol one before.

Very truly yours,

KEPT WAITING.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."—JESUS.

He is waiting, waiting, waiting,
He has waited through the night;
He has looked with wondrous patience
For the hour of dawning light,
When the oft mistaken spirit
Shall observe him at the door,
And shall cry, Come in, my Saviour.
Come, and leave me never more.

He is waiting, waiting, waiting,
He has watched all your life;
He has pleaded with you always,
In your hours of peace and strife.
Did you hear him gently knocking
When you played among the flowers?
Did you notice how he wailed
In the hush of evening hours?

He is waiting, waiting, waiting,
You have left all others in.
Some odd guests are in your temple,
Sad with sorrow, dark with sin.
There is only One can bless you
In your times of grief and doubt,
There is only one can save you—
But you strangely keep him out!

He is waiting, waiting, waiting,
You his very name forget;
You are busy with your feasting,
But he is not weary yet.
Still he does not force an entrance
With stern anger in his face;
Still he lingers, gently pleading
That you will but give him space.

He is waiting, waiting, waiting,
Have you kept him long enough?
You will shortly need him greatly
When the winter winds are rough.
Oh, cold hearts that keep him waiting,
Do be warned by his great love,
Nor refuse the pleading Saviour
Who has sought you from above.

He is waiting, waiting waiting;
Surely he may enter now.
Haste to throw your heart's door open
And before the Master bow.
Bid him come, no more to leave you
Till you dwell with him above;
Oh, receive the waiting Saviour
And return him love for love.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

CHRIST THE SURE FOUNDATION.

Ye who have repented from dead works, have believed in God, and are properly baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, are lively, or living stones to build a spiritual house. "For ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light, which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God." In the rearing of this edifice, not only must good and tried material be used, but the builder himself must be a living and active stone, expressed by the term lively stones. He must not flatter himself in the vain delusion that because he has believed, repented and has been baptized, has finished and completed the building; these being only the beginning, the first materials, or principles in the doctrine of Christ. Having laid these firmly and surely on the very foundation stone, leave them there in their proper place and go on with the building unto perfection.

HE MUST BE PURE IN HEART, for "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5: 8. And "Every one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he (Christ) is pure."—1 John, 3: 3. This is a work, or a material that must be fitted into the building by the builder. It is not one of the graces which is a special gift of God, which may or may not be given, but it is a work which the repented, baptized believer must perform. "Purifieth himself," is highly suggestive of active, energetic labor with the Lord, a co-worker with him; as I remarked above the builder himself must be a living material. The apostle informs us how purification is attained. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth thro' the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, SEE THAT YE love one another with a pure heart fervently."—1 Peter, 1: 22. Here the believer did the work. Ye have purified your souls, not only suggests the idea of having done something, but is expressed in obeying the truth. Of Christ, the chief corner-stone in the foundation it is said, "Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."—Heb. 5: 8, 9. Here is not labor implied, but obedience for salvation expressed. Of this I will speak again.

HE MUST BE HOLY. "Be ye holy for I am holy," saith the Lord; and "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Holiness is attained in living holy lives. "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" True holiness consists in strict conformity to the will and nature of God, whereby a true, repented baptized believer is distinguished from the unregenerate, and his life is not actuated by these principles, nor governed by these maxims, but through faith and obedience is separated from them, not being conformed to the world, but transformed, &c.

HE MUST BE PERFECT. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5: 48. Certainly not perfect as God is perfect in his attributes, and sinless and holy perfection, but perfect in agreement with God in the plan and scheme of salvation through Christ in the Gospel. Perfect in faith, in repentance, and in obedience to the whole truth. To do anything in the name of, and as religion not taught in the Gospel, as infant baptism, the taking a bit of bread, and sip of wine in the morning, or at midday for the Lord's Supper, the mourner's bench excitement, &c, are clearly anti-scriptural, are not of God's teaching nor instituting, and the doing of these, and such like is not being perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect; while believing and doing all the Scriptures teach, is being perfect even as our Father in heaven, who is the author of them, is perfect; for "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim., 3: 16.

Purity of heart, holiness of life, and perfection with God are graces in the Christian life and character and are attainable only upon the conditions which God has promised them, viz., "obeying the truth through the spirit;" "obeying from the heart that form of doctrine delivered us;" among which are love your enemies, do good to them that curse and despitefully use you, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, give to him that asks, and of him that would borrow turn not away, and if any one sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also; and if one smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also, &c. See and read Matt. 5, at the close of which is the injunction, "Be ye therefore perfect," &c. As these truths are not known nor taught at the mourner's bench, I must teach the reader that in obedience to these, with all other gospel precepts, the christian builder attains purity of heart, holiness of soul, and perfection of life. Associated with these christian, moral precepts, are the ceremonial; the washing of one another's feet as Jesus gave example and command, (St. John 13) the eating of the Lord's Supper, and at the close of the meal the bread and wine, called by St. Paul 1 Cor. 10, the Communion of the body and blood of Christ, and a salutation of a kiss of love. These not being taught at the mourner's bench, I must teach them here. Doing these in faith through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, are gold, silver, precious stone materials which will endure the trying test of the hottest fire God will bring against them. While anything short of these are wood, hay, stubble of the most inflamable nature which the breath of the Lord will consume, and the poor, deluded, blind builder, who builds under the direction of a blind leader and builder, will suffer loss, and great will be his loss. And to be enabled to do all the truth, the repented baptized believer must give all diligence to add to his faith virtue.

Virtue, courage, fortitude. Not only moral goodness, or the practice of moral duties, and abstaining from vice, and conformity of life and conversation to the moral law. Virtue in this sense may exist in persons making no pretensions to religion. To practice moral duties merely from motives of convenience, or from regard to reputation, or from fear of the penalties of the law, is not the virtue the apostle requires a repented baptized believer to add to his faith. It "is a faithful saying," and Paul wills that it be constantly affirmed, "that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works."—Titus, 3: 8. By virtue here, then we may understand that strength and courage by which the believer will stand up for good works, abounding and excelling in them. "The righteous must be bold as a lion." A cowardly Christian, who is afraid or ashamed to profess the doctrine, or practice the duties of the Gospel anywhere, and at all times, must expect that Christ will be ashamed of him when he comes. Virtue is that strength in which your hearts fail you not in the day of trial, but will show you valiant in standing against all opposition, resisting every enemy, whether it be the world, the flesh, the devil, or your nearest and dearest relation. Brethren and sisters, you who have change of raiment to suit the world when you go with it, and another to suit the church when with her, make a mark here, and ask yourselves, have I added virtue to my faith? And you my brethren who feel ashamed or afraid to pray with your families, and at your tables when strangers are present, do likewise.

To virtue knowledge. "And this I pray, that your love may abound more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that you may approve things that are excellent."—Phil. 1: 9, 10. Knowledge must go with virtue, [illegible] with strength. We cannot approve of the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, before we know it; and we cannot know it until we are transformed from the world by the renewing of our mind, and for this we must use the appointed means in the Gospel, and observe the accepted time to come out from the fashions of the world, and by our life, walk, and conversation, be separate from them. But Christian knowledge and prudence regards the persons we have to do with, and the company we may be thrown in. Take heed that ye cast not your pearls before swine.

To knowledge, temperance. We must be sober and moderate in our love to, and use of the good things of this life; while the evil things, such as strong drink, &c., must be entirely discarded. If we have a right understanding and knowledge of outward comforts, we will see their worth and usefulness vastly inferior to those of spiritual mercies. Bodily exercise and bodily privileges profit but little, and therefore should be esteemed and used accordingly. The Gospel teaches sobriety as well as honesty. Titus, 2: 11. We must be temperate in desiring and using the good things of natural life, such as meat, drink, clothes, sleep, recreation, credit, home, lands, &c. An inordinate desire after these is inconsistent with an earnest desire after God and Christ; and all who take and use more of these than is their due, can not render to God or man what is due to them.

To temperance patience. Patience must have her perfect work, or the believer cannot be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. James, 1: 4. We are born to trouble, and must through many tribulations enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. It is this tribulation that St. Paul says worketh patience, (Rom. 5: 3) whereby we bear all calamities and crosses with solemn and humble submission, never murmuring against God, or complaining of him, admitting that our sufferings are less than our sins deserve, believing they are no more than we need for our good.

To patience, godliness. Godliness. To be God-like is produced by patient perseverance in faithfulness, then, "In thy name shall they rejoice all the day, and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted." But, if my children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes and keep not my commandments: then will I visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail."—Psalms, 8: 9.

To godliness, brotherly kindness. Brotherly kindness is a tender affection to all our fellow Christian brethren, who are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, and being baptized into Christ, and so have put on Christ, and are children of the same Father, servants of the same Master, members of the same family, travellers to the same country, and heirs of the same inheritance, and therefore are to be treated with brotherly kindness, whether they be rich or poor, whether they live in palaces or hovels; whether their skin be white or black, for God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and therefore must be regarded with brotherly kindness as those who are peculiarly dear to us.

To brotherly kindness, charity. Charity, love. Love to God and his truth; love to the brethren, love to all men, high or low, rich or poor. "Charity, in a general sense, love, benevolence, good-will; that disposition of heart which inclines men to think favorably of their fellow men, and to do them good. In a theological sense, it includes supreme love to God, and universal good-will to men."—Webster.

Dear brethren, if these things be in us and abound, they make us that we shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But if we lack these things, we are blind, and cannot see afar off, and have forgotten that we were purged from our old sins.

Building with these materials on this foundation, the building will be fitly framed together unto a holy temple in the Lord, in whom we are builded together for a habitation of God through the spirit; which neither time nor eternity will waste away, nor the consuming fire of God will not devour nor destroy, and consequently have no loss to suffer. God helping us, so will we build on the foundation of the apostles and prophets Jesus Christ Himself, being the chief corner stone.

AN EXTRAORDINARY ACT.

In the 29th chapter of Matthew we have an account of an extraordinary act done to the Savior by a woman; that of Mary breaking a box of precious ointment and pouring it on the head of Jesus. The Savior gave to it such significance as to link it co equal with the Gospel in saying, "Wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this be told for a memorial of her." It may seem at first but a matter of small importance, but when looked at in its real sense of devotion, it is truly a matter worthy of mention wherever the Gospel is preached.

This Mary was doubtless a poor woman, but in the depth of her love for Jesus she was rich beyond measure. Jesus had blessed her and gave peace to her soul,—once a sinner but now an heir of Heaven. No wonder the impulse of her soul was such as to cause her to make such a sacrifice, the best, no doubt, she could make, of all she had, for him. She had given him her heart and consecrated herself to his service, but this was not all, her unbounded love prompted her to go and get that precious, costly gift, and bestow it upon him, alone; all for Jesus. Others murmured at the waste, as they called it, but she cared not for that. The act causes us to admire her more when we consider it was an unheard of thing; she did not stop to inquire if such a thing was ever done before, or whether it was her duty. She was not asked to do it; it was not a matter of duty, but an act by which she manifested her real love for Jesus. She was a thorough convert, so that all she had she thought not too much to bestow on Jesus.

Where shall we find such love, such a spirit of devotion and self denial? Dear sisters, look upon Mary as one who had a spirit worthy of imitation. Jesus you cannot serve personally as did Mary, but inasmuch as you do it to one of the least of his disciples you do it to him. Think what Jesus has done for you, and then do what you can for him. You who have been blessed with an "alabaster box"—the means to administer to him through acts of kindness, or help to some of his and your sisters, don't stop to inquire if it is your duty, or if any one else has done so and so, but from a sense of love to Jesus do it for Jesus' sake. Shall the publishers of the Pilgrim bear the burden of sending the paper free to those dear ones who desire it, but are not able to pay for it? Surely not. We hope we have many that have the spirit of Mary, and will bring forth the "box" and shed a fragrance around upon many a heart; no matter if some talk about waste, and money used to better purpose; no matter if it is not your duty, do like Mary, do it anyhow thro' a sense of love for Jesus. We hear much said about the missionary cause, and if we are to judge from words, there are many desirous of doing something in that way for Jesus. Well and good, who doth hinder thee? Waiting for a general system? Did Mary wait for anything of that kind? No; but as soon as the heart was so full of love as to prompt a desire to make a sacrifice for Jesus she went and done it. Go and do likewise. No matter if no one ever gave a brother a few hundred dollars to aid him go and preach in response to the many calls, that is no reason you cannot do so. It may not be your duty, but if you feel to do something for Jesus, go do it. Simon may call it a waste; no matter, Jesus shall approve of any legal sacrifice made through sincere love for him.

We want the truth sent broadcast before the world in a way to counteract the spurious literature of the day. A brother, well qualified for the business, is willing to make a sacrifice of time and talents to that purpose, but lacks the means to publish certain pamphlets much needed. Where is the brother or brethren or sisters that Mary like will rise up through the promptings of love to Jesus and give or lend the needed assistance to that brother in Illinois, that we may soon, very soon, have those helps to the promotion of primitive Christianity?

Oh, if we could all feel as we imagine Mary felt when she looked upon Jesus on that memorable occasion, what a bringing forth of treasures there would be to give for Jesus' sake. Church-houses would be built at the first call, hungry, starving souls would have the Gospel preached to them; we would not stand in the way and inquire how we shall spend our money for Jesus, the promptings of the heart imbued in love would tell us how and nerve the will to do it. When the Spirit said to Philip "go" he went without inquiring if it would interfere with his temporal matters, or if any would go with him, or if he had money enough in his pocket. When Paul was called to preach he did not continue on as usual at his occupation and preach only when convenient, but was instant in season and out of season, and admonished Timothy to do likewise.

May the Lord give us all the ready, willing mind of Mary to do what we can for Jesus, whom we love because he first loved us.

EARLY IMPRESSIONS.

There are thousands of people in this world, whose religious sentiments are based, either directly or indirectly, upon the first impression made upon the mind. They are indebted for their religious views to some leading impression made upon their minds in early age. There are thousands, who if they would stop and meditate a few moments, could trace the growth of their views to its very beginning—could remember the very seed that first took root in their hearts—and observe how their sentiments have sprung from it as a branch from a tree. Perhaps the seed was sown by some book that they chanced to read, or a sermon preached, or conversation heard, or perhaps a newspaper that chanced to fall in their way. In this, like all other things, there has been a starting point somewhere, and that starting had a cause, either direct or indirect.

As a general thing all persons have religious views, and when not fully established, have a leading thought around which all their views cluster. The "leading thought" is the seed that fell into the heart, and it will grow if cultivated. The quality of the seed generally depends upon the party who sowed the seed. If the sower was either the devil or one of his ministers, we may easily know the kind of seed; but if on the other hand the seed was sown by Christ or his ministers, we may readily conjecture the kind. This being the case how careful ought we to be about what we place before the world, either as speakers or writers. Doubtless our productions may be a seed that falls into some ones heart, and there it will grow and produce fruit, either good or bad, much depending on the kind of seed. Many people have one grand center idea, and thro' this all their theories must be drawn as the shoemaker draws his thread through the wax before it is ready for use. Some have foreordination as the grand center through which all their speculations must pass before they are given to the world. Others give Universalism the leading position, and all their sermons, conversations and compositions are saturated with the ism. Others imbibe the idea that men can be pardoned without baptism as well as with it, and in their own mind every passage in the Bible that speaks of baptism, must be bent to suit their theory, instead of bending their theory to suit the Bible. There are others who imagine the world to be flat, and to this all reason and facts must succomb. All these and a hundred other leading thoughts may be traced to early impressions. There is a proverb running a little like this: "Tell me the books you read, and I will tell what kind of a man you are." Nothing perhaps can be truer. Reading has much to do with moulding the thoughts, and parents are more or less responsible for the kind of literature they keep in the house. Children will read, and they ought to read. Give me a reading family for contentment. Parents would better spend money for good books or papers for the children than lay it out in fine clothing, or other things that neither benefit themselves or anybody else. The majority of mankind can trace the origin of their views to books or papers read in early days. Reading is to the mind what food is to the body. I make it a particular point to get the brethren and neighbors to subscribe for one of our papers, knowing the influence for good they have over their minds.

THE GRANGES.

Under the above captain in No. 9. present volume, of your valuable paper, we noticed an article which we don't think will stand the test for several reasons. I. "That they are composed of Atheists, Deists, and drunkards," is in a great measure, a mistaken idea. That there may be some such characters who get in occasionally, we will admit, but their law strictly says, (as we are creditably informed.) "That no person can be a Granger who does not bear a good moral character." This rule was enforced a short time since, by refusing a neighbor membership because his moral standing was questioned. Secondly. "That the oaths are such that no Christian can take." Here is another great mistake. If the Cal., organizations are the same as in the East, candidates for membership are not required to take hard oaths, in fact, need not take an oath at all, if they do not wish too; simply affirm, or promise that they will do thus and so, as the Brethren do when they go before the civil magistrates, hence there would be no harm on this point. And thirdly. "That it is, or will be a political organization." What it will be in the future, we must in a measure determine by the past up to the present. Members are not compelled to vote for any particular candidate for office, but to the contrary they are just as free, as if they did not belong to the order; can use their own pleasure and vote for the one their judgment tells them is the best, let him belong to whatsoever party he may.

Now we are not a Granger our self, neither do we wish or ever expect to become one, We feel that we belong to a better, higher, and more enduring Society, than any that can be organized by man; that our time if rightly employed can be used to a better purpose, neither do we think it advisable for any of our fraternity to belong to this, or similar organization for the reasons just named, but we thought while reading the article copied from the Herald of Truth that it was a little too much one sided–did not do justice to both sides of the question. We think we are safe in saying that there never has been a Society organized for the purpose of alleviating the suffering and benefiting the working class, but what has had some good in it, therefore we should render to Cæsar the things which be his. Our unconverted neighbors who almost all belong to the Granges, are those with whom we associate nearly every day of our lives, persons of good moral standing, who have, many of them from their youth, kept the Ten Commandments and like the young man, who came to the Savior, lack one thing only, taking up the cross and following the lowly Jesus, and it is from this class alone that we confidently look for the borders of our blessed Zion to be enlarged. None of us ever expect to do much towards converting the confirmed Drunkard, Atheist, or Deist. These we fear have become too much hardened in sin; the Gospel's sweet, wooing sound will scarcely reach such, but we are happy to say this latter class forms a very small part of the Granges in our vicinity.

J. P. WOLFE.

Lathrop Cal,

REMARKS.—As we do not wish our views misunderstood, neither those of the Herald of Truth, we admit the above with the following explanation:

The first objection to our views is, that we are made to say that the Granges are composed of atheists, deists and drunkards. This is a misconstruction of the ideas advanced. The pith of the argument is this: that when we unite with secret organizations we identify ourselves in a body in which there are the classes referred to, but by no means claim that the organization is composed of such material, nor even the major part of it, as we are aware that many of these organizations are composed chiefly of our best citizens and men of unexceptionable morals, but the fact of their being distinct or separate institutions from the Church argues that there is an outside or worldly element among them. This element, however small, from a Christian standpoint, condemns the whole as it is a lump of unholy leaven, and thus forms a body, some of the members of which are unbelievers, and the positive command is, "be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

But this is by no means the greatest objection to the movement. The moment we identify ourselves with the Granges we do violence to our non-resistant principles, or rather those of Christ, and thus stigmatize our holy profession with reproach. Brethren, let us not barter away our principles for a mess of pottage or for the sake of a little worldly aggrandizement or greed for gain. We know of a few who have done it to their shame. "O, ye of little faith, is not my grace (favor) sufficient?" Is not the Church sufficiently comprehensive, her borders large enough to embrace all the good, or must we turn our backs to it and seek it from the rottenness of Ephraim?

While we acknowledge that many of the secret orders may be good moral institutions, composed chiefly of good moral men, we stand firm and fixed in our position, that the true Church of Christ has no need for them, that her laws and regulations are all sufficient, and we entertain the hope that our dear brethren and sisters will stand aloof from them, ever casting our care upon the Lord who careth for us.

For the Pilgrim.

THE CHANGES OF THE YEAR.

Many and various are the changes that have occured right in our own midst. Some of our neighbor, friends, brothers and sisters in Christ, have sickened and died and left this mundane sphere, to try the realities of that beautiful land "beyond the river," where sickness and sorrow cannot come, and death never enters. Oh! how joyful is the thought that those who die in the Lord, are at rest. The "Book of Books," says they are at rest, and their works shall follow them, and when that last great day shall come, and the great, omnipotent, omniscient, and ever present judge shall come to gather up his jewels they, his followers, shall hear the welcome salutation "Well done good and faithful servant. Oh! who can for a moment portray to themselves the bliss of dwelling forever in the "Mansions of light," and joining in the songs of worship with the angels and archangels that surround his throne and when we meditate upon this, how truly are the words verified "that to die in Christ is gain."

Again, not only has death, taken many from among us. Some of our young members have emigrated to the far West. One young brother and sister married and have gone to Colorado to make their home there. They were young and faithful members in our Church, and friends of mine from their infancy. Although they are gone from among us, and their seats are vacant among the humble worshippers in our congregation, and their voices no longer mingle with ours to sing God's praise, and though tears are caused to flow when I think of them so far removed from home, relatives and the Church they both prize so dearly, I do not think of them without a hope, for I know they are both trying to serve the Lord. But the parting was hard. We hope success may follow them, and should clouds and darkness gather around them, may they turn to God in prayer, for the prayers of the righteous availeth much. We looked forward to them as useful members in our congregation, and it is my prayer that they may be of great use in their new home, and use all their power in extending the cause of Christ, and my prayer for their prosperity, and perseverance, shall ascend to the Throne of the most high. I feel assured that all the brethren and sisters in our congregation feel a deep interest in your welfare, and although we can not mingle and commingle here as we were wont, I am cheered with this assurance that we shall meet again where parting is unknown. I extend my wishes to them that their home may be pleasant, both spiritually and temporally Not only are they missed, but, many others that are just as near and dear to myself and the church, but they seem to occupy my thoughts the most because they have gone so far from us. One dear, faithful sister that removed from among us three years ago, has returned again, to make her home among us, to fill again her vacant seat in the dear old Manor meeting house, and it gives me a great deal of pleasure to extend to her again the right hand of fellowship and salute her with a kiss as we were used to do in the days gone by.

While writing this many thoughts came to my mind, but one in particular is, this, that we should not live too unconcerned about the salvation of our souls; we should be earnest in the work. I could write a great deal more, but, think that at some future time I will send something more, for I feel a deep interest in those of my friends who are still living without Christ, and should they die in their sins, what will be their doom. I tremble at the thought, for there are those in my circle of acquaintances, that would be so useful in the church and I shall still pray for them, and hope that the time is not far distant when they will give their hearts to Christ.

I suppose that a great many who peruse this short piece, will be rather curious to know who the party were that I had reference to, and as their wedding has not been published in any paper, I will enclose it with this. See in another column.

The Company of the Wicked Corrupts.

Under the law of Moses, he was polluted who touched any dead carcass, or even his bed who had a running sore, and was to wash his clothes and bathe himself in water and be unclean until even. Now if that, which only represented sin defiled under the ceremonial law, how must sin itself, the source of uncleanness everywhere defile? Alas! I have reason to fear that its pollution is more permanent than for a day, and as he who was every whit sound himself, was rendered unclean if he had but touched, though unawares, the bed whereon he who had the running issue lay, so am I defiled not only by sin rising in mine own breast, but by hearing and seeing the sin of others, for the corruption of my own nature is so great that I am ready to take the disease, and if I do not detest, hate, and abhor it as I should, then am I polluted by it. How pernicious then the presence of the ungodly! How are they to be avoided whose companions are sure to be destroyed! How gloomy that company, and how disagreeable to enter into it—where God never comes and where His grace never shines! Surely grace rather needs oil to support its flame than water to extinguish its fire; but water is all I can expect from the wicked. Oh, miserable man, who has no other to walk with thee by day, no other to to talk with by night, none else to deal with abroad and to discourse with at home! Yet out of the world we must go unless we have intercourse with the men of the world. Let that, however, be only in common affairs of life; let it be dispatched with little expense of precious time, and without contracting any intimate acquaintance with them, unless in view of doing good to their immortal souls, and still may the saints, the excellent ones of the earth, be the chosen companions of my life. Hitherto I have been ignorant of my danger, for the wicked are ever casting arrows, firebrands and death in their sporting with a world to come, and among such madmen must I not be wounded? Hence let me be careful that the filth may not cleave to me, and may I bathe myself in the righteousness of the Son of God, by faith, and purge my daily walk, which like the flesh under the law, is apt to receive the infection, by sincere repentance, that in the evening of my life I may not lie down polluted in the grave, and rise in the morning of eternity with the putrefaction of sin,

A PILGRIM.

For the Pilgrim,

THE FORCE OF "AB"

Almost every child knows what ab means, but when the "e" is left off, some of us who are not children (physically) do not seem to comprehend. For instance, some of us speak disparagingly of Education, Sunday Schools, prayer meetings, and the like, and yet when we come to understand ourselves aright, it is not the proper and normal use of these things that we oppose, but, rather, their abuse. Because of this abuse we see danger, and because of the danger, we speak as we do. But of this line of argument be sound, why not employ it in regard to other things. For instance, if you teach your son to read, he is as likely to read dime novels, as the Bible, and is apt, quite apt, to become more interested in the former than in the latter In view of this danger would it not be well to do away with our public schools? Again, if you teach him to write, he may forge a note and thus disgrace himself and others. Would it not be better and safer, therefore, to keep him entirely ignorant of the use of the pen—that letter instrument which has done so much mischief, in the world? No, no, you will teach him to use it and trust that he will not abuse it. Why not trust in other things also? J. M. Z.

Bro. H. R. Holsinger wishes us to say to our readers that hereafter his address will be Berlin Somerset Co., Pa., instead of Dale City, Pa.

As Bro. H. B. B is busily employed in arranging things about the lot and house, he has, for the last two weeks, given us the entire charge of the paper. We expect him to renew his editorial labors next week.

Our contributors seem to be enlivened on the Sabbath question. We have a number of essays on hands on that subject and as long as the writers aim to arrive at the truth and keep in the Christian spirit, they will be forthcoming.

We have just received from Bro. J. H. Moore, a copy of the 'Perfect Plan of Salvation; or Safe Ground," noticed in Pilgrim No. 13. It is a neatly gotten up pamphlet, and the contents are such as should be read by everybody. Send for a copy immediately.

On Thursday evening of last week we had the pleasure of a visit from our brother H. R. Holsinger and family. They were visiting in the vicinity of Tyrone and Warriors Mark, and were on their way to Berlin, Somerset Co., Pa., where they expect to locate for awhile. We enjoyed their visit much and will be pleased to have them call around again.

Easter morning dawned upon us brilliantly, and we thought there would be an exception to the general condition of the weather on Easter, but before noon it commenced snowing and continued cold and blustery during the day. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather without, there was joy among Christians within. The mind reverted to the glorious resurrection scenes and many could say with George Herbert:

"Rise heart, thy Lord is risen. Sing His praise
Without delay:
Who takes thee by the hand that thou likewise
With him mayest rise.
That as His death calcined to dust,
His life may make thee gold, and much more just."

Bro. C. F. Wirt, of Lewiston, Minnesota, says: "We have had a very pleasant winter with about five months of good sleighing. The spring time has come again, but as yet the weather is very cold and dry. The ground is still frozen and nothing as yet done on the farms towards putting in crops.

The brethren intend, the Lord willing, to build a meeting-house this Spring. It is now under contract and partially framed, and as soon as the frost is out of the ground sufficient to lay the foundation, it will be put up and completed as soon as possible.

BUILDING CHURCHES.

There has been a number of appeals made through the Pilgrim recently for money to build churches, and we fear they are not being responded to as liberally as they should. Meeting houses are certainly essential to the furtherance of the good cause, and those who are in good pecuniary circumstances should feel it a duty as well as a privilege to give of their abundance.

There are places where meeting houses are very much needed, yet our brethren are not able within themselves to build one, and if their appeals for help are not heeded the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom must surely be impeded. Brethren this is something to think of, and it is certainly a very important consideration. We need a meeting house very badly in West Huntingdon. The prospects here are as good as anywhere for building up a church, if we had a suitable house in which to hold services, but we are not able to build one ourselves. Must the cause suffer for want of pecuniary support when the church has it in abundance? Brethren these things ought not to be.

A CALL.

A gentleman from Kentucky in a letter says, "I am a reader of the Pilgrim and not a member of your church, though I do not know how soon I would be one if I had a chance. I have been a reader of the Pilgrim for about fifteen months, and have also received two of your almanacs. I think it is the most religious paper I have ever read and would not part with it, if it cost ten dollars. [This shows how those who are hungry for the heavenly manna appreciate it. The small sum of $1,50 is no consideration to such persons.—Ed.] I suppose I never would have seen the Pilgrim, but I have a brother who is a minister in your church, and he sent me one of your papers. I find that I have been traveling the downward road, but by reading the Pilgrims, I find that I am very much refreshed.

I will enclose you $1.00 for one of your hymn books. I think if some of your preachers would come over here and preach for us it might be the means of tearing down the army of Satan, and building up the walls of Zion in old Kentucky. If any of your ministers will come and preach for us, write to me, and I will attend to making the appointments for preaching. Come over and preach for us."

Here brethren is an opportunity to do good. Who will go over to Kentucky? This earnest appeal places the Church under the greatest responsibility, and every member should feel it resting upon them. Are not some of our ministers according to the divine commission, willing to go and preach to these people? Certainly there are, and if the Church fails to send them, it will be a stigma that neither time nor eternity can blot out. Should not arrangements be made at once to respond to this call, and then with the support of the Church and her earnest prayers that the word of the Lord may have free course, we may realize a glorious ingathering in Kentucky. Any of our brethren wishing to correspond with this friend can do so by addressing George M. Fitzgerald Farmdale, Franklin Co., Kentucky.

GLORIOUS NEWS.

—(o)—

"CHRIST IS RISEN"

THE EASTER DAY.

Easter morning is here, the day on which we commemorate the rising of our blessed Master from the tomb.—He is risen and hath appeared unto Simon. "Christ hath burst the bars" of death. Let all the world rejoice!

The word "Easter" is derived from the old Saxon word "Oster" which signifies "to rise." This word occurs in our English translation in the fourth verse of the twelfth chapter of Acts. It is there put for the Passover which commemorated the Paschal Lamb, that represented "Christ our Passover," who was "sacrificed for our sins." In some countries there is a special resurrection feast and is called by the name Pascha or Passover as frequently as that of Easter. It however signifies the same, thing or has the same object in view, that we have when we celebrate Easter in honor of our risen Lord.

Leaving the historical account the essentiality of keeping Easter in honor of that great event, and one too, which is full of interest to us all, strikes us as being more important. Death is conquered and the grave is made but the temporary resting place of the mortal body. The cemetery on the distant hill brings this fact forcibly to the mind. There we lay our friends to their quiet sleep, but will they sleep always? Oh no; in hope we look forward to the time when according to the promise of our Lord, "he will change this vile body and make it like unto his own body. What a change! It will then be like the body of him who knows no sin, and never saw corruption. Paul in his defense before Agrippa, refers to the glorious hope of the resurrection, and propounds this important question: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" It was no strange thing to Paul, it was the theme upon which he loved to dwell; It was the joy of his heart. To the Christian the resurrection is no more marvelous than is the new life that comes in an apparently dead nature. For long months our gardens have been inanimate; no signs of life have been apparent through the long cold winter, but in a few days more the cold blasts of winter will have passed by, and then if we walk into our garden we will see the upheaved earth, and in a few days the flowers coming forth at God's bidding. These things alone without the aid of faith should teach the great truth of the resurrection. But there is a stronger proof than the analogy of nature. Christ died for our sakes and by his own power burst open the grave and loosed himself of the folds of linen, threw away the napkin about his head, rolled away the great stone from the sepulcher, and passing by the guards stood before Mary Magdalene and the wondering disciples. These are unmistakable proofs of the resurrection. The disciples thought at first when he appeared unto them that he might only be a spirit, but then "a spirit hath not flesh and bones," and then, too, a spirit does not eat "bread and fish," as Jesus did. They are now fully convinced; there is no room left for doubt, Christ is indeed risen. Oh what a consolation! How rejoiced we should feel that we can say with the disciples, "It is my Lord who has risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." "For since by Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive." Is not this sufficient to afford us the highest joy? Hear yet the endearing words of Jesus: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live." In view then of the glorious resurrection, with what a lively hope can we bear our Christian friends to their quiet rest. It is no sad thing when we are done with the turmoils of this life to lie down to sleep with the hope to arise again in the resurrection morn to newness of life. All these thoughts come as this Easter day ushers in upon us.

In conclusion we will quote from the Bible some of the beautiful sayings on this Easter day:

"If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above and not on the earth."

"For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

"And so shall ye be ever with the Lord."

Oh how glorious will be that Easter morning when we shall put on our incorruptible and ever dwell with our Father, and participate in those things which our eyes hath not seen, neither hath it entered into our hearts of their greatness. J. B. B.

CHRIST THE ROCK.

"Behold I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come forth water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel."

Give us water, Oh, give us water! was the constant entreaty of the thirsty Israelites of their leader Moses. What must have been his feelings on hearing their plaintive cries, and their murmurings against him for bringing them into a land where there was no water! Can we imagine ourselves in his position with the lives of such a vast multitude dependent upon him, and especially, when they had become so indignant as to threaten to stone him. What a dilemma! But Moses relied only on the providence of God. He remembered that the Lord can furnish a way for relief and that our extremity is his opportunity. The Lord does not prevent darkness, but to the upright in heart, those who walk humbly before him, there ariseth light in darkness, and often just before the break of day it is the darkest. This was so with Moses. When that vast multitude were nearly perishing and were about to stone him, the way must have been dark indeed, but it was only the precedent of a brilliant day. The Lord provided a way and upon Horeb's towering cliff he led him, and upon smiting the rock there issued forth an abundance of water. In this, then we have a striking example of God's care for those who look to him and put their trust in him in time of trial. "Behold I will stand before thee upon the rock." The Lord was present and through his power the water came forth. So it is with every one who puts their trust in him. In our severest trials he is near, and will support us with all his powerful arm. What a consolation! We may almost be submerged in the deep waters of affliction and distress, yet if we in faith and confidence reach forth our hand, Jesus will lead us gently through.

Reader is not this thought a glorious one? Have you this consolation? Can you amidst the trials of this life look up in confidence to him who has promised to be near? Have you never felt the need of his supporting arm? Ah! yes, there are, no doubt, times when you are nearly ready to sink, when your frail craft is being tossed to and fro on life's rough sea, and then it is that God will be near, even before you, if you put your trust in him.

Having noticed our reliance upon God in our difficulties and straits, we will next notice that the rock as used in this Scripture may represent Christ The apostle Paul in writing to the Corinthians refers to it and says, "that rock is Christ." How was Christ the rock? He is not really, but he may be denominated a spiritual rock. Not by substance and quality, but by signification and use. In respect to signification the rock is a beautiful emblem of Christ. It is remarkable for its solidity. Christ is represented as being the chief corner stone or that upon which we are to build our spiritual house. This conveys the idea of solidity. Christ is therefore the rock, the solid and substantial corner stone upon which we may safely build our hopes of salvation. The prophet refers to this stone and says, "I will lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation." So solid and firm is this rock that when anything is built upon it "the gates of hell can not prevail against it."

The rock is also very strong, and in this we have a resemblance of Christ. Mary experienced the power of God and says, "He hath shewed strength with his arm: he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats and exalted them of low degree."

All this God has power to do, and Jesus says, "all power is given to him in heaven and earth." And what examples we have of his power. How he could make the lame to walk, the blind to see, cure all manner of diseases, still the tempest, raise the dead, subdue unclean spirits and forgive sins. Jesus says that God the Father has given him power over all flesh; he has power to lay down his life and take it again. This he did and in his death and resurrection, we have one of the most striking examples of his strength. He overcame death and the grave. What power! Well may we wonder at the exceeding greatness of his power. But there is a very pleasing thought connected with Christ's unsurmountable strength. He it is to whom we look for protection and how secure we can feel under his guardian care. Oh that we could all feel how secure we are, and how willing he is to guide and protect us if we are only willing to look to him for help. What are we without God and Christ in the world? Could we only see how insignificant, how weak and how dependent we are, we surely would feel to flee to Christ for refuge.

The rock is also noted for its duration, support, and shelter and in this we also have the analogy of Christ. Christ endureth forever; there is no limit to his existence. He has promised to be with his disciples unto the end of the world, and after time shall be no longer on earth, those who put their trust in him, and follow him in the way, shall be where he is, there to dwell in his presence forever and ever. But Christ as the rock of our support is a very pleasing thought to the Christian. How weak the Christian soldier becomes sometimes amidst the great battles of this life. The enemy of souls labors hard for the mastery and in the great struggle for the victory, and when his steps become feeble and faltering, what a consolation it is that he can lean against Christ the rock and there defy the host of Satan. Oh what a support! The combined powers of the enemy cannot move it. It is immovable and endureth forever. And what would be our condition without this rock! To whom could we go for support and protection? Let us then dear Christian friends, in our seasons of grief, when our hearts are overwhelmed with the sorrows and cares of this life, and Satan in all his power comes up in battle array against us, lean against Jesus the rock that is

"Higher than I."

The rock represents Christ in that it was smitten. Christ once suffered, the just for the unjust, and as this rock was smitten in the sight of the elders of Israel, so Christ suffered at Jerusalem in the presence of a large multitude. The rock was smitten by Moses and the Law of which he is the representative, inflicted the death of Jesus. Thus were we redeemed from the curse of a broken law by the suffering of Jesus. This rock yielded no supplies until it was smitten, and so Christ when he suffered became the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him. The streams which flowed from the rock represents the blood of Jesus which "is drink indeed," the doctrines of the Gospel which are to the weary and heavy laden like cold water to the thirsty soul, and affords a pleasure and satisfaction which nothing else can give.

Dear reader we all need this refreshment and Jesus says, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Oh let us all drink of the stream that flows so freely by the throne of God. J. H. B.

Dear Brethren:

I have been reading the PILGRIM for some time and seeing the subject of the Sabbath discussed I have concluded to give a few thoughts on the subject.

The New Testament witnesses to the law and to the prophets; and that it is said to have been written from six to sixty five years after the resurrection of Christ, and after the church had properly commenced. And it is easy for us to understand how these Apostles understood and practiced with regard to the Sabbath. Christ and the apostles are our examples, therefore if there was any such institution known and frequently spoken of in the church as Sabbath, in those different ages of the church, we can easily know what was then meant by it. Some say if we keep the seventh day of the week, we will keep a Jewish Sabbath. Well, we have no Savior to trust in but Jesus Christ, who was according to the flesh, a Jew—no other apostle, and prophets but Jews—no other than Jewish Scriptues, and indeed, Jesus said himself that salvation is of the Jews." John 4: 22. And what did the writers of the New Testament mean by the words "Sabbath" and "Sabbath day?" What did Matthew mean in the sixth year of the christian church? He certainly did not mean the first day of the week, but he meant the day before the first day of the week. See Matt. 10: 28, and 1. He meant what all other Jewish writers always meant, viz: "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." But neither Matthew nor any of the apostles ever told us a word about the Sabbath being changed from the seventh to the first day of the week.

Now if the Scripures cannot be broken, but everywhere mean one and the same thing, viz: the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, then if ministers contradict this and say the seventh day is not the Sabbath of the Lord, but the first day of the week is the Sabbath, will they not in this bear witness clearly and positively against themselves, unless they bring forward the chapter and verse where God commanded the Sabbath to be changed? What did Mark mean by the word Sabbath? He meant also, that the Sabbath was the day before the first day of the week. Mark 7: 10. 12 Surely, if the Sabbath had been changed at the resurrection of Christ Mark would have known it ten years afterwards.

What did Luke mean who wrote 25 years after the resurrection of Christ? He also meant that the Sabbath was the day before the first day of the week, for he says that the women who prepared the ointment rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Luke 23: 56. Now I will refer you to the fourth chapter of Hebrews but especially to the seventh, eighth, and tenth verses. "Again he limiteth a certain day saying, in David, To-day, after so long a time; it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterwards spoken of another day. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own work, as God did from his. Again, Acts 16: 13. we read. "And on the Sabbath, we went out of the city by a river side where prayer was wont to be made." He does not say on the Jewish nor on one of the Sabbaths as though there were two Sabbaths then, but on the Sabbath, the seventh day, as understood by all Jewish writers to this day. Again chapter 17: 21. "Paul, as was his manner, went in among the Jews, and three Sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures." Thus have I shown that the disciples of Christ understood that one day in the week should be called the Sabbath day; and further I have shown that this day was the day before the first day of the week, which is the seventh day, and I do not think that you can deny it, nor by Scriptures disprove it, and every one who calls any other day the Sabbath besides the one so called by writers of the New Testament, gives a title which is no where found in the Scriptures. I think I have shown that the apostles called the seventh day of the week the Sabbath, and that too for many years after the church was fully commenced.

I will leave this subject for the present hoping that the brethren may weigh this matter well in the balances of truth, hoping that this may not give any offence. I would like to hear from some brethren on the subject.

Yours in much love.

JOHN A. CARTER.

WARSAW, IND.
March 24, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim:—

We come again with some good news for the readers of your valuable paper. I again paid a short visit to the Ogans Creek congregation. Left home on the 20th of March. Met with the dear brethren and sisters in this congregation in Church council on the 21st. Met brother Eld. Jacob Metzger of Eel River congregation and Bro. Jacob Kern, and Bro. C. Harter of Manchester congregation. The business before the meeting was disposed of for the present to the satisfaction of the church as far as we know. Had preaching in the Christian Church close by in the evening at 7 p. m. Bro. Metzger was with us at this meeting but had to return home next morning. Elder A. Leedy and Bro. Samuel Reneker, resident minister stayed with us and had meeting at Leslie's second house at 10 o'clock a. m. Bro. A. Leedy preached first, we followed with a few remarks. One baptized at this meeting. Bro. Leedy returned home. We tried to preach again in the evening when seven more made application to be received into the church. Having been called on to preach the funeral of little Martin Allisbaugh, son of Bro. and sister Allisbaugh, we deferred baptism till in the afternoon on Monday, when we again tried to preach the Word to a very large and feeling congregation. After preaching we called those forward that had made application and extended further invitation when five more came out on the Lord's side, making thirteen in all at these meetings. We then went to the water-where we had the pleasure of baptizing twelve just before sunset and one reclaimed. The brethren and sisters feel much rejoiced and encouraged in seeing so many of the best men and women joining in with them in so short a time. The water was very cold, but all stood it remarkably well. May the good Lord bless them all so they may dwell together in love's union. We again quit with the best of interest manifested, which makes us feel that many more will soon join in with us. We can but thank the dear brethren and sisters and friends for their love manifested towards us while among them. May the Lord bless all the dear brethren and sisters here. Yours fraternally.

A REPLY.

Clara Morrison: You fail to understand that part of my former article, which refers to the change of the Sabbath. Carefully read it again. Dan. 7 : 25, says nothing about changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. It has but little if anything to do with the case in hand.

What the Church of Rome has done, in changing times and laws, has nothing to do with the Sabbath as laid down in the Bible. The Jews kept the Sabbath, while the Christians honored the first day of the week, long before the Church of Rome was in existence.

Constantine's edict has no more to do with the origin of our day of worship than the Apostle's Cannon has with the origin of Christian Baptism. The fact in the case is, both were observed by the apostles and handed down to rising generations, as a witness on the road of time. Constantine calls the Lord's day, "the day of the sun," and the Cannons call Christian baptism, trine immersion.

The Jews were Abraham's seed, according to the flesh, but Christians are his seed according to promise Gal. 3 : 29.

The decalogue, circumcision, and the ceremonial law all came from the same source, i. e., from God. They were added because of transgressions till Christ should come. Gal. 3 : 19. Christ has come, and this law has he now taken out of the way, nailing it to the cross. Col. 2 : 14. The New Testament contains all the moral laws of the decalogue, but the Sabbath, being positive—a commemorative institution—has passed away with old things. It was a Jewish edifice, built upon two grand foundation stones. (1) God's resting on the seventh day, and (2) Israel's resting from the Egyptian bondage. Gen. 3 : 2—3, and Deut. 5 : 15.

Rom. 3 : 31 says nothing about making void the Sabbath through faith ; the word is not in the verse. The term law, has no reference to the positive law in the Old Testament at all, it refers to the moral law. The Sabbath was positive both in its origin and nature.

Matt. 5 : 17, 18, 19, refers to the law before it was abolished by the death of Christ.

John 20 : 26. The term "after eight days," properly includes the day from which the reckoning was made. This, then, would throw it on the first day of the week, as stated in my former communication. The New Testament says nothing about the apostles fishing on that day. They were assembled together in a room, when Jesus came, the doors being shut (John 20 : 26.) It was "after these things," (21 : 1.) when they were fishing at the sea of Tiberius that Jesus appeared unto them. Christ is our one Lord; he arose from the dead on the first day of the week, hence it is called the Lord's day. Rev. 1 : 10. This day was observed by the Children of God—epistles known and read by all men. 2. Cor. 3 : 2.

John, near the close of the first century, calls the first day of the week, the Lord's day. Rev. 1 : 10. Ignatius, who wrote in the beginning of the second century, speaks of the Lord's day after the following manner : "Let every friend of Christ keep the Lord's day as a festival the resurrection day, the queen of all the days, (of the week.") Apostolic Fathers, page 181.

[For the Pilgrim.]

A FATHER'S CARE.

I once had a father, but where is he now? He is gone to the spirit world, and my mother too is gone. O, think of the toil of parents for their children.

My father moved from Pennsylvania to Virginia in 1819, and lived there to see both of his wives put into the grave. Father was married twice. I am the youngest of the family. My mother died Nov. 9., 1860, and then my father lived there nine years, and then I went to Virginia on a visit, and then he came with me to Illinois, and lived with my brother and I, 4 years and 11 months. He died on the 27th day of Feb. 1874, aged 75 years, 9 months and 27 days. My mother died at the age of 71 years, and notwithstanding their ripe old age, they both died without any great grand children living to my knowledge. They were both members of the Mennonite Church, and they both died in that faith. My mother's funeral was preached by Jacob Hilderbrand in Augusta Co., Va. Text 4th chapter of Hebrews and ninth verse. Father's by Bro George W. Gish. Text 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th verses of the 4th chapter of 2. Timothy. Dear reader, I ask you again, have you at parents, and how do you heed them? Are you obeying them in all things, which is the first command with promise? I remember when my parents taught me to kneel down and pray with them. I never shall forget the prayers of my parents. They would sing and pray for their children. My father's last words were that God's blessings might rest on his children, and his spirit went to rest in Jesus' love. Reader, think of that prayer. Art thou a father? Are you bringing up your children in the way that they will not depart from, when they get old? Or, must your children say, I never heard my father and mother pray. The Savior's injunction is to "watch and pray." Childhood needs to be watched. Our temper needs watching, our old age needs watching. Let us watch and pray lest we enter into temptations. Watch for ye know not when your Lord doth come. Dear pilgrim, while we are watching, let us not forget to pray without ceasing ; in all things give thanks. The Saviour says, we shall pray and not faint.

Dear reader, let us accept the Prophet's words, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." "Whom the Lord cometh he chasteneth." The afflictions that come on us here are but momentary compared with the apostle Paul's. They work out a far more exceeding weight of glory in a world to come. We are all traveling to a spirit world, and if the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly appear in the day of judgement? What will you say? Will you say, I had no time to teach my children to pray or read the word of truth? This all will be no excuse for you. You can't say, my preacher taught me so, for the Savior says, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think you have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

I have written these few lines for the benefit of all who feel a desire to enter into the Master's Vineyard and labor. We all have one talent. Labor while it is called to-day.

My father's name was Martin Kindig, and mother's Mary Kindig.

Interrogatory——Explanatory.

Hoping to obtain the views of various brethren, I propose the following questions : 1. are elders and bishops synonymous terms? 2. And if so what degree of the ministry does an elder or bishop occupy? 3. Or if not synonymous, what degree does an elder occupy, and what degree as bishop? 4. And if an elder is one definitely ordained to the third degree or full ministry, why do our editors write "elder" knowing only that they whom they allude to are ministers? I would suggest a reference to Titus 1 : 5—7, from which I understand the term to be synonymous. Now dear brethren I hold that the term elder applies a position farther in advance than that of teacher or pastor, and implies to those who are to "be counted worthy of double honor." See 1. Tim. 5 : 17. Now suffice it is to say, I was moved to these thoughts on seeing my name in a periodical with the prefix "elder," and although being pastor and only teacher in our congregation, I would not dare to assume the title or positon of an Elder, as I understand the term.

Emma was a dear child, dear to her parents and brother; she was dearer still to the Savior and he took her thus early to a home in heaven, where the opening flower has been transplanted in Paradise, where it shall bloom forever.

Sorrowing friends, you shall meet your darling Emma again (if you humble yourselves and become as a little child in that blessed place where there are no partings, and the broken links of affection shall be riveted again never to be separated. All is well. Funeral sermon by the Brethren.

S. W. E.

SHADE.—In the Spring Run congregation, Mifflin Co., Pa, on March 16th, sister Barbara, daughter of Daniel Bechoar deceased and wife of brother B. F. Shade, aged 30 years, 2 months and 7 days

Funeral services by brethren Wm. Howard and Joseph Hassawalt.

She was anointed during her sickness according to the direction of the Apostle James 5 : 14. She was fully resigned to the will of the Lord. She leaves one child, a daughter eight days old, and a husband who has lost a dear, kind wife. She conversed sensibly on her death bed and did not seem to dread death. It now remains for us to follow our Lord in all his appointed ways, so that we can meet her in the Kingdom of the Lord.

BRUMBAUGH.—In the Clover Creek congregation, on Sunday morning Apr 5th, brother Samuel Brumbaugh, aged 47 yrs. 3 mos. and 7 days.

His remains were interred on Tuesday the 7th. The occasion was improved by Elder D. M. Holsinger, Jacob Miller and others from Heb. 13.

The subject of the above notice was a consistent member of the Church for many years and we hope that though he is not of our number any more, that his spirit is basking in the unsullied climes of heaven. He leaves a widow and many sons and daughters to mourn their loss. May the occasion be the means of bringing them closer to their Savior, that they may be re united to their father in the Kingdom of immortal glory, where they will not any more be called upon to part, but with the Lord enjoy one another's society throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity. Jac. L. Wineland.

SHEETS.—March 23,1874 near Lock, Elkhart Co, Ind, friend Peter Sheets formerly of Lancaster Co., Ind, aged 38 years 5 months, and 25 days. Funeral discourse by John Metzler and J. C. Burkholder, from Isaiah 38 : 1. "Set thine house in order for thou shalt die and not live."

He met with a very sudden and in all probability very unexpected death. He left home in the morning, went to the town of Elkhart with a load of wood, disposed of his wood, and started home between 5 and 6 o'clock, got about one mile out of town, where he was found shortly afterward, lying in the road and his team gone; was taken to a house near by, where in a few moments he breathed his last. Nobody being with him, and he not being able to speak any more, it will ever remain a mystery how he came to his death. The terrible news was brought to the family at about mid night, where they were up yet waiting for him to come home. At about 3 o'clock there was word sent for one of his daughters, who started with us at the time. Very sad did I feel to go and wake her, and tell her of the death of her father. But I hope their bereavement will be for good in the end, that the sister will put her trust in the Lord, and if possible, double her diligence in serving him, and the children who are grown up will see the vast importance of being prepared to meet death anywhere and at all times. A wife and eight children are left to mourn their loss.

J. R. Miller.

SELECTIONS.

DON'T SCOLD.

BY EULA LEE.

If things go wrong in the household,
(As often they will, you know,)
Or you're worried out with cares that vex,
And the children try you so.
Don't sit in the vale of shadows,
Or stoop to be a scold;
'Twill only make it worse, you see,
When you grow gray and old.

I know how things will bother,
While work seems mountain high,
And the adding of a feather's weight,
Makes you feel as if you'd fly;
And then perhaps your husband,
Says something quite unkind;
(He has his worries, too, poor man,)
So pray, then, never mind.

A sharp retort is best unsaid,
Though censure's hard to bear;
But John may think you're most to blame,
If you his spirit share.
Then keep your temper, gentle Nell,
Just do the best you can;
And by-and-by God will unfold,
The secret of His plan.

I've had my troubles, too, dear Nell,
And many and many a day,
If the Lord had not been with me,
I'd have fainted by the way.
Then let faith fold her brooding wing,
O'er all your doubts and fears,
And God will give the needed strength,
Through all the coming years.

Evangelist.

PIETY AT HOME.

True piety begins inwardly, and works outwardly. It begins in the heart, and works the reformation of the inner, and then the outward conduct. It begins with love in the soul, and then takes in relatives and friends, then neighbors, the community, the country, and finally the whole human race. The best Christian may have failings at home, but for these he is sorry, and labors hard to overcome sins that easily beset him. One should be deeply pious at home, because there is where he is the most part of the time. If he is religious only when abroad, he is religious, if it can be said he is at all, but a very little of his time.

One who shows but little interest in religion only when in public, and not at home, imposes on those not acquainted with his daily life, in that they take him for a warmly-devoted Christian, when in reality that is not the case, the principles of Christianity not being carried out at home, where they are most needed.

It is at home where the main warfare with sin is to be carried on and the victory over Satan gained. There the ills of life are mostly met; there temptations assail the most fiercely, and there the greater part of provacations to impatience, anger, and hasty conversation are found. So that at home grace must triumph, religion abound, and sin be overcome, or it will not be so anywhere.

To be useful to others, we must be decidedly religious at home. If so in appearance abroad, and not at home, the real character will, at length, in most cases, be found out, and confidence in what is said, though it may be the truth, will be lost, and the earnest words be of no effect. It will be felt that such speak the truth, but do not live it.

Religion which manifests itself mostly in public, and not in the home-circle, is not genuine, but is a counterfeit; and the one who has it may at last be weighed in the balance and be found wanting. Let us all examine ourselves; be Christians at home, where our influence on children and others of the family circle will be most powerfully felt, and then it will be easy to be religious abroad.

Selected.

THE BUSINESS OF CHILDREN.

Children ac well as adults should have occupation. Idleness is an abomination at any period of life, from the cradle to the grave. "For Satan finds some mischief still, for idle hands to do." Nature knows nothing of idlers. If children are natural why should they be idlers?

Now the business of children is to grow. This may be a new theory, a startling innovation, a revolutionary sentiment, but we think it is true. As we look over the world we find that children generally are put to all other businesses except growing. They are permitted to grow; if they can, but compelled to do every thing else. The growing is secondary and incidental, when it should be primary and fundamental. Children are confined six hours a day in the schoolroom under the delusion that they are being educated. They may indeed learn to repeat words and talk phrases. But all the ideas they get at the expense of bodily development are useless or worse. They may recite all the books, from Alpha to Omega, and yet we know-nothings for all practical purposes. Cultivating the mind at the expense of the body was never done and never will will be. All attempts in that direction only dwarf and enfeeble both.—Science of Health.

ECONOMY.

One of the hardest lessons in life for young people to learn, is to practice economy. It is a harder duty for a young man to accumulate and save his first thousand dollars, than his next ten thousand. A man can be economical without being mean, and it is one of his most solemn duties to lay up sufficient in his days of strength and prosperity, to provide for himself and those who are, or may be dependent upon him in days of sickness or misfortune. Extravagance is one of the greatest evils of the present age. It is undermining and overturning the loftiest and best principles that should be retained and and held sacred in society. It is annually sending thousands of young men and young women to ruin and misfortune.

Cultivate, then, sober and industrious habits; acquire the art of putting a little aside every day for your future necessities; avoid all unnecessary and foolish expenditures. Spend your time only in such a manner as shall bring you profit and enjoyment, and your money for such things as you actually need for your comfort and happiness, and you will prosper in your lives, your business, and will win and retain the respect and honor of all worthy and substantial people.

MARRIAGE.

It is the happiest and most virtuous state of society, in which the husband and wife set out early together, make their property together, and with perfect sympathy of soul graduate all their expenses, plans, calculations and desires, with reference to their present means, and to their future and common interest. Nothing delights me more than to enter the neat little tenement of the young couple, who within, perhaps, two or three years, without any resources but their own knowledge or industry, have joined heart and hand, and engage to share to the responsibilities, duties, interests, trials and pleasures of life.

The industrious wife is cheerfully employing her own hands in domestic duties, putting her house in order, or mending her husband's clothes, or preparing the dinner, whilst, perhaps, the little darling sits prattling upon the floor, or lies sleeping in the cradle, and everything seems preparing to welcome the happiest of husbands and the best of fathers, when he shall come from his toil to enjoy the sweets of his little paradise.

This is the true domestic pleasure—the "only bliss that survived the fall." Health, contentment, love, abundance, and bright prospects, are all here. But it has become a prevalent sentiment that a man must acquire his fortune before he marries; that the wife must have no sympathy; nor share with him in the pursuit of it, in wich most of the pleasure truly consists; and the young married people must set out with as large and expensive an establishment as is becoming those who have been wedded for twenty years, This is very unhappy.

It fills the community with bachelors, who are waiting to make their fortunes, endangering virtue and promoting vice; it destroys the true economy and design of the domestic institution, and it promotes idleness and inefficiency among females, who are expecting to be taken up by a fortune, and passively sustained without any care or concern on their part; and thus may a wife become "not a help-mate, but a help eat"

Winslow.

A TRUE LADY.

Beauty and style are not the surest passports to respectability—some of the noblest specimens of womanhood that the world has ever seen have presented the plainest and most unprepossessing appearance. A woman's worth is to be estimated by the real goodness of her heart, the greatness of her soul, and the purity and sweetness of her character, and a women with a kindly disposition, and a well balanced mind and temper is lovely and attractive; be her face ever so plain and her figure ever so homely, she makes the best of wives, and the truest of mothers. She has a higher purpose in living than the beautiful, yet vain and supercilious woman, who has no higher ambition than to flaunt her finery on the street, or to gratify her inordinate vanity by exacting flattery and praise from a society whose compliments are as hollow as they are insincere.—Eugene.

Conformity To God's Will.

Unless I make religion my great and engrossing concern, I shall be a stranger to all peace and enjoyment. I have at times caught a glimpse of the comfort which it yields to the spirit, when I merge my will into God's will—when I resolve to have no will of my own seperate from God. I feel quite assured that this renunciation of self, and entire devotion to God's service, would give a simplicity and grandeur to my existence—would throw an unclouded sunshine over all my ways— would raise me above the cares and provocations of life--would enhance even my sensible gratifications of a higher order, which constitute the main and essential ble-sings of heaven. O my God, may it be thus with me! Call me out of nature's darkness into thine own marvelous light. Give me to aspire after the graces, and hold forth to acquaintances, and above all, to my children, the example of righteousness! Conform me to the gospel economy under which I sit, that as Christ died for my sin, I may die to it; that as he rose again, I may rise to a newness of life, and feel it is my meat and drink to do thy will.—Chalmers.

Well-Spent Life.—Dr. Cotton Mather, who was born at Boston, U. S., in the seventeenth century, commenced a life of the most active beneficence when very young, and at the age of sixteen adopted as a maxim that a power and opportunity to do good not only gives the right of doing this but makes it a positive duty. On this maxim he determined to act, and continued to do so during the remainder of his days. Accordingly he began in his father's family, by doing all the good in his power to his brothers and sisters, and to the servants. After he had attained to man's estate, he imposed on himself a rule "never to enter any company where it proper for him to speak without endeavoring to be useful in it; dropping, as opportunities might offer, some instructive hint or admonition." Not a day passed without some contrivance on his part "to do good," nor without his being able to say, at the close of it, that some part of his income had been distributed for pious purposes.

Ten good Friends.—"I wish I had some good friends to help me on in life!" cried idle Dennis, with a yawn.

"Good friends! why you have ten," replied his master.

"I'm sure I haven't half so many, and those I have are too poor to help me."

"Count your fingers, my boy," said his master.

Dennis looked at his large strong hands.

"Count thumbs and all, added the master.

"I have; there are ten," said the lad.

"Then never say you have not got ten good friends able to help you on in life. Try what those true friends can do before you do not get help from others.

If you are not your own friend, it is foolish to expect others to befriend you. Providence only helps those who help themselves.

We can see the struggle, and hear the sigh
Of this sorrowful world of ours;
But in loving patience God sits on high,
Because he can see its flowers.

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

The committee appointed by the last General Assembly to consider the question of rotary elders in the Presbyterian Church have agreed to the following amendment to the rule on that subject: "If any particular church by a vote of members in full communion, shall prefer to elect ruling elders for a limited time on the exercise of their functions, this may be done by consent of Presbytery, provided the full time shall not be less than three years."

In reading the report of the joint committee on union measures between the Synod of the Reformed Church of America and the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South, the way is not clear to organic union—the only step taken being to provide for two representatives from either body, in the general meetings of the other—there appears to be the utmost readiness to identify the two bodies in all measures of Christian activity. In home foreign missions, publications, education, employment of ministers, the recommendations provide for impartial co-operation

A remarkable movement headed by a native says. The Freeze of India, has set in among the people of Eastern Bengal. The leader has a number of followers, who read the Scriptures and endeavor to live after the example of the apostles and early Christians. They are vegetarians, and discard the use of medicine, seeking the cure of sickness by prayer to Christ. Such movements, outside of the church, and mingled as they are with error, show how the Gospel influence is growing strong in India, and how awakening men's attention to its truths.

THE JEWS OF ROME.—A correspondent of the Archives Israelites speaks of the complete dissolution of the Jewish congregation of Rome. Since the members can no longer be compelled by law to discharge their contributions towards the support of the congregational institution, they refuse to pay their taxes, so that the secretary even has to resign his position, because he can no longer obtain his salary. The synagogues are but little visited, the schoolhouse is deserted, parents send their children to Catholic schools, and do not even take the trouble to see that they are dispensed from attendance when religious instruction is given. There are still a few devoted men left, but the apathy of their co-religionists frustrates all their efforts to effect any re-organization, and they will finally have to abandon it. The whole Jewish population (nearly 5,000 souls is strictly orthodox.—Jewish World.

One of the saloon keepers in Ohio said he would let the women sing as much as they liked, but he would not allow them to pray on his premises. But they did.

There is much uneasiness felt in the Episcopal Church of Virginia as to the future position of its clergy in regard to the leading questions of Church doctrine and polity, and serious apprehensions exists as to the course most likely to be taken. There is no expectation that the movement of Bishop Cummins will be followed, but it is said to be not impossible that a more important and effective protest against the new sacerdotalism which is represented by the Bishop of Illinois and his sympathizers will be made. Virginia churchmen boast of their historical record, and refer to the acts and conventions far older than the date of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, with a feeling that recent ritual innovations are not only very heretical, but also somewhat slovenly.

The Roman Catholics in Mexico are still carrying on their murderous assaults upon the Protestants. On the night of March 7th a Roman Catholic mob attacked the Protestant chapel in Puebla, smashed the windows and furniture, destroyed the Bibles, and stoned the pastor, the Rev. Antonio Corral. This will only serve to advance the cause of Protestantism, but it is not the less to be deplored on its own account. We trust that these outrages will lead to more efficient measures for securing the religious liberty to which the people are entitled under the present government. We have no further accounts in regard to the assassination of the Rev. Mr. Stephens.

CURES ALL KINDS OF CATARRH.

So successful has Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery proven, as a constitutional treatment for Catarrh, when coupled with the use of Dr Sage's Catarrh Remedy, applied locally by the use of Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, the only method of reaching the upper and back cavities of the head, that the proprietor of these medicines has long offered a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh which he can not cure. The two medicines, with instrument, for $2 by druggists.

POETRY.

"SO IS THE KINGDOM OF GOD."
ST. MARK IV. 29-30.

I.

A pleasing fancy, and a sweet, was that
Which led the ancients to enshrine within
The life of every shrub, and bush, and tree,
A spirit tutelar, a guardian.

II.

Imagination is not called to fill
A mighty blank that we may yet behold
The active workings of these wood nymphs now.

III.

Seated beneath the spreading, moss grown arms—
Of some great, ancient forest king, when first
The yearly resurrection is begun,
One almost hears their little voices breathe;
For there are silent influences here
And powers at work that tell far more than words
Could do of something greater than the roots,
And trunks, and bark, and branches of the trees;
A something great, and strong, and powerful,
To rouse their sleeping forces into life.

IV.

The sun has warmed the all-supporting mold
Until no chill remains, and the light breeze
Woos each soft bud and leaflet succulent
To spring forth in the fullness of its growth.
Here the brave hickory parts the furry cloak
Which wrapped its germ now big with lusty life.
Here keeping holiday, the larch hangs out
Its tassels pendant from each bending twig.
The willows stand arrayed in trailing robes,
With long and slender branches swaying low
To kiss the grass of deeper green beneath.
The maples, lindens, and the stately oaks
In turn assume their emerald, festal garb;
Each bursting embryo on stemlet borne
Contributing its mite—a leaflet first,
To afterward become a full grown leaf—
And all to keep the Spring time festival.

V.

Thus in the tree-tops overhead goes on
The ages old and ever new design.
Down at the leaf-spread roots of these same trees
A no less wonderful design appears,
Worked out, we know not how, nor can we know.

VI.

The treasured germs of life expand within
The seeds embosomed in the rich, moist soil,
Burst the dark tenements, come forth and live,
Spreading their rootlets in dark silence down,
And holding up their little crumpled leaves
To grow and gather strength in air and sun.

VII.

By night and day the miracles goes on,
But men are blind and cannot see the change.
God knows the growth of His implanted life
May be the same in hearts we cannot read;
He, entering the secret places deep,
May find abundant evidence of growth
Were we find naught.

VIII

Full well the ancients spake
When, in the twilight knowledge of their day,
They unto every shrub, and plant, and tree
Attributed a Guardian Deity;
But we, who read the wide, unfolded page
Of Nature by a fairer, clearer light,
Know that each tree, and plant, and tender herb
Has over it a Guardian God as great,
As potent, as the One that cares for men;
As great, as potent, since He, is the same.

IX.

Each seed, each dormant life has heard His voice,
Although unheard by obtuse human sense.
Saying unto it as He said of old,
With kind authority to Lazarus:
"Come forth."

X.

Obedient to the high command
They came, and by their coming say to men:
"Behold in us a proof, miraculous
Of that one miracle on which depends
The life eternal of the sons of men."

XI

O fools and slow of heart!
To still withhold belief and say: "Not yet.
It cannot be. We cannot yet believe
That man has risen or can rise from death."
Is not the resurrection of the life,
Which simulated death through all these months,
A miracle as great, enacted o'er?
A pledge sufficient, and miraculous
Enough to scatter doubt and unbelief
Forever? To convince the candid mind
And lead it, glad, to revel in the light
Of certain trust in the Awakened Life?

XII.

Miraculous!
But every tender bud and bloom put forth,
By every leaflet, leaf, and tiny plant,
By every blade of grass and growing stalk,
By every form of vegetating life
The message of the Risen Son of God.
To him who will and him who will not hear,
Is told anew in silent eloquence:
"I am the Resurrection of the Life."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

[FOR THE PILGRIM.]

WHY ARE WE MISREPRESENTED?

Not long since I wrote upon the margin of one of the leaves of a small book belonging to the library of this institution something like the following: "The above is mainly false; the Dunkers are not and never were the people here represented." The book referred to bore the title of a Dictionary of religious information, and on the page alluded to, it professed to make the enquiring student acquainted with our fraternity, how we look, what we believe, and what we do. Among other things the student is informed that the Dunkers never lay their weary heads upon pillows softer than blocks, they live in colonies and have all things common, and though marriage is permitted, celebacy is held to be a great virtue. We will find almost the same statements in another book called a "History of all Religions," which has, no doubt, attained a large circulation; and in how many other works we are thus misrepresented I know not, neither is it pleasant to contemplate.

And now shall we accuse the writers of these books of willful misrepresentation? of publishing premeditated falsehoods expressly to prejudice the people against our humble fraternity. I, for one, prefer not to do so. I cannot do so with a sense of fairness. No doubt the above authors believed what they wrote to be the truth; what they affirmed was in accordance with the best information they had upon the subject. And now the question is, why were they not better informed? I will admit that it was their business to be better informed, but let not the whole blame rest where only a part—and in this case perhaps only the lesser part—belongs. Has these men been furnished with the proper data, or has such data been placed within their reach, we would then have either just cause or no cause to censure them—that is there would then have been willful misrepresentation or no misrepresentation at all. It is more charitable to suppose the latter.

I will not dwell upon what harm that such mis statements will do; this will be apparent after a little reflection as to the pertinacity with which preconceived ideas clings to the minds of most people, and as to how much all, especially the young, influenced by first impressions. The practical question for us is, where is the fault and how may it be corrected?

In my opinion the mischief is owing, in part at least, to that spirit which would forever keep the Church in the wilderness, without literature, without schools, and I fear considering the multitudes of precious souls for whom Christ died, without members. Of the many thousands who would "walk with us in the way," if they but had a chance, how very few have ever heard of the church of the Brethren! Are these the chosen few whom Christ says shall walk upon the narrow way? Who dare say they are not, and yet who dare say that these are all Christ came to seek and to save? Millions might be saved (and millions we trust will be) and yet the number of members would be small compared with the countless multitudes that have lived upon the earth and multitudes who may yet live upon it. And did not Christ make atonement, not only for a few, but for the sins of all? And unless we posess his spirit of love—a love that embraces the whole human race—our prospects for heaven are not as bright as they might be no matter how small the organization to which we belong (having the good fortune as we think to be taught right) or how successful in concealing ourselves in the wilderness where we could get along without periodicals, books, schools, publishing houses and other agencies calculated to disseminate knowledge and thus make mankind at large acquainted with our true status as a Church, both from a secular and from a religious standpoint.

Why we should so zealously avoid collecting statistics and publishing facts I cannot conceive, and doubt very much whether good reasons can be assigned. The ministerial list published in our Almanacs is one step in the right direction. Why not take a few more in the same direction, and then as many more as the highest interests of the Church and the cause of Christ demands? It is possible to be progressive and yet not "remove the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set," just as it is possible for a man to be an enterprising, progressive farmer without trespassing upon his neighbor by crossing the "line" which his ancestors marked out.

REMINISCENCES. NO. 1.

"Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them and be established in the present truth; I think it meet as long as I am in this tabernacle to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." 2 Peter 1: 12-13.

The text sets forth the fact that the apostle was anxious to stir up the pure minds of his brethren to a remembrance, of what? Of the past of course, and the past is what they had been taught, and perhaps no less in the past their own conduct in life; but for a better understanding read the preceeding verses of the chapter named.

For I would "that ye may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance,"—the things that pertain to faith, virtue, knowledge &c. And after the apostles had stirred up the minds of their brethren to a remembrance of the things of the past, it was a source of satisfaction to them to look back on the past, and bring to remembrance the conduct of their own lives. Paul on occasions when he vindicated his religion, always referred to his conversion, and finally when viewing his life he says, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." 2 Tim. 4: 7

Christ said he would send the Holy Spirit and he would bring all things to our remembrance whatsoever he had said unto us.

Many more like references might be adduced to show the remembrance that holy ones had of the past. The good, for examples for the present and future, and the bad for examples of the consequences that they would avoid.

"Now all things happened unto them for ensamples, and they were written for our admonition." 1 Cor. 10: 11. For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scripture might have hope. Rom. 15: 4. From the above Scripture we see that remembering the past was nothing unpleasant to early Christains, and no less a point that Christ endeavored to impress on the minds of his followers ;then in as much as what was written, was written for our learning, they should be as ensamples to us.

No doubt all of us could improve our department if we had a proper recollection of the past, by which we are enabled to avoid or improve the worze, and that improvement would naturally be conducive to our better qualities.

Then it becomes obvious to all that it is not only a privilege but a duty to cultivate our memory, and store our minds with things ot the present, so that in after days our lives may seem as a highway that we have traveled before, and thereby be able to shun or avoid the unsafe places.

I do not wish to be understood that we must live through a long life before we know what living is, but the life of others are, or should be, examples for us, but we may read and study the lives of others a lifetime through, and then not be benefited in the least unless we reduce them to practice. Just so with our own lives, our conduct is not worth remembering if we do not intend to profit by it.

For fear I be to prolix, I shall close this article. But if spared and the Lord be our helper, we will endeavor to give a few more articles under the caption on raising, educating, and governing our children, and such other things that may occur to our mind. J. B. LAIR

THE WILL OF GOD.

"Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die?" Ezekiel 33: 11.

In the text we have a negative and a positive will of God. Negative, "Say unto them, As I live saith the Lord God; I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked.". Positive, "but that the wicked turn from his evil way and live." The doctrine that God has predestinated a part of his creatures to destruction, and part to salvation, is in direct conflict with this revealed will of God, and is no legal excuse for the wicked continuing in disobedience and sin, feigning to believe, as some say they do, that they are predestined unto salvation, or damnation, their doom is sealed, do what they may to effect or avert it. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," in connection with his revealed will as it is in the text, proves to a demonstration that it is optional with the wicked to be saved or damned. God charges his ministers to say unto all, "The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression; as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth" The soul that sinneth shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son; the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. But if the wicked shall turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he has committed shall not be mentioned unto him; in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways and live? When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquities, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die. Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul and live because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die." (Exe. 18: 20—28). I have made this lengthy extract in order to have the reader read it, a mere reference being seldom looked up and read in proper connection.

I fail to conceive what language the Lord God could employ to bring before man the conditions upon which his salvation depends more clearly than in the language before us. And having set before man the conditions of life and death, He leaves him a moral or free agent to choose either, at his pleasure. With this proviso however that if he chose righteousness, and lives in the way of the Lord awhile, and then turns to unrighteousness and die in it, his righteousness shall not save him, he shall die for his wickedness. And if the wicked turn from his wickedness and do righteousness, and die in it, his wickedness shall not be mentioned against him, but he shall live. Can these conditions be misunderstood? And are they not just and equitable?

St. Paul speaking of a class of unrighteous men, who, he says, shall not inherit the kingdom of God while living in such unrighteousness as he specifies, says: "And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the spirit of our God." 1. Cor. 6: 9, 10. This is conclusive evidence that even the grossly wicked may, and thank God, some do forsake their wickedness, and turn to righteousness, to whom the Lord says, "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live." And returning from wickedness to righteousness applies to all men, under all circumstances. I am aware that some apply it only to the unregenerate, but this undoubtedly is a misrepresentation of the will and word of God as revealed in the Scriptures. The Scripture heading this article was addressed to those who were in covenant with God, and relapsed into wickedness. And the New Testament Scriptures abound with similar declarations. All the reproofs and exhortations to repentance in the epistolary writings are addressed to those who were in covenant with God, and their denunciations are against those who will not return to righteousness by reformation and repentance. St. Paul says, "Lest when I come again my God will humble me among you and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of their uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed." 2. Cor. 12: 21.

These had been in covenant with God but had returned to wickedness, and if they continue in and die in it, their former righteousness will not save them. "It is not sinning that destroys the soul, but sinning and not repenting."—Matthew Henry com.

This being the will of God He wills that it shall be published, declared and made known in all the earth, so that if any die in his wickedness, his damnation will be the result of his own voluntary, and willful impenitence; and not the result of being predestinated to it by an act of God. And to this end he has ordained a ministry in his kingdom, the Church, who are set as watchmen to warn the people of the danger of sin, or wickedness. This He illustrates with a figure with which the people were familiar. "When I bring a sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman. If when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people, then whosoever heareth the trumpet and taketh not warning; if the sword come and take him away, his blow shall be upon his own head. He heard the sound of the trumpet and took not the warning, his blood shall be upon him: but he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul. This figure of illustration cannot be misunderstood.

It is the will of God that the wicked should be warned of the fatal results of wickedness; "warn them from me," which intimates that the evil can be prevented, else it were a a jest to give warning. "Now then we are embassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." 2. Cor. 5: 20. Sinners are therefore to be warned of the wrath to come, that they may flee away from it. It is the work of God's ministers to give this warning; to say to the wicked that it shall be ill with him if he die in his wickedness. God says in general, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." The minister's business is to define sin, and apply it to particular persons, assuring them that they will surely die if they continue in their sins. Sometimes ministers have much to say of the heinousness of sin, describing well debauchery of all kinds, and even assuring their hearers that such sinners persisting in their sins will inevitably perish, &c., but soothe it by saying I don't wish to be understood that there are any such in this audience; no, my friends I think better things of you, &c. Such a trumpet gives an uncertain sound, and no one is alarmed. So preached not the apostles. This same Jesus whom ye have crucified, preached St. Peter, and when his preaching pierced their hearts and they said, "what must we do?" his answer was prompt and general, "repent and be baptized every one of you," not only one grade or class of sinners, but every one of you, without regard to name, kind, or character of your sins; but every one of you can and must repent or you perish. And so must gospel ministers now preach, and sound the trumpet of alarm in and out of the camp. And he must not do it in passion to provoke the sinner, but in compassion to warn him of his wicked way, warn him that he may turn from it and live. And this is to be done by the faithful preaching of the Gospel in public, and by personal application to those whose sins are open. If such preaching and warning is unheeded by the sinner, and he perish, his guilt is with himself; the faithful watchman, the preacher is free, h soul is free from the blood of the sinner, he dies and perishes in his unrepented sins.

But if the watchman sound not the alarm, and warn the sinner of his danger, he brings guilt upon himself. Yet if the preacher do not warn the wicked of the ruin that is at the end of his wicked way, and the wicked perish in his iniquity it will in no way paliate his condition because the preacher has the unwarned blood upon his soul; for though the preacher did not do his part faithfully it will be no excuse for the sinner to live and die in sin, for he might have taken warning from the written word, from his conscience, and from God's judgment upon others, by which the sinner's mouth will be stopped, and God will be justified in his destruction. And although God says of the unfaithful watchman, who does not warn the wicked and he die also in his sins, "his blood will I require at thy hand," it will not avail the impenitent sinners to plead in the great day of the Lord, that his watchman did not warn him that they were unfaithful in the discharge of their duties, &c., for though it be even so, it will be made to appear that God left not himself without witness. Only he shall not perish alone in his sins, the unfaithful watchman shall perish with him in his iniquity. The blind leader will fall with the blind follower into the ditch. What a great deal an unfaithful minister will have to answer for in that day.

Dear reader these are the truths we have to deal with, and eternity will will reveal what part we act in the great drama of life. Let us heed the warning voice of the faithful watchman which declares in unmistakable tones that if we die in wickedness we will ever perish, but if we forsake wickedness and turn to righteousness, we shall ever live. Wickedness is sin, and sin is the transgression of the law, and the law of the Lord is the Gospel delivered to us by Jesus Christ, and is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe it, and the evidence that we believe it, is the obedience we render to all the commands and precpts. And righteousness consists in walking (obeying) in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. Hence disobedence to any command, or precept of the Lord is a transgression of any law, and is sin, which is wickedness; and not to turn from transgression to obedience and righteousness, is death to the soul. Knowing to do good and not do is sin as, well as to commit the act. To turn from wickedness to righteousness is to cease to do evil, and learn to do well: for the grace of God that brings salvation teaches not only to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, but also that we live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world.

And my dear brethren, the commandment of the Lord to his ministers the watchmen of Zion, is not only to preach faith, repentance, and baptism, which are the first principles of the doctrine of Christ to unregenerate sinners, but also to rebuke, reprove, and exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; but they shall turn away their ears from truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Tim. 4: 2—4) Are not these times come upon us? Is it not manifest that Christianity is corrupt in this very thing of having or having for themselves this very class of preachers who turn truth into fable?

And is it not noticeable even among us, that churches who have departed from the simplicity of the gospel, have jus. such preachers to sostain them in their departure? Oh! that the watchman would take heed to themselves, and to the doctrine, that thereby he might both save himself, and them that hear him.

In the second verse of the chapter from which I have taken the text that heads this article. God says, "Son of man, speak to the children of the people, and say unto them, when I bring a sword upon the land, if the people of the land take a man of the coasts, and set him for their watchman." Here a public danger gives the occasion for the appointing of a watchman; and it is a public trust that is lodged in the watchman, and he is accountable to the public for the faithful discharge of his trust. His business is to discover the approaches and advances of the enemy, and therefore must be neither blind, nor asleep, for then he could not see the enemy approaching. And above all he must be loyal to his sovereign, for if he be a traitor he will deliver the people into the house of the enemy. And hence the watchman must be true and faithful; diligent and vigilant in the discharge of his trust. And if he do all these, and give timely warning to the people of the enemy coming, then he has discharged his trust and delivered his soul. And if the people did not take the warning given them and were taken or killed by the enemy, their blood is upon their own heads, they have destroyed themselves.

Dear brethren, are we not in perilous times? Is it not high time that we are taking watchmen from our coasts, from among ourselves that are faithful men? Men who will give a faithful warning St. Paul says, "And the things that thou hast heard are among many witnesses, the same commit then to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others." 2 Tim. 11:2. We all know how we choose our watchmen, and I believe when properly done is the only correct way. But alas, how is it often done; what influences are brought to bear in many cases! If there be a brother in the church who has education and much free talk or speech, you may set him down as the chosen leader and watchman, whether he be devout, faithful, meek and humble, or not; these being minor matters, if the major one; education and gift of speech are well developed he is the man. But this kind of popularity gives the influence by which departures from the simplicity of the gospel are not only introduced into the church, but are maintained, and sustained by the masses, so that the warning voice of the faithful watchman is stifled and unheeded. A man once told the writer that "the Scripture evidently sanctions the doctrine you preach, but it is at least fifty years behind the times; this is a progressive age, and we must keep up with it or we will lose all our influence &c." Answer my dear friend, I want the origin of the doctrine I preach, and the kind of alarm I sounded, date back eighteen hundred years behind the present time.

Dear brethren, this being up to the times is what demands this fancy preaching and compromise warning among us. Is it not high time that we awake to the true sense of our duty to choose true and faithful men from among us, and set them as watchmen? Men who will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, who will sound the alarm at the approach of little as well as greater enemies to the cross of Christ. Then if the wicked will die in their wickedness their blood will be upon themselves alone. God help us to do so I pray in Jesus name. Amen. D. P. Sayler.

HUMILITY.

"Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." James 4: 10.

Humility is one of the attributes of God, and is taught by the apostle James, Peter, and in fact, by all the inspired writers, and should therefore be taught by all the embassadors of Christ. It is a principle as contrary to human nature as any other set forth in the Gospel. It stands in direct oppositon to pride, which is the most congenial to our nature, and therefore antagonistic to each other.

We shall first consider pride, for it has its thousands of avenues leading in every direction, except toward God, or his Holy Law, and is an abomination in his sight, which will not be gainsayed by any true believer of the truth. And is it not a little surprising to see the professed followers of God indulging and tampering with it in almost all its bearings. For instance, in point of dress, see the gaudy show and delight, in the giddy fashions that spring up almost daily. You need not look out into the broad world; simply look at the modern Christian, see the flub-dubs hanging around him or her, and you will wonder if the broad world can compete with them, They will wend their way to the sanctuary with as much gravity and politeness as the nature of the case requires, and hearken to the sermon with such attention that is, to all appearance, admirable. But when we look at it in light of revelation, and strictly study human nature, we are forced to this conclusion, that self is not denied, human nature is not crucified, the devices are not heeded, or in fact, we are ignorant of the devices of Satan, while Paul tells us we should not be ignorant of his devices.

When we are reproved for pride we are apt to blame it on the devil. Well, he is an arch devil, we are creditably informed, but we are also informed that if we resist him he will have to flee from us, so that the blame is not altogether in that direction, but a great part is on us for hearkening to his devices.

Now why is it that the majorty of christian professers do even supercede those who do not even profess to be Christians in carrying out the abominable customs and practices of the present age? The answer is, true Christianity is not in as flourishing a condition, nor in as healthy a state as commendable before God, and will soon require a new era to revolutionize the system, work away iniquity and begin a new order of things, for at the retrograde movement of Christianity, it will not take very long to become entirely extinct; or as nearly as it was in the days of Noah, yet the great cry is, Christianity is progressing. The Bible is carried to the heathen, the borders of Zion are enlarging, money is lavishly spent in building church edifices, cushioning their seats, carpeting their floors, decorating their pulpits, and furnishing a little cushioned stool for the minister to kneel upon when he goes to prayer, and the devotees who frequent those places of worship carry on their heads all the paraphernalia that Satan with all his hosts could imagine or possibly devise, and still called by the name of Christianity. Can the Prince of peace delight in such worship? Is it possible to conceive the idea of the presence of God where such devotees of the god of fashion congregate together with such superfluous adornment, more to attract the gay and please the eye, while their hearts are not uplifted to God, but uplifted to pride, worshipping the god of this world more for the sake of receiving the applause of men than the honor of God, while the Evangelist says, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." We see him with an eye of faith going up the side of the mountain, and there kneeling down on the ground for want of a better place, and there praying for poor humanity, seeing their awful, and their depraved condition, and spends a whole night in prayer for us. We see him going from place to place doing good to mankind, relieving the afflicted, feeding the hungry, both with temporal and spiritual food, but we see him not going from King to governor, and governor to senator, and legislator, but you can see him around the lake of Genesaret or sea of Galilee, gathering up the poor fishermen and sending them out to preach. What are the equipments? Take nothing for your journey, neither purse nor script, neither two coats apiece, but simply a staff, thus equipped he sends them forth as lambs among wolves. Their staff was the grace of God, for Peter says, (5:5) "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble," and thus equipped they are ready for the work against them, and met with more success perhaps than under similar circumstances in this fast age in which we live, where it begins to require an educated ministry, not only in the popular churches, but among the Brethren. We must keep up, they will call us dumb and ignorant if we do not talk grammatical and systematic, and that once established the other flummery must correspond. Up goes pride; down goes Christianity. The true glory of the Church departs, the landmarks which our fathers have set are lost. Then wo unto scribes and pharisees who love the uppermost seats in the synagogue, and the chief rooms at feasts,

Our text says, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord and he will lift you up." If the Lord will lift us up it is all right, but humility comes first, and Peter says, "God giveth grace to the humble." Grace means favor. If the favor of God comes to us by being humble, why not come down into the valley of humiliation? He who is proud is ignorant of his best interest. When we consider the greatness of God and the condescension of his love to us, and consider our own depravity, we have nothing to boast of, nothing to be proud of, we have done nothing to recommend us to God. It was a disinterested love that he ever made the offer he did to us, to become heirs of his, and joint heirs with Christ.

"Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls," says the Evangelist. Since he is such, he requires a sameness to us. God delights in the humble, accepts the worship of the lowly; to the meek is promised an inheritance in the new earth. Glorious promises for this class of God's chosen. A heaven is prepared for us all, and if we fail to obtain it there will be a sad disappointment when too late for remedy. Let the loud warning voice of every embassador for Christ go forth in thunder tones, Jona-like, peradventure pride will give way and the dim lights in the Christian prison will begin to flicker and illuminate the world, the church, and the drowsy followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and God will be honored and glorified and we will be benefitted as the poet says,

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We have no less days to sing God's praise,
Than when we first begun."

George Worst.

Dr. Adam Clark On Instrumental Music

The follwing I clip from the M. C. Review as a production from the learned English commentator Adam Clark. It needs no comment, but is logic that should command the attention of every member in the Brotherhood When ever we cease to sing with the spirit then we want instrumental music in our churches, that we may dispense with the spirit and use the instrument in its stead

J. H. Moore.

"Though I never had a personal quarrel with the singers in any place yet I have never known one case where there was a choir of singers, that they, did not make disturbance in the societies. And it would be much better in every case, and in every respect, to employ a precentor, or a person to raise the tunes; and then the congregation would learn to sing, the purpose of singing would be accomplished, every mouth would confess to God, and a horrible evil would be prevented—the bringing together in the house of God, and making them the almost only instruments of celebrating his praises, such a company of gay, airy, giddy, and ungodly men and women as are generally grouped in such choirs; for voice and skill must be had, let decency of behavior and mortality be where they will. Every thing must be sacrificed to a good voice, in order to make the choir complete and respectable. Many scandals have been brought into the Church of God by choirs and their accompaniments. . . . .

"The singing which is recommended Col. 3: 16 is widely different from what is commonly used in most Christian congregations;—a congeries of unmeaning sounds, associated to bundles of nonsensical, and often ridiculous repetitions, which at once both deprave and disgrace the Church of Christ. Melody, which is allowed to be the most proper for devotional music (singing), is now sacrificed to an exuberant harmony which requires not only many different kinds of voices, but different musical instruments to support it. And by these preposterous means the simplicity of the Christian worship is destroyed, and all edification totally prevented. And this kind of singing is amply proved to be very injurious to the personal piety of those employed in it; even of those who enter with a considerable share of humility and Christian meekness, how few continue to sing with grace in their hearts unto the Lord!"

"It does appear, that singing psalms or spiritual hymns was one thing that was implied in what is termed prophesying, in the Old Testament, as is evident from 1 Sam. x, 5, 6, 10, etc. And when this came through an immediate afflatus, or inspiration of God, there is no doubt that it was exceedingly edifying, and must have served greatly to improve and excite the devotional spirit of all that were present. But I rather suppose that their singing consisted in solemn, well measured recitative, than in the jingling and often foolish sounds which we use when a single monosyllable is sometimes shivered into a multitude of semi quavers. Here it may not be improper to remark, that the spirit and the understanding are seldom united in our congregational singing. Those whose hearts are not right with God have generaly no skill in music have seldom a devotional spirit, but are generally proud, self willed, contentious, and arrogant. . . . .

Some of these persons, I mean those who sing with the understanding without the spirit, suppose themselves of great consequence in the Church of Christ, and they find foolish, superficial people, whom they persuade to be of their own mind, and soon raise parties and contentions, if they have not everything their own way; and that way is as absurd as it is unscriptural, and contrary to the spirit and simplicity of the gospel."

On Saturday last the James Creek congregation held counc l previous to District Meeting. The propriety of a change of holding our A. M. was considered and it was unanimously agreed that a change would be for the better.

District Meeting of Middle Pennsylvania.

There has been a number of queries in regard to the time of holding our District meeting. The trouble results from the difference of time as previously published in the Pilgrim Almanac and the late notice given in the Pilgrim. We will now inform those concerned, that the brethren in the neighborhood where the meeting is to be held, for convenience have changed the time, and that the date given in the last notice is the established time for holding the meeting.

NEWS ITEMS.

The interest and usefulness of a paper depends on the amount and character of news it gives. We all have a natural disposition to know how others do, the fact is this is the sum of all good papers, and as we desire to make the Pilgrim a paper of general acceptation, we call upon all to keep us supplied with such news items as will be interesting and instructive to all our readers. Every person writing to us should send along some item of information that may be interesting to others, and we feel assured that something of this kind could be found in almost every locality. The condition of the Church, additions, order of meetings, fowarding of ministers, installing elders, change of residence, building churches, dividing districts, ministerial visits, condition and prospects of crops, and many others would all afford good items of news. Brethren, sisters, and friends, let us hear from you, give us the news and we will make such use of it as we think will be for the general good of our readers.

WORLDLY APPLAUSE.

Hypocrisy and saintism are quite different things, yet in the world we find them so admirably mixed that it is rather difficult to determine just where the hypocritical attainments end and where begins those of the saint. For the last twenty years the great Sumner was the meanest and most mischievious of all men ofstate. For the last twenty years it was the meat and drink of thousands of political and envious aspirants to pull him down and destroy his character, but as death has done the work for them, they have changed their howlings and we hear great lamintation and weeping. Is it possible that all these men have been so miraculously converted, or is it more possible that the greater part of it is hollow bombastic hypocricy? What a pity it is that some of his now good and noble qualities could not be seen while living. The empty brass-tingling praise that is now harped all over the land and the editorial subject matter of our thousands of periodicals cannot reach the death lulled ear of the great statesman. The tolling bells, half mast flags and the tastefully arranged garlands are all as solemn mockey in the eyes of the "Great I Am" who is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

But who was Sumner? He was, to give the most simple definition, a politician and statesman and held, during his eventful career, jost such positions of state as many others desired and could not attain to, because he stood in the way, hence while living he was envied with a most bitter envy by aspirants, but since his departure he is mourned for joy; he is now out of the way and as hypocritical praise is cheap they seem to see no good reason why it should be withheld. Is Sumner an exception? Nay, verily such has been the fate of the many who now sleep beneath the costly and higly ornamented marble monuments and thousands yet onborn may yet sleep nnder the same untimely honors.

Such is the sum and substance of worldly aggrandizement, and he who is willing to barter his soul away to obtain it is not wise. Sumner seems to have been a strictly political man, and his mind was so completely absorbed in the affairs of state that there was no time to devote to the one thing most needful, or else the world had not time to make note of it, as in the many notices of his lamented departure we learn much of him as a statesman, but not once as a Christian. The query now arises, does it pay thus to live and thus to die? Is such, indeed the will of God concerning man, or is there a higher, a nobler object for which he should labor? Was there not, where would be the the Christian's stay and hope, where the rock on which to plant the tempest-shaken feet? If this world of hypocrisy, deception and was the sum and substance of life, its sorrows and bitters would a thousand times engulf all its joys, and truly of all men the Christian would be the most miserable. That > "It is not all of life to live,

> Nor all of death to die,"

we are more than persuaded, and while we cannot all attain to high positions in the world, we are glad to know that it is the blessed privelege of all to be Christians and become the adopted sons and daughters of God, which position when fully attained is great gain.

THE END 1875.

As a number of our readers, at different times, have made inquiries in regard to the whereabouts of W. C. Thurman, we will now inform them that he is still living and has quite recently published another work on the prophecies in which he labors to show that "the time of the end" will come during 1875. The work is entitled, "Three Important Questions Considered."

1. "Is Jesus the Christ of God?
2. When will he come again?
3. Am I ready to meet him at his appearing and kingdom?"

That the author has given the subject a long and complete study and that he is well versed in chronology must be admitted but that he, in all his researches, is now able to point out the time of the end definitely remains to be proven. His first attempt in prophecy was an entire failure as is well known, but he now informs the world that since then he has given himself to the study of the Greek Text a knowledge of which, enabled him to point out a number of errors in his former work entitled "The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened." We are unwilling to admit that any man is or ever will be able to determine the time of this important event, yet we are not disposed to make light of anything pertaining to it, even to false prophets, for they too most appear to folfill the signs of his coming. In order that our readers may have some idea of the nature of the present work we give the following extract from an editorial in the Marturion:

In regard to the second question "When will he come again?" the amount of accumulative evidence that the author has brought to bear on the subject, all pointing to 1775, is truly astonishing, and one would think enough to convince the most skeptical that the times of the Gentiles cannot be extended beyond the coming year 1875. Then what follows? Nothing less than the advent of the Son of Man to raise the dead and establish His everlasting kingdom under the whole heaven, and to "destroy them that have destroyed the earth."

As most of our readers are aware, W. C. Thurman published a work some ten years ago, called "The Book of Daniel Unsealed." In that work the author shed a vast amount of light on the subject of chronology in connection with the exact folfillment of prophecy and prophetic times. Since then he has been deeply engaged in the study of history, and also making himself acquainted with the original language of holy writ. By this means, through the knowledge he has acquired, he has been enabled to detect and correct several errors, and bring to light many things having an important bearing on the subject of definite time. As an illostration, we will just refer to one text that has hitherto been shrouded in obscority, and which we think is very important to be understood. "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination of desolation set up, there shall be one thousand two hundred and ninety days." From this reading, it would seem as if the setting up of the abomination that astonisheth as it reads in the margin, was immediately to succeed the taking away of the "daily;" but in the case there is nothing whatever brought to view to mark the termination of the 1290 days. In this verse the author points out the omission, by our translators, of one important word and that is the adverb of time represented by the Hebrew letter lamed prefixed to the verb set up, which, when restored, and translated in full, reads thus, "from the time the continual shall be taken away, until a detestible, horrible, or a filthy abomination be set up, shall be 1290 days." Here then we see that by the restoration of one word we have an interval of 1290 between the taking away of a continual abomination to the setting up of a filthy detestible abomination. He gives incontestible historical evidence that the "continual" was taken away in the month of April, A. D. 540. But what occorred 1290 years or springs, as he shows the word is translated 20 times, thereafter? In reply to this question he points to the setting up of one of the most filthy, horrible and detestible abominations that has ever disgraced a civilized community since the creation of the world, and that is Mormonism—set up, established and organized on the 6th of April, just 1290 years from the fall of the Ostrogothic Kingdom and captore of Vitiges, the last king of the line, who was carried away captive to Constantinople in the spring of 540 by Belisarius, the commander of Justinian's army—an army that had been sent to Italy for the purpose of subduing and putting an end to the kingdoms of the Goths and Ostrogoths, whose capitals were Rome and Ravenna. Here then is a plain beginning and ending of those 1290 days—a period that never before has been satisfactorily accounted for. The author, however, points out another error of the translators, in their adding the definite article "the" in verse 11, before the "abomination" which addition has helped to obscure the sentence by taking the mind back to the same word in chapter 11: 21, where "arms should stand on his part," thos throwing the whole matter into confusion. But in translating the clause just as it stands, leaving out the definite article and inserting the adverb 'until" in accordance with the original Hebrew it may easily be seen that it is another abomination that it is to be set up, 1290 days after the continual has been taken away. As a strictly literal rendering of the text, he gives the following;

"For from the time that the continual shall be taken away, even until a detestable horror be set up, there shall be springs one thousand two hundred and ninety.' And as an authority for substituting 'prings's for days, he quotes Gesenius, who gives springs as the primary meaning of the word yamim, which sometimes, says Gesenius, "marks a definite space of time, viz., a year, as 1. Sam. 27: 7; Ex. 13: 10," and then, remarks Thorman, "but how much clearer if this Ex. 13: 10 had been rendered from spring to spring. (see Ex. 12: 3—10) Indeed, out of more than twenty times where the word is rendered years, there is not a text that would not have appeared clear had it been rendered springs."

He gives full authority in footnotes to each word as numbered for the above renderiog, and makes a strong point on the word springs, showing that beginning and ending of the periods all fall on the Spring of the year and are intimately connected with spring sacrifice in the month Abib.

Now if all this be correct, and we have no reason to dispote it, then it follows that the 1335 days or springs must end in the Spring of 1875.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is reported through the papers that an earthquake occurred in Tennessee recently, causing great excitement among the people.

REPORTS from India show that the condition of that famine-stricken country is getting better. There are, however in the northern portion of Tirhoot more than 500,000 persons dependent upon the government for food. Spring crops have yielded well except in Tirhoot.

A snow storm passed over Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and into Canada on the 5th inst. In several places near the centre of Illinois and Indiana, it was the most severe of the season, snow falling six, seven and even twelve inches.

A WESTERN paper states that ninety thousand tons of wheat and ten thousand tons of other produce was exported from Oregon during the past year. This trade has sprung up within a few years, and every year the exports are rapidly increasing.

BRO. John H. Miller of Holt Co., Mo., says, "The brethren generally are well. Our Spring is late. Snow on the ground at present, and has been for nearly a week. Our prayer is that you may go on sending the good news to distant homes."

A BAPTIST minister in relating his early experience says: "I preached a year for a certain society for fifty dollars. When the settlement was made at the end of the year, the committee had an item of twenty dollars charged against him for the use of the pulpit to practice in. One of the deacons, however had sympathy for him and presented him with a pair of boot-taps.

A settlement was completed recently between the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the estate of Jay Cooke & Co., whereby the advances made by the latter to the former are by the acceptance of the Company's first mortgage bonds and other securities. This settlement leaves the Railroad Company with only a nominal floating debt to be provided for.

SEVERAL meetings of Conferences by the Methodists have been held lately, and the reports of these meetings in the denominational papers, though chiefly relative to statistics and other matters, yet indicate that the occasion developed a large amount of interest, and that the tendency of Methodism is still to advance.

BRO. Josiah Beeghly of Accident, Md., in a recent letter to us says: "We have had cold and rough weather for over a week and snow every day. On Easter Sunday the hills and dales were covered with snow, and continued snowing briskly the next day. Very little plowing is done in this neighborhood this Spring."

BRO. Samuel Murray, of Huntington, Ind., under the date of April 5th says: "As general news are interesting, I will give you a few items. Our winter commenced very early, and was very mild throughout. About as hard a spell as we had was the last of October; very little snow all winter, no good sledding at all, but much rain. Our winter grain looked pretty well at the close of February, but through March we had dry and freezing nights, which pretty nearly ruined our wheat. The prospects for fruit are pretty good yet. On the night of the 3rd inst., snow fell two inches deep. Yesterday, Easter, it snowed and stormed nearly all day. This morning, the 7th, the snow is from 3 to 4 inches deep with a crust froze on it. The sun is now out and the snow is melting rapidly, and the propects for warm weather are better.

We were favored with a refreshing season in the Church in January. Five were added to the Church by baptism. Brother John Knisley preached for us. Since that time we were under the painful duty to disown three brethren who had united with the Granges, and would still continue with them."

HOW BOOKS ARE SUPPRESSED.

A curious literary anecdote has reached us of the times of Henry VIII. Tonstall, Bishop of London, accused at that day for his moderation in preferring the burning of books to that of authors, which was then getting into practice, to testify his abhorrence of Tindall's principles, who had printed a translation of the New Testament, a sealed book for the multitude, thought of purchasing all the copies of Tindall's translation, and annihilating them in the flame. This occurred to him when passing through Antwerp in 1529, then a place of refuge for the Tindalists. He employed an English merchant there for this business, who happened to be a secret follower of Tindall, and acquainted him of the bishop's intention. Tindal was extremely glad to hear of the project, for he was desirous of printing a more correct edition of his version; the first impression still hung on his hands, and he was too poor to make a new one; he gladly furnished the English merchant with all his unsold copies which the bishop as eagerly bought, and had them all publicly burnt in Cheapside. The people not only declared this was a "burning of the word of God," but it enflamed the desire of reading that volume; and the second edition was sought after at any price. When one of the Tindalists, who was sent to London to sell them, was promised by the Lord Chancellor, in a private examination, that he should not suffer if he would reveal who encouraged and supported his party at Antwerp, the Tindalist immediately accepted the offer, and assured the Lord Chancellor that the greatest encouragement they had was from Tonstall, the Bishop of London, who had bought up half the impression, and enabled them to produce a second.—Proof Sheet.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Brethren:

I have written a few times on the subject of the Sabbath, I will now try and give you a few thoughts about sin, and the Law and and the Sabbath. I will try and show what sin is, and of this I am not left to guess, or to suppose, as we have a given rule to know with a certainty what constitutes sin. By the law, then, is the knowledge of sin. By what law was the knowledge of sin twenty-four years after the resurrection of Christ? Answer: The very same law that was given when it was said, "Thou shalt not covet." The law then by which sin is known is "The Ten Commandments, and it cannot be denied, and this law saith, "the Seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day, whereupon the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day and hallowed it."—Ex. 20: 10, 11. Now, until this law is altered or abrogated, (and Christ says, "He came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfill the Law.") by the same power that enacted it, a wilfull transgression of it is a wilfull sin, let your profession be what it may, for sin is the transgression of the law. He that offends in one point, or in one of these commandments is guilty of all; i. e. a transgressor of the law, a sinner in the sight of God.

Now a regenerated soul, a true-hearted Christian, says with Paul, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man. The law is holy, the commandment holy, just and good," and any person who is not willing to keep the commandments of God, when so plainly understood, in the Scriptures, has still a carnal mind which is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. You might say this is judging, or this is a hard saying, who can hear it? I wish to judge no man but the word that the Lord has spoken, the same shall judge you in the last day." John 12: 48. "As many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my Gospel." Romans 2: 2, 12, 16. Then those who shall hold the truth in unrighteousness, these who pretend to keep the law differently from what God appointed it, those who, in fact, lay aside the commandments of God, and teach for doctrine the commandments of men, such the word says are vain worshippers of men.—Mark 7: 7.

But some say it makes no difference which day is kept or called the Sabbath-day, provided we keep one-seventh part of the time. This is not correct, because God never said so. God is not to be mocked in this way; He has been very good and kind to make the Sabbath for man, to appoint the day and the particular time of the day when the Sabbath is to commence and when it is to end; the seventh day in order from the creation—the seventh day in the creation, and He said, "From even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths," as the evening and the morning were reckoned for the day. God did not leave this subject undecided, so that His people would appoint different days and therefore every one to call his own the sabbath day. But God blessed and sanctified the seventh day, and and proved that particular day to be designated by Him, in the face of about six hundred thousand witnesses, in withholding manna on that day, and in giving food for two days on the day before.

Again, some say, "How shall we know which is the seventh day?" I answer, ask the Jews; for God has committed the lively oracles to them and then scattered them among all nations. Do we know when the first day of the week comes? Well, the Sabbath is always the day before the first day of the week.—Matt. 28: 1. But some may say, "Do not the majority of honest-hearted Christians keep the first day of the week, and have they not for centuries done common labor on the seventh day, and observed in obedience the fourth command, and still been honest in their motives, and living Christians? I answer, what is that to us so long as the true light of the sabbath did not come to their minds?

Now, we certainly know what sin is not by what popular writers say—not by the popular traditions of our fathers—not altogether by our feelings; but by the law of God is this knowledge, for sin is the transgression of the law, and all who have the law of God have an infallible and everlasting rule to know what sin is.

Art thou a willful transgressor of the law of God? Then by the law is the knowledge that thou art a wilful sinner before God. But if thou art an ignorant transgressor of the law of God then by the law is the knowledge that thou art an ignorant sinner before God, to say nothing of the presumptuous sins. I say if thou hast ignorantly sinned, then repent and reform, and God will heal you. Lev. 4: 2, 13. By the law of God, then, is the clear knowledge of sin. I speak to those who keep the Sunday, a day formerly dedicated to the worship of the sun, by the Pagans and afterwards brought into the Church by Constantine and Roman Catholics and called the Christian Sabbath, a name never known for the first day of the week by any of the writers of the New Testament. Dear Brethren I will close for the present, hoping that this will give no offense but, will only be the means of opening the eyes of those who love the truth and law of God; for it is our duty if we see a wrong, to try to correct it. I pray God that this may be seed sown in good ground, and may prosper the cause of Christ. May God bless us all in the last day.

JOHN A. CARTER.

SABABTON.

To BROTHER FURRY.—The reader will observe that in a former paper I stated that the "first day of the week" was never called "the Sabbath." Brother Furry admits this to be true according to King James's translation, but states that if I have reference to the Greek the statement is wrong. I remark that I have five translations in my library, and they all, without a single exception, sustain me in my position. About this there is no controversy, but the Greek yet remains to be examined, and I proceed to show that my position is correct according to my Greek Testament now before me.

The Greek word sabbaton in the New Testament has two meanings—1. "the Sabbath," and 2. "week." For the benefit of those who cannot refer to the Greek I will quote all the passages in the N. T. where sabbaton is [illegible] week.

Matt. 28; 1 as it began to dawn towards the first (day) of the week (sabbaton.)

Mark, 16: 2. in the morning the first (day) of the week (sabbaton.)

Mark, 16: 9. rising early the first (day) of the week (sabbaton.)

Luke 18: 12. I fast twice in the week (sabbaton.)

Luke 24: 1. upon the first (day) of the week [sabbaton.]

John 20; 1. The first [day] of the week [sabbaton.]

John 20: 19. the first [day] of the week —sabbaton.—

Acts 20: 7. the first —day—of the week —sabbaton.—

1. Cor. 16: 2. Upon the first —day—of the week —sabbaton.—

To test the position, whether sabbaton in the above quotations means sabbath instead of week, the reader is only to turn to the verses named and read them with the term sabbath in the place of week, and see whether it makes good sense. Though sabbaton is used, yet its meaning in there passages is not sabbath, but week.

If brother Furry will take his English Concordance and turn to the term week he will observe that it is invariably translated from sabbaton. Now then take your Greek Concordance and turn to the word sabbaton and you will observe that it is translated by both sabbath and week, depending upon its first or secondary meaning. In all the places that I have named its meaning is invariably week.

I refer to this matter, not to get into a discussion with brother Furry, but to sustain the position I had taken in a former article, and also to call the attention of some of the brethren more pointedly to the matter. J. H. Moore.

Dear Pilgrim :—

As I am not attending preaching to-day, and have just been reading the ever welcome visitor the PILGRIM and in reading so many articles written by the brethren and sisters, I thought I would try and write something, so as to be engaged in the Master's cause which I think it is the duty of all our brethren. This can be done in various ways, and under all circumstances, and I often think if we were as zealous in the Master's cause as we are in our worldly affairs, we might accomplish much good while pursuing our daily avocations. Our thoughts can rise heavenward in prayer for our ministering brethren and so help to hold up their hands; and in our daily devotions at the family alter we should not forget them, and in our private meditations we should remember them; we can pray at all times, and that too without ceasing. And let us earnestly pray that the sinner may be awakened to a sense of his duty, and that we may as members of the mystical body of Christ be awake and alive to a sense of our duty which we owe to God and the church for we are afraid that the church is becoming amalgamated with the world. What is this world that we become so wedded to it? We do not wonder at persons outside of the church that they become so attached to the world, for it is their god, but we that look and hope for a better world, wherein dwelleth righteousness, is it not a wonder that our minds can be so taken with these earthly toys? Again we see some whose heads are blooming for the grave who make no pretensions to godliness, and yet they have a family following them. Their whole aim, or appears to be, to raise their children in the luxury fashion and pride, that they may appear and stand high in the society of this world. That appears to be their highest aim. Oh! what an example to our offspring that God has left in our care and which are to serve a nobler and a higher purpose. We see these same persons get along smoothly in the world until sickness and distress take hold of their mortal frame, and then the scene changes. What alarm and what consternation then takes hold of their minds. Then they promise to serve God, but alas, when health returns again, where do we find them? Back in the flesh-pots of Egypt.

Brethren, how shall we reach such? They do not attend places where God is worshipped. It appears when we look at it in the gospel light that the world has their whole mind and time engaged, and that their is no room for the Savior of mankind. And when we meditate upon the condition of the unprepared soul that leaves this world in such a state, how awful the thought, and how it brings forth our sympathies! Almost every day brings us tidings of some one taken away to eternity without any warning of the approaching danger. Then how needful it is that we prepare for that journey from which no one ever returns. But we are glad to see that some are still willing to obey the heavenly call, and to humbly obey the commands our great Redeemer has handed to us through the apostles, prophets and holy men of old. So dear brethren and sisters let us earnestly contend for the faith that was once delivered to the saints, while we have such a sure foundation that cannot be spoken against. Let us hold fast our profession is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Railroad Arrangements.

Our brethren, sisters and friends wishing to attend our coming Annual Meeting, will be conveyed over the line of the Hamilton and St. Joseph Railroad to Quincy, at the usual reduced rates (on our western roads) which is full fare going and one-fifth to return. Return certificates will be furnished to all who may apply at the meeting. We think the brethren in southern Nebraska, Northern Kansas and Northern Mo. should take this route to Quincy, as there is clear connection with the Toledo and Wabash line to Jacksonville, or Virdin. We expect the Toledo and Wabash will also extend the favor as this will be a leading line for our brethren and friends from other points.

George Witwer.

N. B. Will the brethren in Nebraska, Kansas, and Northern Mo., try and ascertain how many will probably go, so as to enable me to know what number of return certificates to order printed.

I would further say I hope brother John Beeghly of Ill., will succeed in arranging with the Toledo and Wabash line and excuse my liberty for making the arrangements as stated,—(he being appointed by last A. M. to arrange for Western roads,) and as some of our brethren and friends who wish to attend the meeting lives right on the line of said road, we considered it our privilege to make application. 2d. Our brethren at District Meeting requested us to do so. 3. This Co. has always granted us reduced rates when called for by the Brethren, hence think their road should be patronized. G. W.

NOTICE.

The quota (average) for the North Mo. Congregations represented at last D. M. to defray expenses of delegates to A. M. will be about $6.00 each. Remittances can be made to C. C. Root, Mirabile, Caldwell Co. Mo., Eli Metz or the writer. All money raised should be sent not later than May 14.

BRUBAKER.—In the Somerset District, Grant Co., Ind., sister Mary, wife of Bro. John Brubaker, on the 22d of March, '74, aged 29 years, 11 months and 5 days. She leaves a husband and four small children, and many friends to mourn their loss. May they be comforted with the thought that they need not sorrow as those who have no hope beyond the grave. Funeral services by the writer in the Brethren's Meeting-house near Somerset, from 1 Cor. 22: 23. Samuel Murray.

TEETER.—In the English River District, Keokuk Co., Iowa, April 18, '74, sister Elizebeth, consort of brother Paris Teeter, aged 40 years, 2 months. Disease measles.

The subject of this notice was born in Montgomery Co., Ind., and emigrated to the west in early life. She came to the Church 17 years ago, and lived an exemplary member. She leaves a kind husband and seven children, three of them members of the church, and a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. Shortly before she died, she saw in a vision as it were the angels hovering around her bedside, and expressed a desire to depart and be with her Lord and Master. She gave her children and all many good councils which we trust will never be forgotten, but carried into effect during life, so that we can all meet at last in the sweet home of eternal rest. The occasion was well improved by the Brethren from Rev. 14: 13, to a sorrowing and sympathizing concourse of mourners. B. F. Flory.

YOUTHS DEPARTMENT.

ONLY A BOY.

(A pretty little recitation)

Only a boy, with his noise and fun,
The verist mystery under the sun;
As brimful of mischief, and wit and glee,
As ever a human frame can be,
And as hard to manage as—what? ah, me!
'Tis hard to tell,
Yet we loved him well.

Only a boy with his fearful tread,
Who cannot be driven, must be led!
Who troubles the neighbors' dogs and cats,
And tears more clothes, and spoils more hats
Loses more kites, and tops and hats,
Than would stock a store
For a year or more.

Only a boy, with his wild strange ways,
With his idle hours, or his busy days,
With his queer remarks and his odd replies,
Sometimes foolish and sometimes wise,
Often brilliant for one of his size,
As a meteor hurled
From the planet world.

Only a boy who will be a man,
If nature goes on with her first great plan—
If intemperence, or some fatal snare,
Conspire not to rob us of this, our heir,
Our blessing, our trouble, our rest, our care,
Our torment, our joy!
"Only a boy!"

BE BRAVE.

That was the way with a boy whom we will call Lothrop. He was playing in the dining-room one day when his father called out to him:

"Lothrop, have you carried my mucilage bottle into the nursery? Bring it to me." "Yes, papa," said Lothrop, and off he started for the nursery. Just then Mary, the nurse, came into the dining room with the baby, who was to lie down on the floor and take her breakfast out of the bottle.

"Lothrop," said Mary," run and get me the pillow out of the nursery closet—that's a good boy."

"Yes said Lothrop, who had a very obliging disposition, and was always ready to help anybody.

So he went into the nursery, got the mucilage bottle from off his desk in the corner, and then to the closet for the pillow. It was up on a shelf. He seized it and pulled it down, and with it down came a beautiful Japanese box belonging to his mother, full of some of her odds and ends. The box was broken into four parts by the fall, and all its contents were spilled out on the floor. And to make matters worse, Lothrop found that in his efforts to get the pillow down, and in his consternation over the accident that had followed the mucilage bottle in his left hand had got a tip over too, and that a good part of the mucilage had poured forth all over the things on the floor.

What shall I do? he thought to himself. In a moment more he ran into his father, crying, "Papa, papa, I've pulled mama's nice box off the shelf, and its all broken to pieces."

"Have you? said his father quietly. I'm sorry for that, but you are a good boy to come and tell me of it."

And with that he kissed him and went on with his work.

Lothrop was afraid to tell his father about the rest of the accident—the spilling of the mucilage. The right thing to have done would have been to tell the whole story, but that required more courage than he could master.

Lothrop then at his father's suggestion, went up stairs to tell his mother about the box. But not till she came down did she discover the spilling of the mucilage, and by that time the sticky substance had soaked into the carpet, and into the contents of the box which lay scattered about over it, making a great deal of trouble, much of which might have been saved if Lothrop had had courage to tell the whole of the truth at the outset. Moreover, by so doing he would have saved himself not a little of an uncomfortable feeling at the thought that he had done but a part of the duty of confession, while his father had praised him for doing it all.

So you see how necessary it is for a boy or girl who mean to do right to be brave.—Congregationalist.

LIFE IN SYRIA.

In Syria the people never take off their caps or turbans when entering a house or visiting a friend, but they always leave their shoes at the door. The reason is that their floors are covered with clean mats and rugs, and in the Moslem houses the men kneel on the rugs to pray, and press their foreheads to the floor, so that it would not be decent or respectful to walk in with dirty shoes and soil the sijjady on which they kneel to pray. They have no fool-mats or scrapers, and it is much cheaper and simpler to leave the shoes, dirt and all, at the door.

It is very curious to go to the Syrian shool-houses, and see the piles of shoes at the door. There are new bright red shoes, and old tattered shoes, and kob-kobsand black shoes, and sometimes yellow shoes. The kob-kobs are wooden clogs, made to raise the feet out of the mud and water, having a little strap over the toe to keep it on the foot. You will often see little boys and girls running down steps and paved streets on these dangerous kob-kobs. Sometimes they slip, and then down they go on their noses. and the kob kobs fly off and go rattling over the stones, and little Ali or Yusef, or whatever his name is, begins to shout. "Ya Imme! Ya Imme!" "Oh my mother!" and cries just like little children in other countries.

But the funniest part is to see the boys when they come out of school and try to find their shoes. There will be fifty boys and of course a hundred shoes, all mixed together in one pile When school is out the boys make a rush for the door. Then comes the tug of war. A dozen boys are standing and shuffling on the the pile of shoes, looking down, kicking away the other shoes, running their toe into their own, stumbling over the kob-kobs, and then making a dash to get out of the crowd Sometimes shins will be kicked, and hair pulled, and tarbooshes thrown off, and a great screaming follow, which will only cease when the teacher comes with "Asa" or a stick, and quells the riot. The pile of shoes will have to answer for a good many school-boy fights and bruised noses and hard feeling in Syria. You will wonder how they can tell their own shoes. So do we. And the boys often wear off each others' shoes by mistake or on purpose, and then you will see Selim running with one shoe on and one of Ibrahim's in his hand, shouting and cursing Ibrahim's father and grandfather until he gets back his lost property.

Sometimes when men leave their shoes outside of the door of the house where ther are calling, some one will steal them and they are in a sorry plight. Shoes are regarded as very unclean and when you are talking in polite society it will never do to speak of them without asking pardon.

Sometimes we are very much embarrassed in calling upon the Syrians as they look with horror on our muddy feet, and we find it not quite so easy to remove our European shoes. But it must be done, and it is better ta take a little extra trouble, and regard their feelings and customs, than to appear coarse and rude.

ABUSE OF WORDS AND PHRASES.

"Had ought" and "had'nt ought!" These two gramatical weeds always survive our free school cultivation, and sometimes grow thriftily in the best colleges.

In England heus "sit"—always; but throughout the Unitd States, not only the sun and moon, but all the feminine featherhood "set." It would seem as if teachers were very careless, else American children would long since have adopted the correct word.

"To feel like" eating, etc., is assuredly a most extraordinary sensation. A man may feel sick, or like a culprit, but that he should feel like an action, is incomprehensible.

"Was" for "is." He said, for example, that God was (is) love. Half the editors of the United States manifest their contempt for grammar in this way.

"Sold at auction." Auction is not the place or time, but the manner of sale.

"Quite," or very, is wrongly employed both in England and America. As quite means completely, or entirely, it would be interesting to know what is to be understood by the phrase, "quite a number." We might follow out the analogy indefinitely, but these examples will set our boys and gils to thinking.

BAD WAGES.

"I have left my place, mother," said a poor boy one day when he returned from his work.

"Why have you left?" said the mother, "was your master unkind to you?"

"No, mother, he was kind enough," said the boy.

"Didn't you like the work?" asked the mother.

"It was the wages I did'nt like," said the boy solemnly. "My master wanted me to sin, and the wages of sin is death."

His master had expected him to lie about the goods, and deceive and cheat the customers; but the boy said—

"No, sir, I can't do such things; I will leave your service first." And he did leave it; and he was right about it too. Such boys will make mothers' hearts glad, and will find that the Lord takes care of those who trust in him and will not work for Satan, nor earn the wages of sin.

Such trials do the faithful good. It may seem hard to suffer because we will not sin; but the rough sea makes the sailor, the hot furnance makes the pure gold, the strongest faith comes from the hardest trials. and they who suffer for Christ's and conscience' sake shall be blessed here and crowned with joy hereafter.—Little Christian.

THE SAW OF CONTENTION.

"Oh, Frank, come and see how hot my saw gets when I rub it, When I draw it through a board awhile, it's most hot enough to set fire to it."

"That's the friction," said Frank, with all superior wisdom of two years more than Eddie boasted.

"Yes," said sister Mary who was passing; "it's the friction; but do you know what it makes me think of?"

"No, what?" asked both the boys at once.

"Of two little boys who were quarreling over a trifle this morning, and the more they talked the hotter their tempers grew, until there was no knowing what might have happened, if mother had not thrown cold water on the fire by sending them into separate rooms."

The boys hung their heads, and Mary went on:—

"There is an old proverb which says, 'The longer the saw of contention is drawn, the hotter it grows.'"

"I tell you what, Frank," said Eddie, "when we find ourselves getting angry, let's run out and use the saw Kriss Kingle brought me, and then we wont find time for the saw of contention."—Young Reaper.

LITTLE WILLIE

The Summer that little Willie was five, he went with his father and mother to spend the day with his aunt, who live about six miles away.

His mother, being sick, was unable to return home that day: so Willie was urged to stay, too, but no! he must go with his father. I think quite likely that he had bright visions of driving the horse, as his father sometimes let him hold the reins when they were riding; and he could have two more rides than if he staid at his aunt's.

So he went home, and the next day he went again with his father to carry his mother home; upon arriving at his aunts' his father helped him to alight from the carriage, and he ran into the house. He was both surprised and disappointed to find that his mother was not in the sitting-room and he rushed through the dining room toward the cook-room, exclaiming' "Where is anybody?" His aunt was not out hearing, though out of sight, and thought this was very cunning. So do I; and that is why I have told the little ones about it.

LITTLE THINGS.

I love pictures! Some one has so beautifully expressed the idea that I cannot refrain from borrowing it—"pictures are loopholes for the soul to look through." They lift us from barren dreariness of Winter to the beauty of Mid Summer, carrying the mind weary of narrow limits, the dust and noise of city streets, to the exquisite freshness and quiet of a country landscape

I love music!—bird songs, quieting the restless impatience that becomes a part of some lives. Sometimes the sweet words sung by the dear young singer of the household, sometimes the music drawn the piano by the singer's light finger.

Kind words, a gentle deference, a yielding of self—little things! but they make up the web of life Why not weave in as many bright, harmonious colors as the influence about us will permit?—have beautiful things about us, suggesting beautiful thoughts, originating pure, true ideas of "life's better part." Seek the pleasant little things of life, and their uniting will form the glorious whole of happiness that we call a "beautiful life." mistakes of life, so called, are the slighting of little things—little opportunities of doing good We forget that even a cup of water given in His name is precious in His sight. He has made little things the most precious, little flowers, little drops of water—a little world of life in itself, little pearls, little children—God's best gift.

"The world is wide, these things are small;
They may be little, but they're all!"
—Young Folks Rural.

Purity of Character.

Over the beauty of the plum and apricot there grows a bloom and beauty more exquisitive than the fruit itself—a soft, delicate flush overspread its blushing cheek. Now, if you strike your hand over that, and it is once gone, it is gone forever; for it never grows but once. The flower that hang in the morning, impearled with dew, arrayed with jewels—once shake it so that the beads fall off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dew fell lightly upon it from heaven! On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass covered with land-capes, mountains, lakes, and trees, blended with a beautiful, fantastic picture. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the scratch of your finger, or by the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated. So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character, which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored—a fringe more delicate than frost-work, and which, when torn and broken, will never be re-embroidered. When a young man leaves his father's house, with the blessings of his mother's tears still wet upon his forehead if he once loses the early purity of character it is a loss that he can never make whole again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effect can not be eradicated; it can only be forgiven.

BETTER THAN GOLD.—We often hear little boys telling of the wonders they will do when they grow to be men. They are looking and longing for the time when they shall be large enough to carry a cane and wear a tall hat; and not one of them will say that he expects to be a poor man, but they every one intend to be rich. Now, money is very good in its place; but let me tell you, little boys, what is a great deal better than money, and what you may be earning all the time you are waiting to grow large enough to earn a fortune. The Bible tells us that 'a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." A good name does not mean a name for being the richest man in town, or for owning the largest house. A good name is a name for doing good deeds; a name for wearing a pleasant face and carrying a cheerful heart; for always doing right no matter what the consequence may be.

NO USE FOR IT.—At school little boys and girls learn how many inches make a foot; how many ounces make a pound and how many farthings make a penny. One day when the lesson was the table called ale and beer measure, "a little boy who always used to know his lessons well, could not answer.

"How is this, John?" said his teacher

"I thought it was of no use, said John

No use said the teacher"

'No, sir; it's ale and beer measure," said John" and father and I both think it is of no use to learn about ale and beer as we mean never to buy, sell or drink it."—Morning Light

MOST Christians keep their religion in a lump, laid by for great extremities. Spread it! My brethren, spread it! Take care of the small occasions, and the greater ones will take care of themselves.

LITERATURE.

As "a man is known by the company he keeps," so is his character moulded by the books he reads. All who desire to lead virtuous lives should shun evil companions, and avoid vicious books. While these things are important for adults it is much more important, that those who have charge of children and youths should practice a strict scrutiny of all the books read by them, while they are not competant judges of their own course. The first books placed in the hands of children are their school books, and it is exceedingly important that the most careful and mature judgment be exercised in their selection. Men of mind and ability have been, and are still employed in preparing school books and bringing them up to a high moral standard, and placing them in competition with the works of other authors, and publishers. We say unhesitatingly that this competition has done more to improve and advance our text books than all other causes combined, and we cannot too severely condemn the effort now being made in the Legislature of Pennsylvania to adopt a uniform series of school or text books for the whole State, as such a measure would effectually destroy such competition, and while the want and need would be progressing the books would be at a stand-still being tied up in an enormous job which would doubtless be given out on the one hand to the publishing house bidding the largest amount for the job, and on the other agreeing to furnish the books at the least amount. If this measure is to be carried we may expect inferior books gotten up in an inferior manner, which will be adopted without the consent of the Directors, Teachers, Parents, or Pupils—the parties most interested—and without any reference to their particular wants. We would rather see this matter of text books thrown open to the widest range of competition, both as to authors and publishers, then we might expect a meritorious book, of improved workmanship in printing, illustrating, binding, and at a reasonable price. LITERARY EDITOR.

THE N. U. VOLCANIC MOVEMENT.

The Raleigh News has an account of an interview with Professor Dupre, of Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C., who, it says, is regarded as one of the most accomplished geologists in the South. At the first report of the Bald Mountain disturbances he set out with the senior class of Wofford College to explore and analyze the wonder.

He stated that from his limited observations, and the short space of time he had been on the mountain, he was unprepared to express his views fully. He said: Volcanoes heretofore have always bordered the sea, and have only occurred near deep waters. None has ever occurred farther than fifty miles from deep waters on the sea coast, and there is no theory that would indicate volcanic action in the Appalachian chain, the nearest point of which to the sea is 250 miles, and at that point the water is shallow. Moreover, there has never been even any reported eruption east of the Rocky Mountains, and none of the Atlantic coast. These facts have established the main foundation of geological theory, and if these disturbances are volcanic (which I firmly believe) it creates a new speech in geological science that will doubtless attract the attention of scientists of the civilized world. I have taken observations and thoroughly explored both Stone and Bald mountains; have felt and experienced the shocks, and heard the rumbling noises on both. I have conversed with reliable and intelligent citizens living on, near, and adjacent to, both; and I am satisfied in my mind that the trembling of the earth, extending a distance of 20 miles, from Broad river to the Catawba river—and the noise is heard at still a greater distance—that it is attributable alone to volcanic action, though I prefer posting myself further before expressing a professional opinion.

Rumbling noises are common as premonitory symptoms of both earthquakes and volcanoes, but the explosive sounds that I have heard to-day and yesterday are common only to and characteristics of volcanoes.

Professor Dupre also said that the noise made in the mountain is of the exact description of the sounds that proceeded from Mt. Ætna previous to an eruption. He adopts Professor Agassiz's theory, that the centre of the earth is a molten mass; that tidal waves of fire constantly roll through it like waves of the ocean, that the crust of the earth at its thinnest point is only twelve miles thick; that these waves of fire and heat melt off portions of this crust at its thinnest point until finally the crust is broken through and the fire from below pours out.

The shocks and tremblings are becoming less frequent and severe, though the inhabitants were still uneasy and undecided what to do, whether to remain or stay in the vicinity

the scourge of the human family, may in its early stages be promptly arrested and permanently cured

RAVENSWOOD, W. Va., Oct. 28th, 1872.
Dr. R. V. PIERCE:

Sir—For the last year I have been using your Golden Medical Discovery. I owe my life to it, having been afflicted for years. Did not use it but a short time before I was benefited; at that time I was very bad, not able to sit up much, was suffering greatly with my throat, was getting blind, had a dry cough, and much pain in my lungs. I have used twelve bottles of the Discovery and am almost well.

KATE T. WARDNER.

A son of Mr. J. H. DESECK, of Chatham Four Corners, N. Y., has been cured of Consumption by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery,—so says Mr. C. B. Caulfield, editor of the Chatham Courier.

S. R EGLAN, druggist, of West Union, O., writes to state that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has effected a wonderful cure of Consumption in his neighborhood.

Trine Immersion.

A discussion on Trine Immersion, by letter between Elder B. F. Moomaw and Dr. J. J. Jackson, to which is annexed a Treatise on the Lord's Supper, and on the necessity, character and evidences of the new birth, also a dialogue on the doctrine of non-resistance, by Elder B. F Moomaw. Single copy 50 cents.

TRACTS.

COUNTERFEIT DETECTER

or

BAPTISM—MUCH IN LITTLE.

This work is now ready for distribution, and the importance of the subject will speak for it a large demand. It is a short treatise on baptism in tract form intended for general distribution, and is set forth in such a plain and logical manner that a wayfaring man though a fool, cannot err therein. Either of the above tracts sent postpaid on the following terms: Two copies, 10 cts, 10 copies 40 cents, 25 copies 70 cents, 50 copies $1.00, 100 copies $1.50.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of the lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.50. Four copies, $1.50. Sent post-paid. Address

THE CROSS.

BY WESLEY.

On Calvary's holy summit
My raptured view descries,
The emblem of redemption,
High towering toward the skies.

About its form is twining,
In beauty passing fair,
The lovely rose of Sharon,
Whose breath perfumes the air.

Its crest, immersed in glory,
To eager ears can tell
The sweet and plaintive story,
That Christians love so well.

Adown its side is streaming
The wondrous speaking blood,
Which drowns the fires of hades,
And buys our souls for God.

Oh! weep my soul, let anguish
Pour out the bitter flood,
For, on this cross extended,
Once wept, THE SON OF GOD.

Yea! weep o'er man's transgression,
Which pierced his bleeding side;
Rejoice, that through God's mercy;
Sprang forth the living tide.

And when the shadows thicken,
'Twill purge from every dross,
To sit, and gaze in wonder,
On Calvary's crimson Cross.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

BE DELIVERED FROM STRANGE CHILDREN.

Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood."—Ps. 144: 11.

The strange children the Psalmist here prays to be rid and delivered from, evidently are the associations of the wicked who have no fear of God before their eyes, but who walk in the way of their own heart, and in the sight of their own eyes in all vanity, pride, and ungodliness; corrupting not only the morals of Christian children, but of the youths of the country generally. To be ridded and delivered from such evil associations, is, and always has been the prayer of the God-fearing. The Apostle says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners;" which is synonymous with evil associations, demoralize good character, or habit, and hence all good men and women desire that they with all the youths in the land might be delivered from all such.

Their mouth speaketh vanity. Tho' they speak ever so plausibly, they speak only to deceive. When they urge the young man to strong drink, and to treat all the party, saying it is manly for him to do so, they speak words of vanity; and when they invite him to go to the theatre, and into the dark lanes and alleys, saying it is manly to do so, and that it is innocent amusement &c., and should his moral conscience revolt at the idea, they will say there can be no possible harm to do so only this one time; their mouth speaks words of vanity. And when they offer to go with him and see that no harm befall him, their hand is only a right hand of falsehood, deception and fraud. And while they thus lead the unsuspecting into the meshes of debauchery and ruin, they do it so adroitly that their vanity and falsehood is not detected until escape is next to impossible. And when ruin and degredation is complete, the mouth of vanity and the right hand of falsehood, are the first to forsake the ruined character in the misery into which by their vanity and falsehood, they brought him. Here is a case to the point. I quote from the local columns of the Baltimore Daily American of January 5th 1874.

ANOTHER MELANCHOLY DEATH.—A WARNING VOICE TO FAST YOUNG MEN.—In the American of yesterday it was stated that a man named I. L. Dickinson, aged about 55 years, died on Saturday evening in the Washington University Hospital, of delirium tremens. Sad as this case, in all its surroundings, was, we have now to chronicle one even still sadder and more melancholy in its details. On the morning of December 12th last there was admitted into the Maryland Inebriate Asylum, on Gilmore street, a man named——aged about 32 or 35 years. At the time of his admission he was in a state of extreme physical prostration, and as to his mind, he was totally oblivious to all things present, unconscious of his whereabouts, condition and sufferings—laboring only under phantasms, hallucinations or delusions, keeping up at times a seemingly connected train of thought with persons whom he fancied were in his room conversing with him, old boon companions, etc. The great and leading idea however, which seemed to beset his disordered mind was that he had a very important business to attend to in the city, and he was almost constantly endeavoring to rise from his bed to put on his clothes and come to town. At other times he was as violent and intractable as a permanently insane person. In fact, so threatening was his condition that he had to be guarded and nursed unceasingly, day and night, by the nurses alternately detailed for that purpose. The physicians left nothing undone that the best medical treatment and careful nursing could do for his restoration, but death had set his mark upon the unfortunate man. About a week ago inflamation of the glands about the neck supervened followed by suppuration. This caused a hectic or wasting fever, under which the patient commenced to sink gradually, and breathed his last at 6 o'clock a. m. on Monday, remaining unconscious to the last. The physicians regarded the case as one of chronic alcoholism, being somewhat ingular and anomalous in character The deceased was well know in Baltimore, and was at one time an active, earnest politician. He had been liberal and generous in his nature, and for many years led an irregular life, but it was noticed that of that large circle of friends who used to know him in his better and most prosperous days, not one of them came forward to tender their services to assist in nursing him, or help him to a little cold water to cool his parching tongue. To the credit of his wife and one or two near relatives, however, it should be stated that they did their duty in the needed hour."

Here dear reader, you have a victim of these strange children in a tangible form before you, look at him; forsaken by his employers, and left to die in his delirium without so much as helping him to a cup of cold water to cool his parched tongue. How false is their right hand! If you be led by it you will fare no better. Will you then unite with us in prayer to be ridded and delivered from them? If so you must shun their society as you would shun the most venomous reptile. When they invite you with them to strong drink, to their games, their balls, their haunts of vice of whatsoever name, flee from them and come to the society of the holy, and cast in your lot with the people of God and go along with them and they will do you good, and not evil. Then will you, our sons, be as plants grown up in their youth, and our daughters be as corner stones polished after the similitude of a palace.

Be as plants, implies good and useful; and this our sons will be when ridded and delivered from all influences thrown around them by strange children; brought up under the nurture and admonition of the Lord, they will be useful in society, and ornaments and pillars in the Church of our God.

Be as corner stones, implies the best material in the building, and this our daughters will be if ridded and delivered from the vanities and sins of the strange children. In our edifices the best material is always put in the corners, where they are plumb and strong, the brick layer or stone mason will spring his line from corner to corner, and the wall will be kept straight and plumb by the corners. Even so the moulding and forming society is with the female sex. The moulding of society is in their hands, as the clay is in the hands of the potter; men will follow the lead of women to heaven or to hell. Oh God grant then that we be ridded and delivered from the hand of strange children; that our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace. Then "Happy is that people, that is in such a case, yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Truly happy are such people who are in such a case. Happy in their own salvation, and happy in the thought that their sons and their daughters too will be saved. Good Lord rid us and deliver us from the evil influences of all strange children.

THE PLACE OF BAPTISM.

(We take the following from an article by "A Baptist Pastor," in a late number of the Christian Unity, published Cincinnati.

Need any be told that, in stating the conditions of salvation, the apostles and evangelists invariably include baptism? or that those who believed the preaching availed themselves of the first opportunity to be baptized? Can any read Acts ii., verses 38, 42; Acts viii, 12, 36, 38; Acts ix. 18; Acts x. 47, 48; Acts xvi. 14, 15, 30, 31, 32, 33, without the conviction that in presenting the conditions of salvation the apostles always associated faith, repentance and baptism, and that the converts in every case, straightway and gladly availed themselves of baptism? In the case of the eunuch, Philip is simply represented as preaching unto him Jesus, yet it is evident he mentioned baptism, else why did the eunuch ask, "Here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Just so in the case of the Philippian jailer, Paul is simply recorded as saying, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house," yet the sequel shows that he preached baptism, for the jailer was baptized, "he and all his straightway."

Now, would it not seem to follow, from all this, that primitively, when we found a disciple we found a person who had been baptized? and that where justification or salvation was promised to faith, the understanding was, on all hands, that it was a faith which led to obedience—a faith made perfect by works?

The importance of baptism may be further inferred from the ends said to be accomplished by it. In his sermon on the day of Pentecost, Peter said is was for the remission of sins. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." (Acts ii 38) And again the same apostle, 1. Peter iii. 21: "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

To the same purport, Ananias to Saul, Acts xxii. 16: "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." Now, if the believer's sins have been already remitted, then baptism is God's authorized certificate of remission, and none can feel happy without it; if it is His means of remitting sins, then no baptism, no remission.

If it be God's means of securing us a good conscience toward Himself, how can we say we have a good conscience toward Him, or that Christ has received us to the glory of God if we have not been baptized?

VALEDICTORY.

To the brethren of Aughwick Church greeting: I grew up as tall as I am in your midst. My heart is filled with grief mingled with pleasure. With grief because of the opportunities and precious seasons of grace which I have lost and seen lost by others. With pleasure because of the almost miraculous escapes which I have made, and which I know others have made from eternal destruction.

For a number of long, tedious years I have travelled with the brethren, and partially by their directions, up and down through the valleys, over the hills and mountains, with which the district abounds, from place to place, through almost all kinds of weather, from the oppressive heat of midsummer to the chilliest storms of winter. This was only the husk or outside of my labor and experience. In the spiritual kingdom of Christ there are many variations of weather while it remains on the earth. They extend from the first bitter storms of persecutions and tribulations that are experienced on down through the perils and fiery trials of which Paul, and the other apostles write, and on down through the deep valley and shadow of death. Of course I have not experienced all of these and the other variations which intervene, but I have gone as far as the "perils among false brethren."

But while I have in the physical or natural kingdom enjoyed the unutterable pleasures of the ever welcome spring-time, when all nature seemed to dance with the wildest ecstacies of joy; as I have in the natural kingdom experienced dark, gloomy seasons, when the wind roared like terrible monsters of destruction, when dark, heavy clouds were lowering toward me, when the sudden flashy-forked lightning shot out in every direction followed by peals of deafening thunder, causing all nature to bow down and hide with fear, and afterwards a great calm, so I have in like manner in the spiritual kingdom of Christ had refreshing seasons from the presence of the Lord, "tasted of the goodness of God," rejoiced with joy unspeakable."

The happiest moments of my past life were spent beneath the droppings of the sanctuary of the Lord. My sweetest labors were those of which I could say in my heart "I have pleased God and men." My only boasting before men is in that wherein I have in God's judgment found my way underneath the souls of men, lifting them up from darkness unto light—only where the condition of men has been made better by my associations with them when I knew that the more abundantly I loved them the less they would love me, do I claim praise for doing "that which is good." I do not refer merely to preaching sermons, or to attending special religious meetings. A man's special religious exercises may be the spinal cord of the life of a true Christian, but it must not necessarily be so. "Actions speak louder than words." Therefore the labors of a minister of the Gospel do not all, always centralize in pulpit preaching, and therefore if those who judge me among men do not find a sufficiency of merit or demerit in my preaching to recommend or condemn me, I would advise them to search the ground that lies between the point, where I attempted to deliver sermons. In my judgment there is nothing that I have done that is worthy of notice before God, taking into consideration the sense that Christ loved me when I was a benighted sinner; that He loves me now though I am a sinner.

I am aware of many kindnesses manifested toward me, and of much forbearance exercised concerning me by the brethren of Aughwick, for which I will ever try, by the help of God, to remember them with grateful feelings, making mention of them in my prayers. My most ardent wish toward them is that they may ever be conscious of a living Savior.

Some might think there are too many I's and my's in this epistle but I would refer them to Paul's epistles. You might take scores of these apparently egotistical little words out of some of them and they would hardly be missed, though you would be very sorry to erase a single one of them.

FAITH—WHAT IS IT?

In investigating this subject we will try and throw all the light upon it that we are able to command; hence we will have to look upon it in its relative positions, and its different bearings upon the mind of man, and in so doing we will accept of Webster's first definition of the term:

"Belief; the answer of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another. 2. The assent of the mind to the truth of a proposition advanced, by another belief on probable evidence or any kind." For instance, you see a book and you begin to read it; in that book you are informed by the author that there was a man by the name of Napoleon Bonaparte, who undertook to overthrow the powers of Europe. The author informs us that he was at first successful in coercing several nations, but finally was repulsed by the allied powers under the immediate command of the Duke of Wellington. If your mind assents to this as being truth, your belief in it as a thing that did actually exist is your faith. If you do not believe it, faith with you is void. Therefore it is your assent to the narrative which constitutes faith."

The second definition is different from the first. For instance I tell you that I have been informed that there is a beautiful country lying west of us—I myself have not seen the country, but I have heard of it. You have never heard of it. I further was informed that this country was uninhabited, and now all we have to do is to go there and take possession, and the land will be ours. This is what might be called probable evidence. It might be so and it might not be so, but you accept it as being so; your mind gives assent to this probable evidence. This is faith and this faith may be strong and it may be weak. If your faith is strong it will act as a rope that will lead you to take possession of the land. If your faith is weak, you still believe that there is such a land, but you have no desire to obtain it. The two kinds of faith may be distinguished by the epithets, drawing faith and assenting faith. Drawing faith will secure for us a reward, while assenting faith will not secure us anything. This faith is applied to worldly things.

We will next notice faith as exhibited in theology. Faith in theology is the assent of the mind to the existence of God, and the truths of the book called the Bible. We believe this from the fact that we have been taught it. Our minds give assent to this, and at the same time we have not been brought under the proper power of God's word—still in our carnal state. This is called historical or speculative faith, a faith little distinguished from our faith in the existence of Napoleon Bonaparte, or of George Washington. We believe that there were such men from the fact alone that we have been taught it, and our assent to the thing taught is our belief. This is faith. We believe in the existence of God and that the Bible is His word, from the fact that we have been taught it. Our assent to the thing taught is faith. This faith is very common wherever Christianity has spread her balmy wings, but is not calculated to benefit us any in the world to come. The next degree of faith under our notice is,

TECHNICAL FAITH.

This faith is hard to understand, not being understood even by those who preach it. It is also exhibited in theology. It is the assent of the mind to the to the existence of God, also of the Bible as being the word of God, and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that he was the Shiloh that was to come. It is a faith that has a form of godliness, but denies the power; in short, it is that popular faith that is prevalent among Christian professors in this day and age of the world. It is a faith that leads men to believe that they are Christ-like when they refuse to walk in the examples of Christ. It is a faith that causes us to believe that we must obey Christ and yet our simple belief of this is enough without obeying. It is a faith exhibited without works, which devils have and tremble. James 2: 19. Men that have this faith, when the commands of God are preached to them they get mad and say, "Oh, you think there is no body right but you," and yet they will brand Romans with being heretics, and if a Roman, they brand a Protestant with the same epithet, though one faith is just as strong as the other. This technical faith makes the children of men believe that they are regenerated and born again, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, when they have not been born of water, which is contrary to the language of the Savior when he says, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. It is a faith that is hard to distinguish from a historical faith; it being only a speculative or an assenting faith, hence not a saving faith. Reader if you have such a faith, let me exhort you as one that loves your soul to no longer "nurse your darling pet," for it is as the poison of an adder. It is a faith no better than that imbibed by the followers of Mahomet or Joe. Smith. It is a faith exhibited without works, consequently a dead faith. Jas. 2: 20. And according to the Bible, which you assent to, your faith is a dead faith. God indeed would have you dead, but to the rudiments of the world, and alive unto Himself, and it is impossible for you to be alive unto God unless you have a lively faith, for faith without works is dead. We will now notice

EVANGELICAL OR SAVING FAITH.

"Faith," says Paul, "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" hence we see that assenting faith is prerequisite to saving faith. Assenting faith preceedes repentance while saving faith follows after. Assenting faith is just as essential to repentance as repentance is to saving faith, for he that cometh to God must believe that God is. This represents the sinner coming to God and is now ready to lay hold of that faith as defined in the Greek Lexicon of Hedric. He assents to the truth that God does exist; his faith now leads him to believe that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. He now lays hold of the rope that draws him to saving faith, which rope may represent repentance, and without which he can never be drawn to saving faith. Saving faith, then, is the perfection of assenting faith, interwoven with the good works that God ordained that we should walk in. Therefore by works is faith made perfect. James 2: 22. This is sufficient we think to prove that an assent to the existence of God and the truth of the Bible are not sufficient to secure us an inheritance, but only through obedience can we be justified.

May the good Lord help you to so frame your minds that they will lay hold of the truths that we shall present in these essays from time to time. We will next notice Repentance and in connection with it we will say something more in regard to saving faith, to which department it more properly belongs.

Yours in love,

JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

DO WE NE NEED A SCHOOL?

Dear brethren of the Pilgrim:

With great anxiety for the welfare of our Brotherhood, which I believe to be the Church of the living God, purchased by the blood of his dear Son, I feel constrained to write a little in defence of the principles of that Church, as accepted and practiced by the true followers of our blessed Lord in all ages.

"Remove not the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set," is the motto of the PILGRIM, and it is a very appropriate one. But it may be possible for us to remove these landmarks ourselves without being aware of it, or at least without acknowledging it. Some of the true landmarks as set by high authority, intended especially for the Church of Christ and which we can not gainsay, but are as children of God bound to accept, are these: "At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." Matt. 11: 55. "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." &c. "And he said unto them, ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts, for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." Luke 16: 15. "Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate."—Rom. 12: 16. See 1 Cor. 1: 19-31, also 2: 1-8.

As there is a movement made by some brethren to establish a high school as a "Brethren's School," I would humbly ask, can we not learn of Christ without the aid of high schools now as well as others could before us? And are not high schools highly esteemed among men? Yes, they surely are, and they were always considered so by the Brethren, from the days of Christ and the apostles until this time of apostasy, and they were always opposed at our Annual Meetings. [See Encyclopedia page 178, A. M. 1852, Art. 12, and 1857 Art. 19. See also Minutes of 1853, Art. 28, where it was decided "That we consider colleges as a very unsafe place for a simple follower of Christ, inasmuch as it is calculated to lead us away from the faith and obedience of the Gospel."] [From the German.] If a college was an unsafe place 21 years ago for a simple follower of Christ, it is unsafe now, all the construction that may be put upon them to the contrary notwithstanding. We do not need the high institutions of men to obtain that wisdom that is from above, or to learn meekness and lowliness. I have some knowledge of the order of the Church at least fifty years back, and I am confident that if any brother or brethren, would have been presumptous enough to urge the necessity of a high school in the Church, they would have been duly admonished, and if they would have persisted in their course they would have been promptly dealt with according to Matt. 18. "If he neglect to hear the Church," &c. The people of God are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people. 1 Peter, 2: 9. And I would ask, wherein does our peculiarity consist if we yoke ourselves together with unbelievers by following them in their customs? For "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."—James, 4: 4.

The opinion that high schools are necessary for the prosperity of the Church of Christ, I believe to be a delusion of the enemy, [see 2 Cor. 11 3,] being in direct opposition to the whole tenor of the Gospel, as we do not find one single sentence in the teachings of Christ and his apostles to justify the same, but the seal of its condemnation is stamped on almost every page. "Thy wisdom and thy knowledge it hath perverted thee."—Isaiah 44: 10. And while the Brethren have always protested against high schools, and against high things in general, the Church has prospered under her Great Head, and under the supervision of elders and teachers, who received their education in the school of Christ, until she now extends from one ocean to another, and the gates of hell have not been able to prevail, although they are now pressing hard against her.

With due respect and love to our brethren who, from year to year compose the Standing Committee at our Annual Meeting, I feel to say, dear brethren remember your responsibility. I am glad to know that many of you are still opposed to those innovations which we cannot consider otherwise than injurious to the cause of our holy religion. Is it not your duty, then to exert your influence against every high thing, and with the cooperation of the Church at large, to strive to arrest and suppress everything that would intrude itself into the Church, and that is in direct opposition to the order of our ancient Brotherhood, and to the whole tenor of the Gospel? Yes, to you the Church has a right to look up for good counsel, and also a right to demand of you a faithful discharge of the duties devolving upon you as guardians or stewards over the household of faith. To you is committed the important trust of guarding the ancient "landmarks" that they be not removed. I am sorry to see that a few hasty brethren are permitted to disregard the sacred principles and rules of our ancient and beloved Brotherhood, and that our old leaders in the Church do not keep strict rule over them according to their right and duty. Dear brethren, let us not suffer ourselves to be carried away by this "wind of doctrine" which we now hear, viz. that the wants of the Church demand the establishment of a high school. The desire for natural wisdom originated with Eve in the garden of Eden thro' the instigation of that "old serpent," and the consequences was the fall of man. This should be a sufficient warning for all. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." The same adversary is still in existence, disseminating the same baneful doctrine he did in the beginning. Take heed that ye be not deceived.

REFORM.

Great efforts are now making to spread the Gospel among the heathen, and many are engaged in the work. This would be a pleasing circumstance and praise-worthy employment if those who send and those who are sent to diffuse the knowledge of this Gospel, were acquainted with it themselves, and acted upon truly Christian principles, principles that breathe peace on earth and good will to men. One object of foreign missions among the heathens is to abolish the custom of sacrifices: but let us pause and consider whether there is among the Pagans, a custom more repugnant to the spirit of the Christian religion, than war. If then this work of reforming should be attempted by a compassionate missionary, who, though he pities these mistaken people, yet if he can on any consideration justify Chirstians in making human sacrifices in war, how natural it would be for a well informed Hindoo to say, "can that religion be less reconcilable to reason and humanity which barely permits devotees to offer their own lives, than that which allows them by every means which the most artful ingenuity can devise, or the most unfeeling cruelty can execute to destroy millions, and yet it is for such a religion as this that you would persuade the worshippers of Juggernaut to forsake theirs?" It is not from a spirit of war or revenge that the parent in India casts his living child into Ganges, or that the widow burns on the funeral pile of her deceased husband, or that others prostrate themselves to be crushed to death by the Idol's car. We may indeed justly deplore these delusions and attempt their abolition. But as these sacrifices are not made from ill will towards fellow beings, but merely from mistakeo religious opinion, must they not be far less offensive in the Divine sight than the war sacrifice of Chistians which are made in the desolating spirit of revenge? These remarks are far from being made in a spirit of hostility to foreign missions when those who perform them are rightly commissioned and are governed by the spirit of him who sent his apostles to preach to the heathen, neither are they made from a supposition that these in favor are more advocates of war than other people, but it is to be wished that missionaries will go among the heathens having their minds deeply imbued with the principles and spirit of peace. These accompanied with meekness, humility and love, are the very essence of the Gospel which they should preach, and on no other subject should they be more carefully examined, for whatever other qualification they may possess, without these they will never preach the Gospel, but will be constantly exposed to self-contradiction. On these principles greater access might have been had to the mind's of the Indians of this land and much more in converting them to Christianity.

A PILGRIM.

[For the PILGRIM.]

LEARN FROM THE PAST, AND TRUST NOT IN MERCY.

This is a distinguished source, and fountain of knowledge. "Judge the past by the future." And it need not be confined only to that part of one's life that has expired, from which we may learn by self-experience, but we can gather the "wisdom of ages," simply by observing the successful, and unsuccessful adventures of those who have gone before. The greatest difference between the wise and the unwise is, the wise man never undertakes what others have failed in, and is never caught in a new trap more than once. While the ignorant man will go just where thousands have failed, and then perhaps is not satisfied, until he has tried them over a few times.

How often do we hear of men losing money by playing cards on the cars. So often that one would think there could not be a rational minded man found in the Union, that would be caught in the same trap. But still there are many that are not satisfied until they have lost a few hundred dollars, and then begin to get their eyes open, after it is "too late." But while we are astonished at such things, we see many other things that are just as astonishing. If we were to look back over the sojourn of the children of Israel, through the wilderness, even after they had taken possession of their land, and observe their obedience, and disobedience, and the approval, and disapproval of Jehovah, and what curses were pronounced against them on conditions of disobedience—and how sure the wicked went not unpunished, and how sure obedience was crowned with success in every instance, the first thought that would present itself to us would be, that the children of Israel must have been very ignorant, to not have obeyed at once, every command of the Lord. But how much more ignorant were they, than the people of our day? Have we not as glorious a privilege, with as great a reward promised, and greater than they? We undoubtedly have. But is it an astonishing fact, with all this fore-taste and fore knowledge, with all this in the past by which to judge the future, we are compelled to acknowledge the painful truth, that the world at present is as far, or farther from obedience, than they were. And in considering this, can there not be another important lesson learned? Seeing how the wrath of the Lord was not staid, in case of disobedience, even toward those with whom he was the most intimate. Even Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land, on account of disobedience. David received his due punishment for his sins.

There is surely an important lesson to be learned, which is involved in these words "Trust not in mercy." It is one of Satan's strongest weapons. Think not that because it is me, that he will have mercy on poor me; for God is undaunted, and unmovable; he is no respecter of persons. Learn from the cunning fox, which is far from being snared, where his brother was caught. What! shall we direct vain humanity to the wild inhabitants of the forests to ask knowledge of them whether they should follow others into the whirlpool of death? or shall we have them take wisdom, and travel the road that leads to life everlasting?

Dear reader, choose the light, and not darkness, for God is God, and his law is law.

STAND UP.

Some time ago we read an account of an occurrence on the Mississippi River, which suggests an important thought. As a steamboat was passing along, the pilot noticed a man floundering in the water and crying lustily for help. The pilot at once shouted, "Stand up! The water where you are is not more than three or four feet deep!" The man obeyed, and to his own surprise and the merriment of the passengers, discovered the unmanly part he had been acting.

Thus it often is in life. People suppose themselves in great difficulties; their courage fails; their manhood forsakes them; they make everything a burden. They pour their lamentations into every ear they can reach; despair seems ready to come upon them. But if they would only open their eyes, plant their feet firmly on the ground, stand straight up, and take a deliberate view of their situation, they would discover how imaginary were their fears, and how ridiculous they were making themselves in the sight of their beholders. To whine and complain, and to fail to make use of the powers given us, and of the opportunities presented, is injurious to both soul and body. The cheerful heart, the firm resolve, the willing hand, and the calm trust in Christ, brighten the path of life, overcome its difficulties, and at length secure the great victory.—Presbyterian Banner.

WORK.

The man who has nothing to do is the most miserable of beings. No matter how much wealth a man possesses he can neither be contented nor happy without occupation. We were born to labor and the world is our vineyard; we can find a field for our usefulness almost anywhere. In occupation we forgot our cares, our worldly trials, and our sorrows. It keeps us from constantly worrying and brooding over what is inevitable. If we have enough for ourselves we can labor for the good of others, and such a task is one of the most delightful duties a worthy and good man can engage in.

The fear of God begins with the heart, and purifies and rectifies it, and from the heart, thus rectified, grows a conformity in the life, the words, and the actions.—Sir Mathew Hale.

An elevated purpose is a good and ennobling thing, but we cannot begin at the top of it We must work up to it by the often difficult path of daily duty—of daily duty always carefully performed.

The very essence of truth is plainness and brightness; the dark and crookedness is our own.

EDUCATIONAL.

Since the School Meeting, there are a few of our readers fearful that our connection with the School, as they seem to think, may result unfavorably to our work. We beg leave to state that we are unconditionally in favor of at least, a thorough english education, but have no personal interest in connection with the proposed School more than our common cause demands, and the duty of our position seems to call for. That our brotherhood is favorable to a good education is plainly evident, if not by oral affirmation, by practical illustration. The facts upon which we base this assertion are so general that it is a wonder to us that all cannot see it, and what makes it more strange, the objections are waged against that use of it, for which, by practice, they are arguing in favor of, and even such as have the advantage of a quite liberal education, and would give $1000 to-day if they had a great deal more.

Is it not an undenyable fact that when a brother is to be called to the ministry, other things being equal, the one having a good education is always chosen? Is this not done upon purely democratic principles by the vote or voice of each individual member? If this is so, which is admitted, what must be our conclusions? Nothing more nor less than that the Church is favorable to education, and that this demand is calling for more ample or proper facilities by which it can be obtained. For us to admit that education is good and useful and then show no preference in where or how it is obtained, certainly shows a great lack of wisdom in us as a Church. Money is admitted by all to be good if properly used, but where is the Christian parent who does not have a very great preference in how and where his children may obtain it? The fact is, the great evil is not in the money, but in the manner of using it. It is important that this should be learned before obtaining it. If it is earned or gained at the gambling table, the chances are that it will be spent there. If by fraud or deception, the probability is that fraud and deception will accompany its use, but if honestly and fairly obtained, the same characteristics will follow all its uses. Precisely so it is with education. The thing itself, like money, only becomes a power for good or evil when used, and if the characteristics received during its obtaining follows it's using, it makes the obtaining of very much more importance than the education itself.

The general object of all educational institutions is to educate, but the large majority of them have a special object to fit and prepare their patrons for some special calling in life. Some for ministers, some for merchants, others for doctors, lawyers, farmers &c. To accomplish these ends, there is a certain influence thrown around them which is expected to mold their after life, and as a rule, the anticipated result follows. If our reasoning is tenable, is it not of the greatest importance for us to be concerned in regard to those influences which shall be thrown around our children during the time their education is being obtained? The facts are so evident that it occurs to us that our brethren cannot fail to see the reasonableness of the object for which we labor, not to mislead or destroy our children, but to save them from the dangerous and soul destroying influences that must and will be thrown around them unless we succeed in providing something better.

While we bear with those who differ from our views in regard to education, we hope they will exercise the same charity towards us. For whatever may be for the good of the Church, our children and the world, we shall labor and, hope while thus laboring we may have your sympathies, support and prayers. Whether the school is a success or a failure will not affect our interest the least as, financially, we are not concerned, but the cause has our sympathies and also the sanction of Annual Conference.

REFLECTIONS.

One more week's labor is now about over,—the Pilgrim is printed, folded, wrapped and ready for the mail. To morrow morning it will be going east, west, north and south, and by evening will reach some of your homes. Some member of the family has been at the Post Office and as he enters the door some one anxiously inquires, "Has the Pilgrim come?" The evening meal may be in preparation, or the many little domestic duties that make so weary the faithful loving wife or daughter may yet be unfinished, but on the arrival of this ever welcome visitor, these are apparently forgotten until at least a hasty glance is taken at the contents. This scene occurs only in families where christian literature is appreciated,—who are devout Christians,—whose soul's are warmed with the love of God. Perhaps there is something said about Jesus my Lord, my life and my way. Oh how sweet his name is to my soul! Perhaps there has been some sorrows or fears, and then it is that words of cheer may soothe a heart that is broken. Could we feel assured that our labors each week tends to the encouragement of the saints and the upbuilding of our glorious Zion, what a consolation it would be. Sometimes we feel almost discouraged: we try to sow and do not apparently reap. But then Jesus says, "Herein is this saying true, one soweth and another reapeth." He, himself, saw comparatively little fruit of his labors. He confined his labors to Judea, and even there he was engaged in sowing seed which sprang up after his death. This then teaches us that we should not be discouraged if we do not meet with immediate success. We shall then in these our musings take courage, and shall endeavor to go forth bearing precious seed, hoping at some day to come forth rejoicing and bearing our sheaves with us.

Dear readers, we hope we are sending something to you each week that is of interest to you, and that gives you encouragement on your way Zionward. We also trust that some seed is being sowed that will in course of time at least, bring forth fruit to the honor and glory of God, and this is the source of our encouragement upon a reflection of each weeks labor after we commit it to the mails. Then too, we sometimes think of the careless and indifferent manner in which some receive the Pilgrim visits. Not long ago we heard a brother say, although he is a very warm advocate of the cause, that he supposed the Pilgrim arrived regularly, but he missed reading one number. This showed to us clearly that he did not relish its contents, and so it is; our minds become so engrossed with the things of this life, that we lose an interest in the things pertaining to our eternal welfare, and our religious periodicals are not appreciated. A farm journal, a bazar of fashion, or something that tends to enhance the pecuniary interests, is a more acceptable paper, and one too, that all the numbers are carefully read. It is however all right to be interested in our pecuniary affairs, at least so much so, as to provide all things honest in the sight of God. But the Savior says, "First seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you;" i. e. our duty to God should be of first importance, and then may we expect that our efforts pecuniarily will be crowned with a degree of success sufficient for the providing of all our necessary wants. May we not then hope dear Christian friends, that every effort made for the advancement of Christianity will be looked upon with deference for the things relative to our eternal salvation are surely of vastly more importance than anything else in this life. J. B. B.

WRONG PRAYERS.

The apostle James says, "Ye ask and receive not because you ask amiss," and it is to be feared that there is a great deal of wrong praying done in these days. It is no uncommon thing for men to pray who are covetous, quarrelsome, fond of retaliation, lovers of their own selves, gratifying the lusts of the flesh, and living in the pride of life. Such persons are often professors of religion, and keep up a form of worship in their families, praying for success in their pursuits, the basis of which may be covetousness, or that they may be enabled to secure a competency to enable them to live in splendor and pamper their lusts. Such persons no matter how great their pretensions to religion, or how sincere they may pretend to be, are not governed by the true christian spirit, and cannot pray acceptably to God. As long as the mind is not resigned to the will of God, with a desire to deny ourselves of all sensual gratifications, we cannot have the proper motive in prayer. Hence the apostle says, "Ye ask and receive not because you ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." These persons the apostle well knew did not ask that they might have a comfortable living, but their desire was that they might have the means of luxurious dress, and gross sensual gratification. Prayers offered in this way are not acceptable, and it becomes every one who prays to first examine well his motives. It is not reasonable to suppose that God will hear our prayers when we willingly and knowingly act contrary to his will,—when our hearts are filled with malice, envy, and strife towards our fellow men,—when we seek their destruction and delight in their downfall. All this is in direct opposition to the christian spirit. If we forgive not men their trespasses our heavenly Father will not forgive ours. We must overcome the evils of men with good, and with this mind, if we approach God and ask in faith, he will hear our prayers and give us strength for our day and trial. J. B. B.

GO FORWARD.

This was the command the of Lord to Moses at that critical moment when surrounded by high mountains on each side, the Red Sea in front, and Pharaoh's army in the rear. The people were crying out against him for bringing them in such a dilemma, but Moses was a God-fearing man, and when he saw that his people were discouraged, and their faith failing, he commanded them to stand still until he would ask the Lord what he should do to save them. Then it was that he commanded them to go forward.

How many there are at the present time who have come out from under the bondage of sin, and are traveling towards the heavenly Canaan that come into such straits. There are difficulties on either side and in front of us that seem unsurmountable, while in the rear is the enemy of souls. "What must I do to be saved?" is a query that then becomes all important. How carefully we should search the word of God to find the true answer. The Pentecostians were just in such a dilemma when they inquired, "What must I do?" The answer was, be baptized, go forward even through the typical burial and resurrection of Christ. But just here is where thousands make the fatal error; instead of obeying the commandment of the Lord, they take for doctrine the "commandments of men" who tell the anxious sinner that baptism is not necessary—pray on, continue asking God, and never go forward. This is not the way Moses did who was the Savior of the Israelites; as soon as the Lord told him to go 'orward he went, and so must we with faith and confidence follow our lea ler, Christ, down into the watery grave. Then it is that the Lord will provide a way for our deliverance, and if we are faithful we will reach the heavenly shore, and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

HYMN BOOKS.

We inform our readers that we have now on hands, a good stock of Hymn books and will be pleased to accommodate all such as need them. We have carefully filled all orders on hands. There has been a considerable delay in some of them, but it was the very best we could do as we sent them out as soon as we received them. All the brethren in want o.' books, who expect to attend the District Meeting of Mid., Pa. can get them there as we will have them there for sale by request. In this connection we wish to say to those who have ordered books of H. J. Kurtz, that those orders were sent to us with the request to have them filled, but his letter has been waylaid and we cannot now fill them. If any of those parties are still in want of books and send us their orders we will be pleased to fill them at once.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bro. George M. Smelker of the Perry Church, Perry Co., Pa., says, "We are building a meeting-house on the farm of brother Christian Myers, and expect to have it furnished in time to hold our lovefeast the coming fall."

Sister Fannie H. Keim recently of Falls City Neb. says: "We left our home in Pa., on the 31st of March to select a home in this country. Arrived here safely and think we will be pleased with the country. Have not been to meeting yet. There are services held in the court house by the brethren every three weeks.

From the N. Y. Observer we have the following: "Rev. Thomas Smith, a Baptist minister, is now living at Parrotsville, Tenn., over 101 years old. He came to Tennessee from Virginia eighty years ago, was the pastor of one church forty-four years, has preached several times in the past year, riding horseback to his appointments, quotes Scripture readily, has a good memory, reads without glasses, and has never taken but three doses of medicine."

Our contributors who have essays lying in our Manuscript box should not be discouraged because theirs do not appear. All that we can get in shape at all for publication will appear sometime during the year. As a general thing we select that which needs the least remodeling first, and especially is this so, during the busy season of the year. We do not wish any of our contributors to be discouraged and not write at all if one of your essays should go into the waste basket. It is no evidence that you cannot write. Try again, and the next time you may be able to express your ideas more intelligibly.

Bro. B. Homer, of Abilene Kansas says, "There is not much heard of the little Church in the frontier on the Kansas Pacific R. R., and in the vicinity of Abilene. We have an organized Church here consisting of 21 members. We have but one speaker who is in the second degree. But he is a worthy brother, and a good shepherd, for we do well know that he careth for his sheep.

He also says, "We have a favorable Spring so far. The people are busy seeding their Spring crops. Winter wheat looks well and a great deal of it was sown in this country. Mr. F. C. Henry, our land agent for this county has, I am told, five hundred acres of winter wheat all sowed in this county."

W. B. of Morrisonville Ill., says, "This is a fast age of the world. It seems the Pilgrim is doing all in its power to set forth the gospel light in its purity, and yet there is a great lack on our part. We see some things in the church to-day that was not allowed fifty years ago. It takes the same to constitute a Christian now that it did then, and we are only safe when we have a thus saith the Lord for what we do in his house. We are then on safe ground and do not lay a stumbling block in our brother's way. We were made to rejoice when one who was dear and dear came to visit us last Spring. The time was short but we were built up in that most holy faith once delivered to the saints. Brethren let us all keep in the same path so that there be no divisions amongst us, for nothing short of this will be acceptable to our heavenly Father."

Correspondence.

Request is made from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim:

Having been requested to keep your readers posted relative to our prospects here in the settlement of this valley, &c., I will inform you that we met the excursionists at Julesburg the morning of the 4th of April. There were not as many for Buffalo as some expected. Daniel Mahan and family, of Orion, Wisconsin, consisting of his wife (a sister) 2 grown up daughters and 3 other children and a relative by the name of Johns were among the party. Dr. Davis of Sangersville, Va., Bro. Michael Cline of Rockingham Co., Va., Bro David Long of the same place with a number of other persons from Augusta and Rockingham Co. Va., also stopped off. Bro. Ambrustaad family and a Mr. Fleisher and family from Iowa, who came on the day before, were awaiting our arrival There were in all about thirty persons. The morning was blustery and disagreeable. In the course of a few hours we were off up the Platte, excepting three expectant young men, who not finding persons on the platform ready to hire them at high wages, and take them up the valley 75 miles free of charge, concluded to "back" for the way they come. I suppose feeling satisfied in regard to Colorado, having seen 80 rods of it! After traveling 18 miles, we all put up at a "ranche." The evening was stormy. had fair quarters, though somewhat crowded. Next day at noon stopped to feed and rest a while at another "ranche" near the Indian camp. The Indians come flocking around the wagons eager for a trade. They seem to have a special desire to see little white babes which they called "pappoose," at the sight of which they seem delighted. They were very friendly and an acquaintance with them soon banished that fear that is so universal in the hearts of persons that have been brought up to believe that the Indidians are all savage monsters. They seem to be well provided for, have good tents, many are richly dressed in costly blankets with silver borders, finger rings, ear rings, beads and trinkets are as freely indulged in by the Sioux Indians as by the whites. Persons here have but little or no fear in regard to the Indians. In this part of the valley there has been none for years, and those that were below I learn have now gone to the Reservation, probably never more to return to the valley which was so long their hunting ground, but now is taken possession of by the "white man." But to return: at night a part of the company put up at the "River-side" another "ranche" owned by a man that has over twenty thousand head of cattle, the others had gone on farther. Next morning it was storming fearfully—no marvel, for it was Easter Monday. About 9 o'clock it broke away and soon the snow melted. About two o'clock p. m., we arrived at Sterling Settlement where I was met by a messenger informing me that some of my children were dangerously ill. I hastened home—the families rented houses in Sterling. I found Dr. Davis and his party at my house. My children had a relapse of the measles or something like the scarlet fever. They had all just recovered, as we thought, from the measles some 10 days previous, now those that were so ill are convalescent and will soon be around I think, as usual. I have just received letters informing me that several other families of the Brethren will soon be on their way for this place. Two families and some gentlemen from Alabama have arrived in the neighborhood to-day, several other gentlemen have arrived lately, so you see the stream of emigration continues to flow. Just here I will answer a few questions as requested by a brother in Iowa, hoping it will answer for many others:

1. How far are you from Julesburg on the Union Pacific Railroad?

Ans. 75 miles direct up the South Platte River.

2. Do you know the fare from Julesburg to Omaha?

Ans. $18.55. By first getting a "Colonist Certificate," the fare from Omaha to Julesburg will be $10.55

3. The winter?

Ans. We have had some cold weather, a few mornings below zero, some snow, some stormy days and much nice dry weather and no rain yet since Fall.

4. The Timber?

Ans. In a manner none in this valley below here, and for some distance above. Some timber 10, 15, and 20 miles back from the river, in canyons, cottonwood and cedar. For the present we get and use cedar posts. We have good prospects for coal in the valley, near me. When our railroad gets in running order, probably in a few months, then, coal, timber and building material can be had convenient and at moderate prices. Those persons who have written to me to take them timber claims, must go to our mountains 100 miles off, or somewhere else, because we are not in the timber claim business. We don't want any one to come here expecting to find Buffalo a town with street cars, gaslight or numerous houses; for they arn't here—only prosperity.

Truly yours, J. S. Flory.

The Sabbath—Queries answered.

Respected Editor:—

Having had the pleasure of reading in one of your latest papers, the subject concerning the true Sabbath, written by J. H. Moore, you would confer a great favor upon one, searching for the truth by answering through your worthy paper the following queries:

(1.) "Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath; but with him that standeth here with us this day before the Lord our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day. "Deut. 29: 14, 15. What is the meaning of "with him"?

(2.) What is the meaning of Matt. 5: 17, 18, 19?

(3.) Did Christ command us to keep the first day in honor of his resurrection in preference to the seventh day given by God? Respectfully yours,

W. Meyers.

Remarks. The above queries were sent to me by the editor some weeks ago, requesting me to answer them. I would have attended to the matter sooner, but other matters have been claiming my attention so closely, that I have been compelled to delay my answer to the present time. I have not time to give as lengthy an answer to queries, Nos. 2 and 3 as the case really demands, but hope that a sufficient will be presented to enable our querist to comprehend our position.

1. What is the meaning of "with him?"

The pronoun him is not in the original, though it is twice used in the 15th verse. But without stopping to discuss its reality, we simply admit its existence, in sense at least, and proceed to examine its meaning. Two classes are designated by the pronoun him; (a.) those who stood there with them that day, and (b.) those who were not there. The first were all of Israel then living, and there at that time—with these was the covenant made—about this there is no uncertainty. This then is clear. The second refers to all the unborn being of the tribes of Israel—who were not there at that time. This covenant and oath was not only with the living, but with all the rising generation of the entire company.

There were two parties involved in the covenant. (a.) The Lord, and (b.) Israel; it was made between these two, and was not only good while they the Israelites lived, but, was to extend to their children in the using communities.

Other views have been drawn from these verses, but none, that are any thing like reasonable, or sufficiently elastic to embrace all the gentiles of earth, who had no interest whatever in the promise God made the seed of Abraham—This land will I give unto thee and thy seed, for an inheritance forever. This passage has nothing to do in proving that the Jewish Sabbath was binding on the gentiles as well as the Jews. The Law was given to the latter, and not to the former at all.

The t[illegible]eligion of the world may properly be divided into three periods. (1.) Patriarchal—extending from the fall of Adam till the giving of the Law. During this period, we have no account that they had any set day of worship. (2.) Jewish—extending from the giving of the Law till the death of Christ; this law has Christ now abolished; "nailing it to the cross." (Col. 11. 14). "It was added because of transgressions. till seed (Christ) should come." Gal. 3: 19. In his religion the seventh day of the week was set apart as the Sabbath. This Sabbath was a Jewish Edifice, built upon two grand foundation stones: (a) God's resting on this day, Gen. 11: 3, and (b.) Israel's resting from bondage Deut. 5: 15. God, as the great Master Builder, did not erect his building till both stones were laid. (3.) Christian—extending from the death of Christ till the present time. In this system the first day of the week is observed, in remembrance of Christ's resurrection. This day is never called the Sabbath in the New Testament, either Greek or English, but the "first day of the week," or, the "Lord's day." Sunday is the heathen name. The first system was family worship. The second, congregational and was to the Jews only, while the third is both family and congregational, being the perfect system, and is to all nations under heaven. If our friend will carefully study the gradual and uniform developments of these three systems of worship this Sabbath question will have many of the apparent difficulties removed.

2. What is the meaning of Matt. 5: 17, 18, 19?

To render our remarks more intelligible to the reader, we will transcribe the three verses named above. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. [The reader will please remember this term —"pass from the law."] Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

These verses are frequently introduced to prove that a part of the Mosaic law is still in force, but a careful examination will disclose a position some what different.

Christ says that, "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled, "showing that there was a possibility of something passing from the law, and furthermore, that was not to take place till all was fulfilled. Why would he speak of passing from the law, if the law was to remain as it was given from Sinai?

Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it. This term fulfill in this connection leads many people into error—thinking that it means simply to obey only. If that were the case then the law was fulfilled every time any one did what the law required. This term here certainly does not refer to completing it i. e., use it for the purpose for which it was intended—and thus bring it to its state of completion, or consummation Christ was only made under the law, but he obeyed it—and not only so, but took it out of the way "nailing it to the cross;" this then was the end of the law—it was fulfilled to its fullest extent, and not even one jot or tittle was taken from it till this was accomplished. The reader will observe that moral law not at that time abolished, but was transferred into the new code. The Jewish Sabbath however, is not a moral but a positive institution and was too added because of sin till the seed, Christ should come. It was a commemorative institution, while moral laws are not. The apostles were not allowed to violate these laws during the Saviour's life in the flesh, but with his death they were abolished, and therefore not absolutely binding on the apostles after that period.

Our limits and time will not allow us to pursue the subject of the query any further at present and will close this part of our article with the following statements:

(1.) The three verses named above properly refer to the law before it was nailed to the cross, or abolished.

(2.) That part of the law transfered from the Mosaic to the Christian dispensation is moral and not positive.

(3.) The Sabbath was a positive institution, being commemorative of the two foundation stones on which it was built, and not transferred.

(3.) "Did Christ command us to keep the day in honor of his resurrection, in preference to the seventh day given by God?"

One might properly object to the manner in which this query is worded, as it seems to set Christ against his Father, when the well known fact is that he came not to do his own will but the will of him who sent him, and no man can come unto the Father but by him, and all power respecting the redemption was given into the hands of Christ, both in heaven and in earth.

It should then be born in mind that whatever was done by the Son was ordered by the Father. There are three in heaven that bear record, The Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit: and while it is a fact that these are three respecting their individuality it is also, another fact, that they are one respecting the unity of their work. What is done by one is properly the work of the three.

We have already seen that the positive law has been taken out of the way, being nailed to the cross. Col. 11: 14, and also, that the Sabbath was a positive—commemorative institution, and is not now binding on those who regard Jesus as the author and finisher of our faith. This being clear it remains to look into the dispensation, in which Christ is our law-giver, and see what light we can gather from the actions of those, who were living epistles known and read of all men. It should also, be born in mind, that what was done by the apostles was the working of the Holy Spirit which was to guide them into the way of all truth, and if we regard them as the living epistles of the Lord Jesus Christ and are willing to be governed by their example we will have but little trouble in finding what day of the week we should observe.

The only command that we have for observing any day in the Gospel dispensation, is that derived from the examples of the apostles, who in all their worshiping were simply executing what the Lord had commanded them. In short their manner of worship was the outward manifestation of the working of the Spirit within.

In my former article on the Sabbath, it was seen that the Lord arose from the dead on the first day of the week. This was the most remarkable event connected with the Christian dispensation. The sacrifice for the world had been offered—the great atonement had been made—it was finished—the old law being taken out of the way—and the covenant that was to concern the whole world was sealed with the blood of the intended sacrifice—the son of the living God. These remarkable events, especially the resurrection, gave it to be known by the term LORD'S DAY. Rev. 1: 10.

1. "Then the same day at evening being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in their midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." John 20: 19. This meeting of the Lord and his disciples on the first day of the week, needs no comment. We therefore pass on to the next.

2, "And after eight days his disciples were again within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, and stood in their midst, and said, Peace be unto you." John 20: 26. John's note of time—"after eight days," is equivalent to "a week after." It properly includes the day from which reckoning is made—hence on the eighth day. This reckoning brings the meeting on the first day of the next week, just one week after their first regular meeting after the resurrection. John's language, "again his disciples were within," proves that this second meeting was at the same place that the first was held i. e. in Jerusalem, for in the next chapter he speaks of Jesus meeting his disciples again, at the sea of Tiberius, some seventy miles away, where they were fishing. Thus the two first Lord's days of the dispensation after the abolishing of the old law, we find the disciples assembled in a room and Jesus with them.

3. Just six weeks after this their second meeting on the first day of the week, "when the day of Pentecost had fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Acts 2: 1. I presume that no argument is needed to prove that Pentecost came on the first day of the week, but, if it is needed the reader shall have it when the case requires it. The disciples being with one accord and in one place on the first day of the week, demonstrates to a certainty their regular habit of meeting on this day. Up to this time we have eight Lord's days, and find the meeting of the disciples on three of them, nothing being said about the other five, and who, in the absence of testimony in the case, is willing to show that they did not also meet on the other five days of the Lord. On the two first we find them assembled, and passing over five, we find them again assembled on Pentecost, the first day of the week. We must certainly infer, as they observed the three, so did they keep the other five. Thus from the resurrection to Pentecost, a period of fifty days, we find the apostles and brethren holding regular meetings on the first day of the week, and if they during this period, were the epistles of the Lord, known and read of all men, have we not a positive command in example for keeping this day also? What could have induced them to keep up their regular meetings on this day if they had received no instructions to that effect? We will not stop here to discuss whether these veerable characters were influenced by the Holy Spirit or not, but let that be as it may, one thing certain, up to this point we find them observing this day, and another thing certain, on this day "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," (4th verse), and what they did after this period was the working of the Spirit in them, hence we will further examine their conduct, and see if we cannot learn something more from these living epistles.

4. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Heb. 10: 25. This language of Paul to the Hebrews, shows that they had a set day on which they were required to assemble, or otherwise it would have been useless to exhort them to assemble. It then remains to be seen what day that was.

5. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come." 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples come together to break bread." Acts 20: 7. These two incidents alone are sufficient to settle the question, as to what day the disciples observed. As they were in the habit of meeting on this day, as their regular time of worship, Paul exhorted them to make their collection for the saints on this day, that there might be no gathering when he came. This was not to the church at Corinth only, but also the churches of Galatia similar order had been given. Here then we have the example of the apostles and disciples in the first century—when they were full of the Holy Ghost, and were by it guided into the way of all truth. This testimony is from what I call the living epistles of the Lord, written by his own fingers on the tablets of their hearts. John also mentions this day, when he speaks of being in the Spirit on the Lord's day. Rev. 1: 10. Ignatius, who was contemporary with John, and died about the year A. D. 107, also calls the first day of the week the Lord's day.

I hope I have given to our friend the information desired. This article has been prepared under very unfavorable circumstances, came to hand when I was getting my late work ready for press, and an extra rush of orders and correspondence &c., have unavoidably delayed its preparation, and appearance.

J. H. MOORE.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

The reply to the query asked in PILGRIM No. 8, Vol. 5, by Waldemor Myers, concerning the two witnesses spoken of in the 11th chapter of Rev., is not satisfactory. That the Old and New Testaments are two very strong witnesses, is very true; they will stand as heavy witnesses in the day of judgment. But I think the two witnesses spoken of in Revelation, will be two living beings, who have not yet made their appearance. They will have power to shut heaven that it rain not in the days of their prophecy, and power to turn water into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will, and more, their prophecy is limited to one thousand, two hundred, and three score days, and when they shall have finished their testimony they will be overcome and killed. Read the following five verses, "But the Savior says, my words, (which is the New Testament,) shall never pass away." They cannot be overcome, neither can they be put out of the way, nor be killed, if all the hosts of hell should be combined together they cannot do it. Jesus' words will stand when heaven and earth will pass away. So we cannot believe the Old and New Testaments to be the true witnesses spoken of in Rev. I sent this same query to the Visitor office about fifteen years ago, but never received an answer.

MARGARET DEARDORFF.

Dear Pilgrim:—

In the number dated Mar. 17th 1874. I find a heading, District Conference. "We sometimes fear that there is not the importance attached to these meetings that there should be." I do agree with the writer. But I think that a little might be done to avoid the greater portion of the queries. If there is a query passed through the district council and comes to the Annual Council, let it be made known to the church what was done with it. Let the church be instructed in these things through the PILGRIM and Companion, so that they may not be thrown under the table, and the church be left in the shade. We should know what was done with them as these queries may arise in the church at home, and if we have them in our papers, then we can refer to them at any time in our councils; and settle such matters at home. B. HOMER.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

I have been appointed to confer with the Indianapolis, Bloomington, and western R. R. Co., and make the best possible arrangements for those wishing to attend the coming Annual Meeting, which is to be held about 25 miles south of Springfield, Ill., on the Chicago & Alton R. R. This I have now done, and wish particular attention paid to the following statements, as this route will be the most complete one yet made for those coming from the eastern States.

1. Bear in mind that brother Sayler has made arrangements on the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. over its main line from Baltimore to Columbus, O. Pay full fare going, and then at the A. M. procure of brother Sayler a certificate to return you from Columbus to the point on the road from whence you started free.

2nd. Brother Davy has made arrangements on the Pan Handle road that will connect with Sayler's arrangement at Columbus, and carry you direct to Indianapolis. Those who intend to travel on this route should have tickets from brother Davy.

3rd. I have made half fare arrangements on the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western railroad that will carry you direct from Indianapolis to Bloomington. You will go to the meeting when you please, pay full fare going, saying nothing to the agents about it, and at the A. M. I will give you a ticket that will return you free from Bloomington to the point where you strike this road.

4th. Brother John Beechly has made arrangements on the Chicago and Alton R. R. that will carry you direct from Bloomington to the A. M. Thus we have a complete line of arrangements, from Baltimore direct to the A. M. Let all those from the east at once get on this line, as it is far more complete than any other arrangement yet completed. To all who will send me a postage stamp, I will send a R. R map, showing the exact route to be traveled from Baltimore to Columbus, thence to Bloomington, and thence to the A. M., so plainly marked that there will be no chance for mistake.

5. At Bloomington you stop off at the Junction of the I. B. & W. and C. & A. R. R. and not run up to the regular depot in the town. Observe this strictly. At the Junction you will pay full fare to the A. M. and there you will obtain your return ticket. The tickets I give you on the I. B. & W. R. R. will be good for six days after the meeting closes.

RAILROAD MANAGEMENTS.

The Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne and Chicago Railroad Company offers to take persons going to the Annual Meeting of the Brethren, over their road upon the following terms: They will pay four cents a mile one way, and then be taken back free. This is the best we could do, though not what we wanted. All who desire to avail themselves of this offer, will inform me as soon as possible what points they want to start from, anywhere on that railroad, and the point they want to leave the road, between Pittsburg and Chicago. I must inform the company, and it will send me the tickets, and I will send them to the brethren before they start. Now let some brother in each arm of the Church, ascertain the number of tickets wanted, and the place they intend to start from, and the place where they will leave the road. The company said, make this plain and strong lest there be a failure. The tickets will be good from May 5th to June 5th.

I have made the same arrangements with the Pan Handle Railroad from Pittsburg to Indianapolis, Logansport and Chicago. Send me as soon as possible the number of tickets wanted, and the points to start from, and also the points where those having tickets will leave the road. These tickets will also be good from the 5th of May until the 5th of June. It will be understood that my arrangements will connect with brother D. P. Sayler's at Columbus, Ohio.

Whoever sends to me for tickets, will give me their Postoffice address in a plain writing, and say how many are wanted, and between what places they are wanted, and I will send the tickets as soon as I can get them ready. H. D. DAVY.

Casstown, Miami Co., Ohio.

Railroad Arrangements.

Our brethren, sisters and friends wishing to attend our coming Annual Meeting, will be conveyed over the line of the Hamilton and St. Joseph Railroad to Quincy, at the usual reduced rates (on our western roads) which is full fare going and one-fifth to return. Return certificates will be furnished to all who may apply at the meeting. We think the brethren in southern Nebraska, Northern Kansas and Northern Mo. should take this route to Quincy, as there is clear connection with the Toledo and Wabash line to Jacksonville, or Virdin. We expect the Toledo and Wabash will also extend the favor as this will be a leading line for our brethren and friends from other points.

GEORGE WITWER.

N. B. Will the brethren in Nebraska, Kansas, and Northern Mo., try and ascertain how many will probably go, so as to enable me to know what number of return certificates to order printed.

I would further say I hope brother John Beeghly of Ill., will succeed in arranging with the Toledo and Wabash line and excuse my liberty for making the arrangements as stated,—(he being appointed by last A. M. to arrange for Western roads,) and as some of our brethren and friends who wish to attend the meeting lives right on the line of said road, we considered it our privilege to make application. 2d. Our brethren at District Meeting requested us to do so. 3. This Co. has always granted us reduced rates when called for by the Brethren, hence think their road should be patronized. G. W.

HALF FARE TO ANNUAL MEETING.

Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh:—

Please insert in the Pilgrim, for the benefit of the Brotherhood the following extracts from a letter addressed to me from John U. Parsons, general ticket agent of the Toledo, Wabash and G. W. R. R. Co.

"Your letter of April 15th relating to reduced rates for German Baptists has been received. It is true that I refused to make a reduction in rates for Mr. John Beechly, for the reason that I supposed there would be but a few that would go. If you will give me a list of the stations from which reduced rates is wished, and think there will be three or more to go I will give you half fare rates. Please inform me when you wish the tickets placed on sale and how long they will wish them good to return."

This is a new business to me and I do not know how to answer Mr. Parsons, but will name now Ft. Wayne, Logansport and LaFayette, and if THREE or MORE brethren at other stations on the road desire half fare tickets, they will let me know immediately.

Tickets ought to be on sale about May 20th, and be good twelve or fifteen days.

Full fare from Ft. Wayne, Indiana, to Springfield, Illinois, is, we think about ten dollars. This road is in good condition, makes good time, and gives good accommodations. S. M. MIMICH.

Antioch, Ind.

AUBURN, ILLS., April 3, 1874.

Dear brother, a few more lines for publication for the benefit of those going to A. M. I have just returned from St. Louis and have made arrangements with the Ohio and Mississippi Railway Company for reduced fare. Pay full fare going, ask no questions, and at the meeting you will obtain a ticket, signed by me for one-fifth for return. The General Ticket Agent wishes me to publish that they have reduced their fare lower already than any other road in the West; their full fare from Cincinati now is $10 which used to be $13, therefore they could not grant half fare. A fare and a fifth is the best they will do.

JOHN BEECHLY.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

I have obtained half-fare rates for attending the A. M. from Indianapolis to Bloomington Ill. And I think the same can be secured from Columbus, Ohio, to Indianapolis Ill. Full direction will be given soon. J. H. MOORE.

NOTICE.

The quota (average) for the North Mo. Congregations represented at last D. M. to defray expenses of delagates to A. M. will be about $6.00 each. Remittances can be made to C. C. Root, Mirabile, Caldwell Co. Mo., Eli Metz or the writer. All money raised should be sent not later than May 14.

FIRST STEP TO RUIN.

My first step to ruin, exclaimed a wretched youth, as he lay tossing from side to side on the straw bed in one corner of his prison-house. My first step to ruin, was going fishing on the Sabbath. I knew it was wrong; my mother taught me better. I did not believe them, but I did not think it would come to this. Oh! I am undone. I am lost!

Dear reader, perhaps he said, it is so unpleasant to be penned up in church! What harm is there in taking a stroll in the woods? What harm in carrying my fishing tackle, and sitting on the banks to fish? Do you ask what harm? Why the harm is, God is disobeyed, who says, "Remember the Sabbath to keep it holy." Ah, yes, the moment a youth determines to have his own way, choosing his own pleasure before God's will, that moment he lets go his rudder, his compass, and his chart. Nothing but God's word can guide you safely over the ocean of life. Give that up and you get bewildered; you are drifting; you will be lost, but remember if your parents taught you better, if they have tried patiently to guide your feet in the path of virtue and holiness, and you still are contrary to their will, I say remember your parents will not have to give an account for the many faults and crimes that you have committed. No; but you will have to stand before the bar of God, there to render an account of the deeds done in the body. Reflect then one moment before you take the first step, and believe me, your well-wisher.

ENERGY.

It has been said that energy is the mind's hammer, hatchet and plow. It is a goodly weapon to hammer down all obstacles in the pathway; it cuts away all difficulties: it plows the roughest soil. Did ever a nation achieve the renown without energy? Was there ever a person of note who was not energetic? No, the attainment of eminence is only reached by diligent study, close observation and unwavering energy. He who has a thirst for knowledge and resolves in the language of the good old Roman adage to "find a way or make it," will be sure to succeed in any undertaking. He has the will—the way will be found. Look at that man in the pursuit of "worldly wealth." He pauses not to consider his own enjoyment or ease, straining every nerve to obtain that boon which his own heart is set upon.

Energy is the key to success. It unlocks the secret of heroic deeds of those great and grand ones whose names are illustrious upon the page of history, or as Longfellow expresses it, have left their "footprints on the sands of time."

Energy is firm. It shrinks not from labor; it faints not at danger. Their resolute may after a few vain attempts give up in despair, but not so with the energetic man. He will labor and persevere untill its efforts are crowned with success.

BUSINESS RULES.

Moments.—"Call on business men on business during business hours; transact your business and go about your pleasures, the latter only attend to their business.

Offices, stores, and other places of business are established for business purposes. It costs time, care, and money to maintain and conduct them. The results are in proportion to the talent, industry, and attention bestowed on the business. A concern which is run without business rules or order will not only fail, but will spoil young employes, who become irregular, inattentive, slovenly, indolent, and shiftless.

1st. Promptness is indispensible. Each employee should always make it a rule to be "on time," so as not to deprive his employer or others who may require attention of his services and services when needed. If he be ten minutes behind time, it may cause the loss of time to ten others. Ten times ten minutes are a hundred!

Losing Time.—One may be disposed to talk and gossip about matters not connected with the duties of the office, which not only consumes their own time, their employers, but that also of listeners. How indignant would he feel if charged with robbing; and, as "time is money," is he not a robber who wastes another's time? One has no right thus to "steal" away time for which he is paid to work or to attend to business.

Vigilance.—To be vigilant in business, not slothful, is a Divine command. It is the duty of an employe to be watchful, wide awake, and mindful of his employers interests. Mere "killing time" till the clock strikes the hour to quit won't do; such indifference and neglect will neither secure more pay nor promotion.

Diligence, is not only a duty to the employer, but it secures promotion and increased remmneration. One may not always be pushed with work, in which case he should push the work, and fill up his time as best he may.

A Good Penman and Quick in Figures.—To excel and turn off work well, and with dispatch, one must write a handsome hand, and be able to compute figures rapidly; also to make change quickly and correctly. Bungling or delay in these is inexcusable.

A shirk or an eye servant watches the clock impatiently to have the time arrive for lunch or to quit, and is sure to be ready to stop any duty the moment the clock strikes. He is not so careful to be on hand in the morning. Then, he is "in the drag." Such persons are seldom up with their work, and often fail to keep their promises. They are always unfortunate, and never rise in life.

Politeness.—A rough, rude, uncouth, ill-tempered boy, curmudgeon, or man, is a nuisance in my business concern, and the sooner he be set about something to which he is adapted, the better. He will drive away customers. One who stinks of whiskey, beer, or tobacco is unfit to stand behind a counter and to wait on customers. One who is polite, patient, kindly, neat, tidy, talkative, honest, friendly, and capable of reading character, to know who wants to purchase, and who simply wants to look at the goods, is the best adapted to the place, and will soon make his services indispensible.

Aim High.—Honorable aspiration in any calling is laudible. No useful work is menial. A true lady will grace the kitchen no less than the drawing-room. It is just as honorable to sweep and dust an office as it is to weat laces, or count coppers, or keep accounts. The boy who runs on errands, or carries parcels, may, if he does his whole duty, work up to bookkeeper, cashier, partner and principal. Many of our leading newspaper editors and publishers were once newsboys, and most of our leading merchants were once office boys and clerks. To rise to the highest position one needs experience in all departments of the business. A sailor must study navigation and serve before the mast ere he is fit for captain or mate.

We need not moralize here, though we will suggest that the chances of the boy, who abstains from the use of tobacco and alcoholic stimulants will always be the best. If he goes to Sunday School, takes an active part in religious devotions, he will be better fortified against yielding to ordinary temptations, and will grow in grace, and in a knowledge of God and His righteousness. He will rise

PIMPLES, ERUPTIONS ROUGH SKIN

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. Nothing ever presented to the public as a beautifier of the complexion ever gave such satisfaction for this purpose as this discovery. The effect of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen or more may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrotula is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by all Druggists.

COVERED WITH ERUPTIONS CURED.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—I am sixty years of age, and have been afflicted with Salt Rheum in the worst form for a great many years, until accidentally, I saw one of your books, which described my case exactly. I bought your Golden Medical Discovery and took two bottles and a half, and was entirely cured. From my shoulders to my hands I was entirely covered with eruptions, also on face and body. I was likewise afflicted with Rheumatism, so that I walked with great difficulty, and that is entirely cured. May God spare you a long life to remain a blessing to mankind. With untold gratitude.

POETRY.

Waiting On the Shore.

BY WESLEY.

I am sitting by the river,
And the shadows gather fast;
Oh! how many anxious glances,
On its dashing waves I cast.
Hark! I hear the mighty chorus
Rise above the water's roar,—
Send thy summons, blessed Jesus,
I am waiting on the shore.

I have fought the hordes of Satan,
Through a life of toil and pain;
And full oft, my soul has wandered
If the portal I should gain.
Oh! my bleeding feet are weary,
And my troubled heart is sore;
How I long to rest from labor,
As I wait upon the shore.

I have walked amid the darkness
That enshrond the doubting soul;
I have sung the glad hosanna's
Which from faithful bosoms roll.
Shared the mutual joys and sorrows
Of the loved ones gone before;—
Dost thou see me carrier-angel?
I am waiting on the shore.

Oh! my failing strength assures me
That my stay will not be long.
Soon my weary soul shall carol
Over there, the glad new song.
Haste thy coming, sombre boatman,
Hark! I hear the plashing oar,
And I see the snowy lilies
Waving on the other shore.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

In an article in the PILGRIM, Vol. V. No. 19, on page 125, on the subject of the Sabbath, by John A. Carter, I discover a few errors which I wish to correct, not that I wish to enter into a controversy with the writer, but to throw a little more light on the subject, in order that the readers of said article may not be misled. He argues that the commandment in the Decalogue, not to do any work on the Seventh day is still binding and to be observed by Christians: and says: "Now until this law (the ten commandments) is altered or abrogated by the same power that enacted it, a wilfull transgression of it is a willful sin." Now we will see whether the law was not altered or abrogated and superceded by a better law, that is the law of Christ,—by a "perfect law of liberty." James 2: 25. Paul says, "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come we are no longer under a school-master." Gal. 3: 24, 25. And in the 15th chapter of Acts, we find that certain of the sect of Pharisees which believed, taught the brethren that it was needful to circumcise them and command them to keep the law of Moses. And the Apostles and Elders came together to consider this matter, and it seemed good unto the Holy Ghost and to them, that no other burden should be laid upon them than these necessary things: "that they should abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." And the apostle Paul evidently had allusion to the Decalogue, when he wrote in 2. Cor. 3: 7: "But if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away," and in verse 11, 12, and 13, he says: "For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech; and not as Moses who put a vail over his face that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look on the end of that which was abolished."

We see, then, that the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, but after that faith is come we are no more under the law. We see also that the law which was written and engraven on stones is done away—it is abolished and superceded by that perfect law of liberty by which James says we are to be judged. Jas. 2: 12. We see then that the law of Moses was abrogated by the same power that enacted it.

The writer of said article also makes a misquotation from John 12: 48; he says, "the word that the Lord has spoken the same shall judge you in the last day." Now the passage which he quotes—or rather mis-quotes—are words spoken by Jesus and read thus: "The word that I have spoken the same shall judge you in the last day." It may be said, this makes no difference, for Jesus is the Lord, but to read the passage as quoted in said article, it would apply to the law of Moses, whereas if we read it correctly it will apply to the Gospel only.

Some make a difference between the moral law and the ceremonial law, as they term them, and contend that the Decalogue is the moral law, and is still binding; but with such I beg leave to differ, as there are many other commandments in the law of Moses which are of a moral character besides those in the Decalogue, and as the Savior has given us a perfect law, and in that morality is enjoined. I see no propriety in going back to the law of Moses to select some commandments which we do not find in the Gospel and teach the people to observe them, as though the Savior had given us a law that was still not quite perfect.

I hope that friend Carter will not take offense at my criticism, as I have done it out of love for the cause of Christ, and if I have erred it was not intentional, and I am open to conviction and am willing to be criticised in turn, if it is done in meekness and love. And though I believe friend Carter to be in error, I have also charity enough to believe that it is not willful. Let us search the Scripture prayerfully and impartially, as they are able to make us wise unto salvation.

THE FIRST DEBATE.

I believe that the first debate that ever took place on earth, was the one that was held in the Garden of Eden between Eve and the devil. The subject was "the tree of knowledge." Their speeches were short but to the point, and by the way the devil was too much for our mother Eve. Some blame her for yielding so soon, and not offering more arguments on her side of the proposition. But before going too far let us have their speeches in full, as they are recorded in Gen. 3. Furthermore we should bear in mind that of the two human beings then on earth, Eve was the weaker; while on the other hand the serpent was the most subtle beast of the field. I now give their speeches as they are given by Moses.

The Serpent's first speech. "Yea, has God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?"

Eve's first speech. We may eat of the fruit of the trees in the garden: But of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it neither shall ye touch it lest ye die.

The Serpent's second speech. Ye shall not surely die: For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and you shall be like gods, knowing good and evil.

Here the debate closed, resulting in the conversion of both Adam and Eve. It does not seem that they were at that period, well versed in the art of controversy. Many of our modern women think that they could have added arguments that would have been different for the serpent to have rebutted. We admit that the arguments on neither side was by no means exhausted. But it should be borne in mind that this was the first debate ever held on that subject, and without any preparation upon the part of Eve at all. To give satisfaction to some of our modern thinkers, supposing we allow them to continue their speeches agreeable with the modern rules of debate. We will first allow Eve to proceed and present her next speech, and then the debate will be in regular working order.

Eve's second speech. "God hath said in the day we eat thereof we shall surely die, and you say we shall not die, now then who must we believe, you or God?"

The Serpent's third speech. I said God knoweth that ye shall not die if ye eat of the fruit in the midst of the garden. And now let us look at it with a little common sense. God hath made all things for some purpose, and he made that tree and put it there, if he did not put it there for you to eat, pray tell me of what use is it in this garden?

Eve's third speech. It is true that it was put there for some useful purpose, and God made it and put it there for us to let alone, for He hath said that we should not partake of the tree in the midst of the garden, that is what it was put there for—to be let alone.

The Serpent's fourth speech. God knew all things from the beginning, and consequently knew whether you would eat the fruit or not. I now offer the following argument to prove that God knew that you would eat of that tree:—God put the tree there for some purpose, and I conclude that he knew that ye would eat of the fruit and he put it there for that very purpose, and if ye refuse to eat thereof ye oppose the purpose of God.

Eve's fourth speech. Admitting that God foreknew all things—and if I refuse to partake of the tree, don't you presume that God foreknew it? And if He put that tree there to be let alone, and knew that it would be let alone, and if I try to partake of it, don't I resist the purpose of God?

The Serpent's fifth speech. I offer another argument. If God foreknew all things, he as a consequence foreordained all things that should come to pass. Now then as a proof that he intended and decreed that you should partake of that fruit is, that He placed it there in your reach. If he decreed from all eternity that you should eat of the tree of knowledge, you must do it and cannot avoid it: and why not try it? If he decreed that you should not eat it, then you can't, and if otherwise, you must do it anyhow, or else admit that God is not all powerful.

Eve's fifth speech. Supposing I admit that God from all eternity decreed all things should be thus and so, If he decreed that I should not partake of the tree in the midst of the garden, then there is no use in me trying, and according to your logic, if He decreed that I should partake of it, and He is all powerful, and will finally make me do it anyhow, and what is the use of you bothering me with it?

The Serpent's sixth speech. I offer an argument based upon God's infinite power. God is all powerful and even if you do partake of that tree he has the power to save you, and as he is infinite in goodness he is too good to destroy you, and if he fails to save you it would prove that he is not all powerful.

Eve's sixth speech. While it is true that God is all powerful it is also a fact that he is infinite in justice; if we partake of the fruit he is too just to let us go unpunished, and if he failed to punish us for violating his laws it would then prove that he was not all powerful, for not doing what he could do.

The Serpent's seventh speech. But I have another argument based upon the infinite love of God. As God is infinite in love, it follows that he loves his children more than any earthly parent. Now then you are his children, and God loves you more than any other parent loves his children; I now leave the question with you to decide—no earthly parent for a little disobedience of that kind would be willing to cast his children out upon the world to suffer and die, for he loves them too well, but God loves you more than any earthly parent loves his children; therefore he will not punish you if you reach forth your hand and partake of the fruit of knowledge. If God would punish you under such circumstances it would prove that he is not infinite in love.

Eve's seventh speech. Very well we will try it. The devil was once an angel of light in heaven, and was certainly one of God's children, but he transgressed his laws, and became disobedient, and for that reason the Creator cast him down from heaven upon the earth. Now then if God who is infinite in love and justice did not love one of his angels in heaven too much to punish him for disobedience, do you suppose that he will love one of us here on earth too much to punish us for similar acts?

The Serpent's eighth speech. I do not think that you fully understand the subject, as there is no punishment in the future at all. All the punishment is merely present afflictions, and in the future world all will be saved irrespective of character.

Eve's eighth speech. If it be a fact that all will be saved in the future then if I don't partake of the forbidden fruit, won't I be as safe as the rest of the future beings? If all are saved irrespective of character then the devil will be saved too.

The Serpent's closing speech. But the only punishment in existence is simply a guilty conscience—you will have all the punishment in your own breast.

Eve's closing speech. If a guilty conscience is all the punishment there is in existence for disobedience, why is it that the devil when he sinned in heaven was permitted to remain there with his guilty conscience and thus be inwardly punished all the days of his life? Just this once allow me to violate the rules of debate, and in this closing speech offer you an argument predicated upon the unchangeableness of God. When Satan—the angel of light—violated the laws of God, he did not permit him to remain there and be punished with a burning conscience only, but cast him down upon the earth, and as God is unchangeable it follows that, if we violate his law, in addition to a guilty conscience he will cast us out of the garden as he turned satan from heaven.

How the thing would have went if some of our modern women had been there it is impossible to tell; one thing certain, we have plenty people in this world who bring forward just such arguments as we have credited to the serpent, and as for using them there are opportunities nearly every day. I sometimes tell people that the first Universalist preacher that ever lived, held a public discussion with our mother Eve in the garden of Eden, and came out first best.

J. H. MOORE.

[For the Pilgrim.]

SPIRITUAL.

The above is a term that occurs quite frequently in the sacred writings, and one of great importance in the Church of Christ here on earth. Men without being born of the spirit, cannot be owned as members of the body of Christ. This is as plain to the enlightened mind, as sunshine at noon. Hence we are commanded to live a spiritual life, and bring forth the fruits of the spirit.

Now on this occasion I wish to expose some error that is abroad at the present time, in regard to exhibiting spiritual works, and doing things which flow from the spiritual man or woman. I occasionally hear preachers say that, "man is not able to do one spiritual act." No, not one iota. All that man can do is natural; the spiritual the Lord does, and if we perform the natural; then the Lord will not fail to do the spiritual. There is some truth in this assertion, but if properly examined it manifests to a great extent that man is not a free agent, and the improbability of acting out the will of man, or God, of one's own accord. But it seems plain from holy Writ that it was left optional to man after the fall, and even before, to be obedient, or disobey; live a spiritual, or natural life, which after the fall could be nothing less than carnal, or sinful.

In the first place the idea is absurd and harmful, that the disciple of Christ can do nothing spiritual, being born again; begotten of God; and brought from death to life. I look at it in this light; as long as we are indulging in sin and folly, we bear the fruit of the flesh; bring forth the promptings of our corrupted minds, and in case of judgement we will be rewarded for such deeds as our own, and not the devils. Although we were possessed of evil spirits; it was our choice we made in life, to be suited and governed by those powers of hell, and since we are free agents, to decide and act for ourselves, the great Judge will reward every trespass as man's own doings. Also on the other hand if we have presented "our bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable, which is our service, then we are the servants of God, sons and daughters," heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." This shows again that we are free agents, for God wants such servants who love and serve him without compulsion, but moved by the impulses of the spirit given from heaven, as a pilot, while in this world of troubles and trials and temptation. For instance, all men shall worship God; but the Bible says, "God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Why, if we can't do a spiritual act, God demands an impossibility at our hands, since we can do no spiritual act. It seems to me that none should accuse God of such inconsistencies. God demands just that which we can do, and easily too if we are willing, which always will be so if that spiritual life has been brought into existence the Bible talks about.

Only a few thoughts on the creation. Reason tells us that man is created differently from the beasts, in regard to science and actions. All beasts are created with their natural sciences, and so born. But man is a formation without knowledge, and so born, and kept in that state until time and age permits the senses to be taught; and when the understanding has been opened, man becomes a free agent. But previous to that the Bible doctrine gives us fairly to understand that there is a natural image or body while on earth, but when this earthly house has been dissolved, the spiritual man will emerge from this clay and be transported to the world of spirits, either good or bad. Hence as above, if regenerated and inclined to serve God, we are also spiritually minded and are moved to bear spiritual fruits, as living stones build a spiritual house, an holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. I understand by spiritual sacrifices such acts of kindness, works of love to God and man, which are contrary to nature, or at least too humble for the unconverted man. For instance, to love the enemy and do good to those who hate us. Love is the fruit of the spirit. Love cannot be in the heart without any outward signs. If love is within, it will be felt and seen without, in conversation, in kind acts, and dealings with men and beasts, and the reward by a righteous judge will be "well done thou good and faithful servant."

Again, how is it when the apostle says, "Add unto your faith virtue, unto virtue knowledge, unto knowledge temperance," &c. Does he call upon God or the disciples for such addition? Plain enough that he means those spiritual men. They should conduct themselves so that they act out these graces belonging to a spiritual life.

Again, "Brethren if a man be overtaken in a fault; ye which are spiritual, rescue such a one in the spirit of meekness." Here the apostle says the brethren at Galatia are spiritual, and if so, it is natural to live such a life. The carnal man and mind is enmity against God, because it is not subject to the law of God, neither can be. Hence the spiritual man and mind is subject. And in the whole deportment of the child of God we may see the creation of God. But if we do our own will, it is then a fulfilling of nature and the evil propensities within our dying frames, and that is pure nature or natural.

WILLIAM HERTZLER.

[FOR THE PILGRIM.]

Moses and the Serpent.

"And as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." John 3: 14, 15.

Moses was born when the children of Israel were in bondage under king Pharaoh, and at the time when the decree was to destroy all the male children born unto them. But there was something about Moses' birth which suggested the idea that he was a goodly child, and for that reason was hid three months. But when that could no longer be done in safety, he was taken and placed in an ark of bulrushes prepared for his reception, and laid among the flags by river's brink; and his little sister stood afar off to witness what would become of him. Now the daughter of Pharaoh coming down to the river to wash herself, accompanied by her maidens, walking along the side of the river, saw the little ark among the flags. She sent one of her maids to fetch it to her, and when she opened it, she saw in it a Hebrew child, and the child began to weep. This aroused in her that sympathy which is so natural to the human family, and knowing the unfeeling decree of her father for its destruction, as well as all others born of Hebrew mothers, so she still had compassion on it and said, "this is one of the Hebrews' children." By this time the little sister of Moses (although he as yet had no name) drew near unto Pharaoh's daughter, perhaps trembling between fear and hope, but mustered up courage to say, "shall I go and call thee a nurse of the Hebrew women that she may raise and nurse the child for thee?" And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, "you may go." With a light step and a joyful heart she ran and called the child's mother—which was her mother also—and Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, "take this child away and nurse it for me and I will give thee thy wages." And the woman took the child and nursed it and it grew, and after a while she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her adopted son, and she called his name Moses, (an Egyptian word meaning saved from or drawn out of the water) "Because I drew him out of the water." Little did she think and less did she know, that this adopted son would in the event become the leader of his brethren, and successfully lead them out from under the hand of her father's tyrannical government and become a great nation, and a mighty power, and his name live in the minds of all good people unto the end of time. Such is the fact; God's ways are not our ways; he has his way for accomplishing his objects. He has seen proper to bring this circumstance about for delivering the children of Israel from under the hand of bondage, which he accomplished in due time, and in the wonderful manner as described in the Bible. Although this was a "rebellious and stiff-necked people," often sinning against God and rebelling against Moses their leader. God still had his watchful eye upon them, foreseeing the use he intended to make of them as a nation or a people.

Moses now takes the leadership and demands their liberty, but is refused by the powerful arm of Pharaoh. Moses begins to send plagues upon him, one after another, until at last he scourged him with death among the first born of man and beast, then he finally suffers them to go In great haste they start and soon get to the Red Sea, a barrier before them. To the right and left, mountains; behind them, Pharaoh's hosts,—for God had hardened his heart after he had let them go, so he raised his forces and followed after them to bring them back. Israel now murmers against Moses, for the dilemma that he has brought them into, but Moses says, "stand still and see the Salvation of God;" and with his rod he smites across the water, and it divides to the right and left and opens a way for them to escape out of the hands of their enemies, passing through dry shod, while the Egyptians essaying to follow them the water closed in upon them and they all perished.

Sinner, right here is a beautiful illustration. Paul says, They were all baptized unto Moses, in the cloud and in the Red sea. As Pharaoh followed the children of Israel far into the sea, so satan will follow us into the water where we receive baptism, therefore the necessity of true repentance and evangelical faith, and satan, Pharaoh-like, will have to drown. Blessed be God for the light of the Gospel.

Now they saw the salvation of God, and sang a song to Moses and to God as they stood on the other side and saw their deliverance from their enemies, and their enemies dead and floating to the shore. But their work only now began, for Canaan was on the other side of the wilderness which they had to pass through. Obstacles soon came in their way and they began to murmer against Moses and against God. They got thirsty and hungry and threatened to turn back, but their wants were supplied by Moses, through the intermediate providence of God. After a while they began to get rebellious, so much so that God sent fiery serpents among them, and the bite of them was so venomous that no remedy could be found to cure it. Then they began to cry to Moses, "take away the poisonous reptiles!" So he interceded for them, and asked the Lord in their behalf. The answer of God was, "make a fiery serpent and put it on a pole high in the air so it can be seen from all parts of the camp; so when the Israelites were bitten they were commanded to look upon the brazen serpent on the pole, and they would be healed. And it was so After seeing the mercies of God so lavishly showered upon them, we would naturally suppose they would be humbled, but not so. They would soon forget and lead out in other avenues of sin, and so they may be properly called the "stiff-necked and rebellious" race of people. And as time wore away the fulfilment of prophecies were brought about, the Son of Man was born into the world, the Gospel by Him was preached, the truth made known to man, and the plan of our salvation brought within the reach of all. This same race of people (although after they were raised to the power) caused the Son of Man to be lifted up, and he said, "If I be lifted up it will draw all men unto me." So for our good he was lifted up and we can "behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. The prophecy was made long before: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so shall the Son of Man be lifted up," and it came to pass.

Now the work that Mosesdid does not so directly point to us, but the lifting of the Son of Man does, for upon this depends our salvation, and unless we with an eye of faith look up to him, our chance for salvation will be slim. Let us not wink at the precious offers for they are worthy of our thoughts. There be no more Moseses nor any more Sons of Man to make any better offers. If we continue to be rebellious against God and against his Christ, after a while we will appear before the judgment seat of Christ to answer for the deeds done in the body, whether good or bad. If bad we will hear the sentence, "depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." And these shall go away. They shall be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God and from the glory of his power. GEO. WORST.

AN EXAMINATION.

A Divine in the former part of the age was preaching before an association of ministers, and in order to quicken their regard to the principle end and motive from which they acted, pointed them to the last and awful day of judgement. And having brought in Christ to be the judge, as taking his place on the throne, he then represented him as calling his ministers to account, and examining how they had preached, and with what views they had undertaken the ministry.

"What did you preach for?" "I preached Lord, that I might have a good living." Christ says to him, "Stand by, thou hast had thy reward."

The question is put to another, "And what did you preach for?" He answered, "Lord I was applauded as a learned man, and I preached to keep up the reputation of an excellent orator and an ingenious preacher." Christ's answer to him likewise was, "Stand thou by, thou also hast had thy reward."

The Judge puts the question to a third. "And what did thou preach for." "Lord," says he, "I neither aimed at the great things of this world, though I was thankful for the conveniences of this life which thou gavest me, nor did I preach that I might gain the character of a wit, or of a man of parts, or of a fine scholar, but I preached in compassion to souls and to please and honor of thee. My design in preaching was, Lord, that I might win souls to thee." "Come then and sit with me on my throne, as I am set down with my father on his throne. Thou hast owned me on earth, and I will own thee through all the ages of eternity."

The result was that the ministers went home resolved by the help of God they would work more, look better to their aims and ends than ever.

A PILGRIM.

OBEDIENCE.

Obedience is a virtue that crowns the glory of youth, and elevates the standard of manhood. The aged Christian, tottering along on the verge of the grave, turns a deaf ear to worldly allurements, obedient to the commands of his Savior, though Satan and his cohorts howl in derision.

Well he may, for he is near his home. For him the storms of life are nearly ended, and like the home sick mariner, contemplates a speedy visit to "long separated" friends. The young man or woman should also stand firmly by thier high sense of moral duty, regardless of surroundings. True their race seems long, their home far away; but through the dim vista of years they gaze upon the prospective city, the "New Jerusalem," coming down from God out of heaven, whose lofty spires and stately domes serve a beacon light to their weary souls. Happy the mariner who guides his frail barque thro' the troubled waters of life, with his hand ever on the rudder, and her prow immovably set on the "Celestial City of Peace." As he nears the desired "Haven of Rest," the shadows of life dwindle away, and a halo of purity surrounds his sainted countenance. He has lived an obedient life, acceptable to his maker, and he has the assurance of wearing worthily the crown of righteousness laid up in heaven for him. How is it with the disobedient, who entrusts his rudder to some honored captain, while he slumbers on his hammock through the voyage of life?

For him the the "Pillar of Fame" is allowed to supercede the spotless temple of Godliness. The "Iron Tablets of History" displaces the "Lamb's Book of Life." The sparkling robe, the glittering gem, the brilliant diamond, the precious ruby or the costly jewel, is allowed to over-rule the white mantle of holiness. Their enticing jingle is more sought after than the matchless plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord. The life-sick traveler, hardened by disobedience, is drifted against the jagged rocks of misery and woe, or if his conscience can be wholly seared, all will be allowed to rest on Satan's downy bed of ease; rocked by infernal machinery and kept in a gentle doze by the constant din and buzz of Pluto's soothing care. He is thus gently carried down the steeps of time, slumbering, unconscious, unaware, until the yawning gulf of death is glutted, and the "glimmering night stars of hell rejoice."

Beware of disobedience! This solemn warning has echoed and re-echoed throughout Christendom. All nature teaches the lasting lesson of obedience and the curse of disobedience. The broad road to ruin is lined by disobedient travelers only. The narrow road to life was never trod by disobedient man.

THE SECRET OF A CHRISTIAN LIFE.

As I learn more and more of the Christian life, I see more and more plainly how simple it is. Trust in God and obedience to an indwelling Christ is its whole secret. "We must be empty vessels, that God may fill us with himself," and being so filled, "temples of the Holy Ghost." We must be careful to listen to the inward teaching, and obey its slightest whisper. The more carefully we attend, the more easily shall we hear the voice that says to us, "This is the way walk ye in it, when we turn to the right hand and turn to the left." The life of faith is not a life of doubt and uncertainty. It is not a life of walking in darkness, but of walking in light.

If we commit ourselves to God in faith, He will do everything for us we need. His promises cover all our wants, all our desires, and they are just as truly and fully ours, as if there were no other person on earth to receive them. How strange that we need to be urged to believe the word of God. We should consider ourselves insulted if our word was doubted, and especially if our own children doubted it, and even Christians, most of them, scarcely begin to believe that these exceeding great and precious promises are for them, and that by them they may become partakers of the divine nature, and escape the corruption that is in the world.

We are weak, but the Christ abiding in us is strong. He overcame for us on Calvary, and he will not leave us in doubt and perplexity if we will yield to his guidance. We need such an indwelling Savior that our will may be in perfect harmony with his will, that our thoughts may be the promptings of the Holy Spirit, and that all our acts may be under the divine guidance.

Study the promises. See how great they are. Believe them in thier fullness, and be obedient to all the known will of God; so shall he increase you more and more.—Reaper.

PURITY OF CHARACTER.

Over the beauty of the plumb and apricot there grows a bloom and beauty more exquisite than the fruit itself; a soft, delicate flush that overspreads its blushing cheek.

Now if you strike your hand over that, and it is once gone, it is gone forever, for it never grows but once. The flower that hangs in the morning impearled with dew—arrayed with jewels—once shake it, so that the beads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dews fell lightly upon it from heaven. On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass covered with landscapes, mountains, lakes and trees, blended into a beautiful fantastic picture. Now lay your hands upon the glass and by the scratch of your finger or by the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated.

So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored; a fringe more delicate than frostwork and which, when torn and broken, will never be re-embroidered. A man who has spotted and soiled his garments in youth, though he may seek to make them white again, can never wholly do it, even were he to wash them with his tears. When a young man leaves his father's house with the blessing of his mother's tears still wet upon his forehead, if he once loses that early purity of character, it is a loss that he can never make whole again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effect cannot be eradicated, it can only be forgiven,—Selected.

Christ Our Salvation.

Remember, it is not thy hold of Christ that saves thee, it is Christ, it is not thy joy in Christ that saves thee, it is Christ; it is not thy faith in Christ, though that is the instrument; it is Christ's blood and merit. Therefore, look not so much to thy hand, with which thou art grasping Christ, as to Christ; look not to thy hope, but to Jesus, the source of thy hope; look not to thy faith, but to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of thy faith. We shall never find happiness looking at our prayers, our doings, or our feelings; it is what Jesus is, not what we are, that gives rest to our souls. If we would at once overcome Satan, and have peace with God, it must be by "looking unto Jesus." Let not thy hopes or fears come between thee and Jesus; follow hard after him, and he will never fail thee.

A REPORT is current that in spite of the Brooklyn council, Beecher's church has dropped from its roll twenty-six names of members who have for various reasons absented themselves for considerable periods. This may have been done before the council, however

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance rather than to seek for knowledge under false pretenses.

GET at the root of things. The gold mines of Scripture are not in the top soil, you must open a shaft; the precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway, their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the solidity, the veracity, the divinity of the word of God, and seek to possess with it the inward work of the Spirit.

INTERMEDIATE STATE OF THE DEAD.

But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. Rev. 20: 5.

About the condition of the dead between death and the resurrection there has many opinions obtained and some that are very antagonistical to divine revelation. The generally expressed, if not believed, opinion is, that the soul, immediately after its departure from the body, goes to its destiny, heaven or hell, forgetting that there is a judgement somewhere between the exit from the body and its final abode. We frequently hear it asserted, in the sacred desk, that a brother or sister has gone home, that they are now basking in the climes of eternal bliss, in the arms of Jesus, and many other like expressions. These declarations fall pleasantly upon the ears, especially of those who mourn for departed friends, but when we come down to solid bible facts there seems to be a lack of evidence for such doctrine. The idea to some of remaining in an unconscious state for thousands of years is so terrifying that they are willing to ignore anything and everything but an immediate transition from death to life. This is owing to a want of information in regard to the nature of an unconscious state of existence. Destroy consciousness and time is obliterated. The unconscious dead may slumber in their graves for thousands of years and on the awakening up, at the sound of the first trumpet, the intervening time will be as a moment or the twinkling of the eye, so that this dread is forever obliterated and the christian in possession of these truths can die with the same prospective hope of an immediate realization of the joys of the spirit world as those who ignore them.

Time, with the Lord is different from what it is with us—a thousand years is as one day. We must either acknowledge that the dead are in an unconscious state, "fallen asleep," or accept the idea of two heavens and two hells, an intermediate heaven, or place of rest for the sainted dead between death and the judgement and also an intermediate place of punishment for the wicked. But this idea is fatal to our text and to the judgement. "The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were finished." While the saints, dead and living, at Christ's coming or at the first resurrection, lived and enjoyed a thousand years of Millenial glory, the rest of the dead remained in an unconscious state, lived not. To them a thousand years are as one day, that is, they have no cognizance of time, they sleep, and will continue to sleep until the second resurrection or till the sounding of the last trumpet when all nations, kindreds and tongues shall come forth to the judgement. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell (the grave) which were in them, and they were judged, every man according to their works." (Rev. 20: 13.) When we understand this as a prophetic vision not of the past but of the future, what must be our conclusions in regard to the present state of the dead, if we accept the doctrine that they immediately after death, enter either a state of happiness or misery? We are forced to the conclusion that today, while countless millions are basking in the sunshine of God's love, others are suffering the tortures of hell unjudged and uncondemned, and at the day of judgment instead of saying, "the sea and the grave gave up their dead," we must substitute, "and heaven and hell gave up their living and every man was judged according to their works." In John 5: 28 we have: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming the in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." If the sainted dead are in heaven and the wicked in hell, may it not be a question to know who are these in the grave that are to hear his voice and come forth? Who are the thousands that shall be teamed forth from the sea and the millions that shall burst the bars of the grave? Shall heaven and hell, prior to the sound of the trumpet, be emptied and return to the seas and graves, reenter their moldered habitations and then come forth to judgement? However repugnant or untenable this may seem, the first position forces us to accept it. It occurs to us that it would be better for us to accept the doctrine as taught by divine revelation, "that as the tree falleth, so it lieth," that the dead fall asleep, or enter an unconscious state until awakened by the power of God.

In vindication of this position we refer the reader to the following; "But I would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (be in the way) them which are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout * * * * and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall ever be with the Lord." Thess. 4: 13—17. "Behold I show you a mystery! we shall not all sleep (die) but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twink'ing of the eye, at the last trump." 1. Cor. 15: 51, 52.

From the above and similar passages we have the followiog: The dead all sleep until the ushering in of the Milleonial dispensation or second coming of Christ. Those who fall asleep or die in Christ will then come forth. and with the living "changed" saints will reign with Christ a thousand years. These are such as have judged themselves and therefore shall not come into judgement but shall be seated, with the apostles, on twelve thrones and help judge the twelve tribes of Israel. The rest of the dead live not, or will not be resurrected until after the expiration of the thousand years. Then it is that the judgement will take place, when the seas shall give up their dead and they that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. These shall be separated as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

What part of the Christian world constitutes the saved of this judgement we shall not now venture an opinion. Our hope is and should be the hope and prayer of all, to be among those who shall have part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power.

There are several objections argued against our position. The first is, the circumstance of the rich man and Lazarus. This is generally accepted as a parable contrasting the different stations of life in time and eternity without any reference to an intermediate state.

The second is that of the thief on the cross. This is an exceptional case and does not give us any definite information either for or against our position. The theif befriended the Savior under very peculiar circumtances. When agonizing on the cross, when even the most devoted followers of Christ had forsaken him, he acknowledges him as the Christ and said, "Lord remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom." The answer was, "To-day shalt thou be in paradise with me." To grant this dying penitent a special favor would be no more out of season than was the miraculous calling of Paul.

The third is Christ's preaching to the ante-diluvians between the crucifixion and the resurrection. What was the condition of these antediluvians prior to the crucifixion we are not prepared to say, but that they were dead to all intents and purposes is a most rational conclusion as Christ through death became the life. That life, on this occasion was infused into and made manifest not only to the souls of the living, but it vibrated throughout the caverns of the dead, imprisoned about by the bars of eternal death, were awakened to receive the glad tidings of a resurrection from the dead. As the curtain here drops without giving any information in regard to their after condition the circumstance does not affect our position.

We have not given this subject any special study and therefore submit our remarks as wayside thoughts, hoping that if any of our readers have clearer views than our own we may have the pleasure of learning them.

QUERY.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, 3rd chapter, reproves them of their works and then tells them how and on what foundation to build, and says: "Every man's works shall be tried by fire, of what sort it is * * * if any mans works shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, yet he, himself, shall be saved, yet as by fire." I would like to have some light on the burning of the works and he being saved.

John H. Eshlemen.

Batavia, Iowa.

Remarks.—If we are not mistaken, this same query has been asked and answered in the Pilgrim, but we shall comply with the request and answer in as plain a manner as possible, as we understand it. The passage referred to represents a class who have works but are of such an indifferent character as to be unfit for the Master's use. Two men are employed by a master mechanic to make some furniture. Both get the same instructions, and are to have the same reward, both go to work with the determination to fill the contract. The one, by the aid of superior skill which he gained by a strict observance of the instructions given by the master under whom he learned, finishes up his work with taste and exactness and is accepted by the employer as fully meeting the contract. He not only receives the promised reward but is complimented, honored and thus earns a reputation which to him is gain. His works are not only saved from being burned but are passed or accepted with praise. The other, also completed his contract, but for want of skill, on account, perhaps, of indifference to his master's instructions while learning his trade, did it in such a bungling manner that his employer could not pass it, but because he did the best he could he gives him the promised reward and sacrifices or burns his works. Through the leniency of the employer, he receives his reward, but suffers loss in reputation. He receives no praise, no honor, and in every sense of the word, suffers loss, but he himself is saved, that is, gets rewarded for the will but not for the work. Just so it is in a spiritual sense. Christ is our master mechanic and has given us all a work to do in his vineyard or Church. He has carefully and minutely given us our instructions by both precept and example and has said, learn of Me, but some of us are such dull and stupid learners and do such bungling and unshapely work that our Master, in the great day of accounts cannot accept of it—will not be fit for the Master's use—and will be compelled to burn it, but because we done the best we could he will reward some of us, not on account of our works but because of his tender mercy. Our salvation will be as a man rescued from his burning house, the house—works—will be burned but life saved, our salvation secured yet as by fire. Our salvation will be owing to our will work, our loss, in not hearing the welcome plaudit, well done thou good and faithful servant. May God help us all to be sufficiently skillful to avoid this loss.

The Lord's Money.

The question just now to us, is not who has our money, or that of our readers, but who has the Lord's money? This may seem a strange question. Has the Lord got money? Yes, we answer. We are told that that the earth and the fullness thereof is the Lord's, or that all we are and all that we have is not our own but is lent to us by the Lord that we may use it for the furtherance of his cause and the salvation of the world. All of us who have money, little or much, have the Lord's money and to us it should be an important question as to how we are using it. Are we making such use of it as will have a tendency towards accomplishing good or redeeming the world from sin and eternal death? If ever there was a time that the Lord's money could be put out on usury, it is now. The great panic has paralyzed the business world and thousands and even millions of laborers are thrown out of employment and their little ones crying for bread, while in portions of Europe starvation is staring the masses in the face. Why should this be when the world is full of the Lord's money? These things ought not so to be, but they exist and the cause is evident. The Lord's money is wasted, lavished away to gratify sensual lusts. Only the other day we read of a bride who sported a bridal suit costing $23,000. This was money that the Lord had given to the poor laboring men, but was robbed from them by the rich in the shape of taxes and thus wasted by their daughters. Such is the policy of some of our Senators who have been wasting the Lord's money for months in parlying about the "inflation," or how to make money plenty, not so much for the sake of the laborers, as to cram their own pockets and spend it for the advancement of Satan's kingdom. Here is where the Lord's money goes. It is robbed from Him to serve the devil with. But it is still a consolation to know America has not got all the fools nor the biggest ones neither. On looking over our exchanges we noticed that, in Europe, where satan reigns in the high places, on the occasion of a great ball, a certain princess showed her graces in a suit of diamonds that cost a round million. Just across the way, India with her millions of souls, for whom Christ died, are crying and starving for bread. Is it not a burning stigma on the heads of any nation to thus foolishly and sinfully squander money when their brethren in the flesh are dying for want of it.

Dear reader, we may not be engaged in such high handed wickedness and robbery, but nevertheless we may be acting the prodigal on a smaller scale. Let us then bethink ourselves and see that we do not waste the Lord's money. If we do we will be made to suffer the consequences as he will demand his own with usury.

INFLATION.

The great question of inflation which has been exercising the minds of our financial men and congress for a considerable time, has at last been decided by the President vetoing the bill. Webster defines inflation as an expansion or increase which ends in depreciation.

If inflation, financially, admits of no other construction we suppose the President done a very wise act by sitting his foot on the move But as philosophers differ, so do financial men.

While some think it for the better, others think it for the worse. Those that have invested largely in government and other bonds are, of course, well pleased with the turn things have taken as such stock will be enhanced in value, also the prospects of monied men will be brightened in the shape of heavier interest, but what effect it may have on men of enterprise who depend largely on borrowed capital is not quite so evident. If restored financial confidence will have a tendency of putting our money on the wing, things ought to brighten up as every step made towards specia payment ought to strengthen our faith in our government. It is argued and perhaps justly too, that we have already a sufficiency of money if we could only get it into circulation. The panic was not caused because of a scarcity of money in the country but on account of it being hoarded up. Fear and lack of confidence tied it up and as a result a general stagnation of business followed. Restore this confidence and the purse strings will be unloosed, capitalists will invest and our business will revive. One dollar can serve a thousand persons just as well as one by keeping it in circulation, and will be a thousand times more service to the country than a million horded up by one man. Taking this view of it the $400,000 000, of inflation would not have benefitted the country unless it would have induced a disposition to put it in circulation which with a depreciated credit, is not likely, so that after all we can take courage and hope for the better.

THE ROME CONGREGATION.

Dear Pilgrim:—

The above embraces one of the early fields of labor of our frontier brethern of western Ohio. It is also of personal acquaintances to many of our dear traveling brethren who from time to time have made it one of their "passing ways." It primarily embraced Hancock and Wood Counties; also the western part of Seneca County. If I am correctly informed their first resident minister was Br.—Grove after the elapse of some time Br. John Brown was called to the ministry (who afterwards emigrated to Williams Co. O, where he is now elder in charge) previous to which Br. John P. Ebersole was called upon to minister in Holy Things. Finding "the harvest great and the labors few"; By Daniel Rosenberger and and Br. Krabill were called to the ministry. Thus they labored together in love; the work not making a rapid but gradual growth until the cause had so developed itself in Wood Co. that the welfare of the church there demanded a distinct congregation which was unitedly assented to by all concerned, giving them the name of Portage Congregation.

By the zealous labors of our brethern likewise did the work progress in the other part of "Rome also;" especially in the west branch were the brethern greeted by accessions from time to time, until about four years ago they united their efforts; and by the assistance of kind friends around built themselves a comfortable home in which to worship. This measure gave strength to the cause and an increase of interest with them.

Two years ago last autumn we came here (from Loudenville Congregrtion Ashland and Holmes Cos. O) inquest of a home. Making a purchase we moved our family the coming spring, since that we have occupied our house of worship at least each alternate Lord's day.

One year ago last autumn bro. Daniel Rosenberger (my father) sold his property near the old church and joined the colony in the west branch with us.

The work with us for some time has been growing into a distinct congregation; this work was completed in council on the 4th inst, where it was unanimously agreed to recognize this west branch as a distinct congregation; hence that which heretofore has been known as the West branch of Rome congregation will after this be known as the Sugar Ridge Congregation, which embraces the west part of Hancock and the east part of Putman Co. O.

These are names of the ministers and their standing in each branch. Rome. John P. Ebersole Elder in charge. John Krabill assistant Elder. Levi Dickey and Smith Second degree. Portage, George Tyson and Lewi Crow house keepers. Jonathon Witmore Sen. Jonathon Witmore of the second degree. Sugar Ridge Congagation Daniel Rosenberger Elder and your humble writer a laborer of the second degree. During the time that has thus intervented we have not been without our trouble which duty calls upon us to battle; yet the Lord has been precious to us, our number which on our arrival was some over twenty has swollen to over sixty. May the Lord yet prosper the work and thus redeem the precious souls "that stand in jeopardy every hour," is our prayer.

April 13, 1874

Brother Brumbaugh:—

We have lately met with a sad bereavement by the death of a dear son, Daniel Erastus Teeter, who died one week ago, aged 17 years, 5 months, and 7 days. And as we have many friends and relatives scattered abroad who will be anxious to know of his illness, I take this method of informing them about the same, through the columns of your valuable paper, the PILGRIM.

On Tuesday evening, March 31, '74, while he was at the barn feeding the horses, he was taken with a chill and severe pain in his head. I was not at home, I had gone to some relatives, about seven miles distant, who had a child that had died that day. I staid there and went to the funeral the next day and there I heard of my son's illness and started home immediately, and did not stay for the burial. When I reached home I found that my oldest son had went for Dr. Banton of Raymond, but did not see him, and not knowing where to find him happened to meet Dr. Ball of Waterloo and got medicine from him, which was given to him and was thought to do well. Next day Dr. Banton came and pronounced the disease lung fever, but the boy did not appear to be dangerously ill, and on Friday morning we thought he was getting better, but in the afternoon he got worse and became so bewildered that he talked a great portion of the time about work which he had done during the winter and about things past. During the following night he became still more delirious, and took several spells commencing with jerking and then striking, but always apparently in good humor. We then sent for the doctor again, he had promised to come on Saturday. When the Dr. came he wanted counsel; he said the case was a doubtful one to cure. We got Dr. Wasson, from La Porte City for counsel, they pronounced the disease congestion of the lungs and bowels. On Sunday morning we sent for Dr. Barber of Waterloo. He pronounced the disease the same as the other two, except that he said it was also congestion of the brain. Our dear son was, without a doubt, worse from the time he was first taken sick than we were aware of. He was very steady and quiet all winter, and appeared unusually fond of reading the Scripture and religious papers, and was heard frequently to pray during his illness. He knew all his acquaintances present on Sunday evening yet, and he died on Monday morning, April 6th, at about 10 minutes before 4 o'clock,

Thus it is with all mankind. We must all die. And therefore how well it would be if all people would so live as to be always ready to go when God does call them away to try the reality of another world, so that they might say with truth that they had fought the good fight, and were now ready and anxious to be with the Lord. Brethren and sisters remember us in your prayers.

DANIEL B. TEETER.

Dear Brother Brumbaugh:—The PILGRIM of April the 14th is before me, laden as usual with wholesome instructions for the Christian, and warm sympathy, and kind invitations to the sinner. Brethren can you resist these urgent appeals made by its contributors to stand by the old "Land marks which our fathers have set" We think the "Sure Foundation Stone," by brother Sayler, is very edifying and should be studied by every reader of the PILGRIM. "An Extraordinary act" by brother Flory is a train of thought worthy of the consideration of every professed follower of the Holy Nazarine. We cannot but admire the act of Mary as we do also the style of the writer in portraying it. It is indeed worthy of imitation. Then there is "Easter Day," and "Christ the Rock," by brother J. B. B., which is sublime in tone and contains endearing truths that should be treasured up in our hearts never to be forgotten. Then there is "Early Impressions," by brother J. H. Moore. This is the very thing in the right time. Brethren don't you know this to be a truth from your own experience? If you don't I do. It was one of the hardest tasks of my life to shake off early impressions, and it was only by sound speech that could not be condemned, and by applying my mind to the reading of the brethren's literature that I was able to do it, and this accomplished, by this medium, I can but feel that God has used me as an agent in bringing my father and mother and a great many relatives and friends to the fold of Christ. Then let us make every effort that lays in our power to rescue the children of men from the error of their ways and stamp upon their minds the impression of truth.

I see a call from the "Land of Boone" to come over and preach. Brethren this is the result of a visit from our little messenger, the PILGRIM, and I do believe that the little spark that is kindled there by its influence will grow into a mighty flame that will cause the hills of Old Kentucky to echo back the sound that the sons and daughters of her soil have stepped upon the sure foundation stone, the stone of truth that the Lord God laid in Zion. Brother George hold out faithful, peradventure God iwll open up a door that the messengers of truth may be sent to the rescue. And now brethren of the PILGRIM, go on in the good work that you are engaged in; the Lord knows what you are doing and in due time you will receive your reward if you faint not.

May we all be faithful to our calling is the prayer of your brother,

JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

WE MUST FOLLOW JESUS.

Dear Pilgrim:

There are some persons who fancy they have come to Jesus and are Christians, who nevertheless plainly show that they do not follow Him. They think they are converted because they remember a time when their religious feelings were much excited, a sermon or sickness, or the death of a friend aroused them to pray for mercy. They are perhaps now attentive to the outward duties of religion, but they have no more real love to God, earnestness in prayer, striving against sin, or diligent in endeavoring to glorify Christ, than before. Their only evidence of being Christians is an act of memory; not what they now are but what they think they once experienced. A very common notion prevails that salvation means nothing more than obtaining pardon, finding peace and getting to heaven. It is much more. It is deliverence from sin itself, an increasing conformity to God, and habitual enjoyment and communion with Him. Salvation is not secured once for all, after which nothing remains to be done, by undergoing a certain process called conversion, any more than submitting to a certain ceremony called baptism. We do not get to heaven as we travel by railway, having only to seat ourselves in the train which then whirls us along without any further efforts of our own. It is rather like a journey on foot, which requires continued exertion.

Who would dream that he had walked from London to Edinburg if he would stop at the end of the first mile? Or that he had climbed a mountain by merely standing at its base with one foot only on its craggy side? When Christ says, "Come unto me," He is not standing still, but leading sinners up to God. If then we go to Him but refuse to go forward with Him we are left behind. True conversion is the first link, but not the chain; the title-page, but not the book; without the sequel it is worthless and ridiculous. Salvation involves a constant reliance on Christ and a continuance in well-doing. We must keep near Him as he leads His people onward to purity and bliss. We must follow Him as well as come to Him; and we may be sure we have not truly come to him, for salvation is following Jesus. If we do not follow Jesus we are not disciples of Jesus, we are not saved. He said, "If any man will serve me, let him follow me" John 12: 26. "If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 16: 24. "My sheep hear my voice and I know them and they follow me." John 10: 27. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." John 8: 31.

SUSAN E. BISHOP.

Dear Pilgrim:—

As church news is solicited, I take my pen to respond. According to previous special arrangments, the church met to-day at the Church House near Mexico to investigate an existing difficulty. By request the following Brethren were present E'ds. Samuel Murry, Jacob Metzger, and Abraham Shepler, and also Benj. Neff.

In due time the case was called up taken into considera ion and adjusted in, so satisfactoy a manner as to reclaim two old members to the joy of all present. After that the church retired to the river bank where prayer was want to be made, and four more names were enrolled in the Lamb's book of life by them being buried with Christ in baptism, and rising with him to walk in the newness of life.

Thus you will see the ask of the Lord is still moving on but still there is room, and again we would rejoice to see still more leave the beggerly elements of this world and join in with the overtures of mercy before it is forever too late.

And Oh children heed your parents, heed their prayers heed their entreaties, they are able to teach you. Then de-pise not their instructions, for their teaching will do you good Obey your parents and love and obey God

Editors Pilgrim:—

I have not yet received information as to the definite arrangement with the Chespeake & Ohio R. R. for persons coming over the same to attend our Annual meeting, but enough to say, half-fare arrangements will be granted, pay full fare going to Cincinnati and return free to point started from, Will give information more definite as soon as possible.

I expect, no preventing providence, to be at A. M. Brethren or others that wish to come with me on my return can do so at reduced rates. Truly yours. J. S. FLORY.

INFORMATION WANTED.

To Bro. P. S. Myers, of McVeytown Pa.

Will you please explain, or answer the following questions:

1. What do you mean, in PILGRIM No. 14, in current Vol., by the expression "The churches form the A. M., and not the A. M. the churches?" I did not know that the A. M. ever interfered with the boundaries, or other matters pertaining to the organization of congregations.

2. Do you intend to have the District Meetings continued as at present? If so, why send any delegates from the D. M. to the A. M.? That will be giving the congregation from which the delegate is sent by the D. M. three members in A. M. while others only have two.

3. How shall questions be decided by that body?

4. Who will select a person, or persons to make or write the "report" of the proceedings?

Railroad Privileges.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

John U. Parsons General ticket agent of the Toledo Wabash G. W. R. R. Company informs me that they will sell "regular tickets from all stations on this rail way to Springfield for German Baptist Conferance and accept certificate for return fare."

Brethren may take the cars at any time or at any station "pay full fare and ask no questions." Those who receive certificates may have to pay for the printing of them, that will be all.

Now that reduced fare has been granted on the Pittsburgh and Ft. Wayne road our Toledo and Wabash road is perhaps the best route for our Eastern brethren to reach Annual Meeting. S. M. MINNICH.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BRO. J. H. MOORE talks of steering westward. His object is to get him a homo and disseminate the true Gospel light. Brother Moore's love and zeal for Christ will oe felt wherever he goes.

WHILE cities and towns have had their long revivals the country communities were not so favorably circumstanced. A western brother informs us that he cannot remember a winter so unfavorable to protracted religious efforts on account of bad weather.

ELD J. S. FLORY of Colorado fame seems to be quite hopeful of planting a church in the "far-off land." May success crown all his efforts to plant the cros of Christ throughout the new Territory. The PILGRIM is making its way among them, and we hope the time may soon come that it may go there by the scores.

BRO. CHAS. M. GROVES of Wilmoth W. Va. says: "I have been reading the productions of the brethren through the PILGRIM and have been very much encouraged by them, and hope they will not withhold anything that may be of service to us weak and unworthy creatures who are trying to serve the Lord in our weak way.

A report is current that in spite of the Brooklyn council, Beecher's church has dropped from its roll twenty-six names of members who have for various reasons absented themselves for considerable periods This may have been done before the council, however.

OUR old and much esteemed Bro. Peter Nead in the last Vindicator pitches against schools and education generally. Bro Peter is quite liberally educated and wrote a work on Theology. Theological books are the result of theological schools. We wonder where our good brother got his education, in the school of Christ or some other school.

The Methodists of England have 7,000 churches valued at $60,000,000, gold; 1,300 ministers, and 35,000 local preachers, and between 300,000 and 400,000 church members. Upwards of 1,000,000 persons attend their ministry, 600,000 children attend their Sunday-schools, and 120,000 attend their day schools and other educational institutions.

AN over zealous brother in the west joined his efforts with those of a number of other different religionists in conducting a revival on the new converting system. As a result he got for his share of the spoil some ten or eleven converts, but soon some of them flew the track and if we are not mistaken, some more will Such religion will not stick. "In this I praise you not."

FROM our different correspondents we are informed that the weather up to this time, as a general thing is unfavorable to spring work. The wheat, in many localities, has suffered from late freezing, yet the prospects are fair for a good crop if the weather should now set in to be favorable. Unless late frosts should follow, the fruit crop may be large.

Evangelical Protestantism in Italy may be summed up as follows: 1. The Waldensian church, with 0,000 communicants, 1,200 children in Sabbath-schools, and a Theological college at Florence. 2. "The Union of the Free Christian of Italy," with Gavazzi as a prominent leader, numbering about 30 congregations, and 1,000 communicants. 3. The "Christian churches of Italy," numbering about the same as the Free Church. 4. The Methodist church, with 21 stations, 550 Sabbath-school scholars, and 900 church members.

FROM the Companion we learn that the Brethren of Cheat River, Preston Co., W. Va., have been making protracted efforts to win souls to Christ and as a result of their labors, 29 were added to the church during their meetings.

At Huntington Ind., April 5, 14 were baptized, and over 60 united with the church in less than a year, and at Ogdens Creek Church, Ind., 13 were baptized. "Let him that heareth, say, come and whosoever will, let him come and partake of the water of Life freely."

TO OUR TOWN SUBSCRIBERS.—On account of a change in carriers some of our subscribers may not be served, and others may have missed some of the numbers.—In either case we would be glad to be apprised of it and will be pleased to make such corrections as will insure the paper to all who have subscribed. If any should get it who have not subscribed, they will confer a favor by letting us know it as we do not wish to send to any but actual subscribers. We promised to send a Pilgrim Almanac free to each subscriber. These we did not send but all who wish them can be supplied by calling at the office or sending for them.

J. H. Fishel of Fairpoint Kansas says, "We have a very nice country out here. If any of the brethren are in search for homes, I think they can suit themselves here yet. There is plenty of land to be taken, or land improved can be bought cheap on account of hard times.

There are no Brethren in this locality to my knowledge except myself and wife. If any contemplate coming West they can have all particulars by writing to me. This township had no setlers until late last fall. Now I think there are about 20 and still more coming. We can see nine or ten houses from ours. We intend starting a Sunday-school in a private house as soon as completed, for the benefit of the young and old. Meetings are not very frequent yet, having no house for that purpose We contemplate building a school house this fall and then we will be better prepared to preach to the people the Gospel once delivered to the saints in its purity Pray for us brethren that we are not overcome by the adversary of souls.

Bro. J. ... Moore of Urbana, Ill., says

Allow me to congratulate you on the admirable manner of conducting the PILGRIM. It ceases to be a project or experiment, it is a success. It, however, remains to be seen to what degree of perfection it may yet attain. Let your motto ever be "Onward and upward. Your columns headed "General Items," "Miscellaneous," &c. are just what one half of the papers in the world needs. I read them the first thing. The more of it the better Here you can state short facts, current news, &c., that every reader of the paper is sure to read — Think of these things.

You are improving somewhat in your typography. I have frequently been tempted to give your proof reader a gent's outfit especially for getting a part of one of my late articles upsidedown, but we are all liable to make mistakes, and where there is a fault there is also, room for improvement.

My last work is going off quite rapidly, the expression of the reader so far is, "It is just the thing." My object is to defend the general doctrine of the Bible without stooping to the conflicting theories and speculations of modern theology. I do not think that I will likely publish my other works this coming Summer, but labor to replenish my finances all I can. I have been greatly neglecting that department the three last years.

I did not preach as much the last winter as usual, as my situation required my attention at home most of the time. I, however, did a great deal of writing and reading; collecting material for my books. My works on the "Origin of Single Immersion" and "One Baptism," required a great deal of labor. The last named will be an ingenious and interesting work for those who love to read debates.

This leaves us all well, and the members are also enjoying good health.

MARRIED.

HAYS—GIFFEN.—By the undersigned, on the 7th of April, brother Austin Hays to Miss Rachel Giffen, All of East Conemaugh. STEFAEN HILDEBRAND.

DIED.

ROBERTS.—Of the same place, on the 20, ult., Brother William Roberts, aged 33 years 7 months and 20 days.
STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

BURGER.—In the Liberty church, Jefferson Co., Iowa, on Jan. 12th 1874, brother Abraham Burger, aged 75 years 2 months, lacking one day. Funeral by Peter Lutz. (Companion please copy.)

HORNER.—In the Conemaugh congregation, Cambria Co., Pa., Apr. 16th 1874, Sister Barbara Horner, aged 66 years, 3 months and 16 days.

RUSSEL.—Also in the same Church, Apr. 18th, 1874, of typhoid Pneumonia, Bro. James Russel, aged 47 years, 4 months, and 14 days. Funeral services by Eld. M. Workman and J. Workman, from Job 19: 25, 26. He leaves a wife and three daughters and one son to mourn their loss, but we hope their loss will be his gain. DAVID BRUBAKER.

IHRIG.—Near Wooster, Wayne Co., O., April 13th, 1873, Calvin, son of P. S. and Elizabeth Irig, and grandson of Jonathan Kurtz and his departed wife Magdalena, aged 4 years, 2 months and 14 days. Funeral services by Rev. I. N. Kiffer and brother E. L. Yoder, on the words "I shall go to him but he shall not return to me."

This was a peculiar case. The child remained as helpless as when it was born but grew in form and somewhat in mind, never enjoyed health. It was often looked for his end and at last went to rest when all around him was quiet and asleep, out of his father's arms here on earth, he went into a Savior's arms who blessed little children and said, let them come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of Heaven. May we all be so happy as to meet him in the Paradise of God.

BACHTEL.—March 3, '74, at his residence in McComb Co., Ohio, Andrew Bachtel.

He was born in Bedford Co., Pa., Aug. 21, 1803. For many years he was a minister among the Menonnites, but of late years held membership with no church, but expressed a desire to unite with the Brethren. He passed away however leaving his purposes unfulfilled. Funeral services by the brethren from the words, "Set thy house in order for thou shalt die and not live."

SMITH.—Near South English, Keokuk Co., Iowa, April 19th, '74, James Wesly, youngest son of Bro. Wm. and sister Elizabeth Smith, aged 1 year, 5 months, and 3 days. Disease, measles and whooping cough. The occasion improved by the brethren, from Heb. 13: 14.

Thus another plant has been removed from the family nursery to the fair clime of heaven; another added to the happy throng; another glorifying spirit joined to the celestial choir. Cease to mourn, dear ones. Let sweet melody vibrate into your drooping souls. Look up and follow on, and ere long you shall meet on that beautiful shore in that sweet by-and-by.
(Companion, please copy.)

BOWMAN.—In the Loudenville Church Ashland Co., Ohio, March 29th, 1874, of consumption, Bro. William, son of friend John and Elizabeth Bowman, aged 22 years, 9 months, and 4 days. Funeral services by Eld. M. Workman, J. Workman and the writer, from Rev. 14: 12, 13.

The subject of this notice was a bright young man, but like many others, neglected the one thing needful while in health. He has been afflicted for some two years. About six months before his death he became alarmed about the salvation of his soul, when he called for the Brethren and requested to be baptized. Though he was very weak he was placed in a carriage, taken to the water, then placed in a chair, carried into the stream and baptized in presence of many witnesses. He stood it well and went home rejoicing in the Lord for his mercy. Some time after, a few of the brethren and sisters met with brother Bowman, at his parents residence, and held a lovefeast with our beloved brother. He was anointed in the name of the Lord. He bore his afflictions with much patience and died in the hope of immortal bliss. To his young friends we would say; take heed, be ye also ready for the Lord has called.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP.

"Golden head so lowly bending,
Little feet so white and bare,
Dewy eyes, half shut, half opened,
Lisping out her evening prayer.

"Well she knows when she is saying,
'Now I lay me down to sleep,'
'Tis to God that she is praying—
Praying him her soul to keep.

"Half-asleep, and murmuring faintly
'If I should die before I wake,'
Tiny fingers clasped so saintly,
'I pray the Lord my soul to take.'

"O the rapture, sweet, unbroken,
Of the soul who wrote that prayer!
Children's myriad voices floating
Up to heaven, record it there.

"If, of all that has been written,
I could choose what might be mine,
It should be that child,s petition,
Rising to the throne divine."

While the muffled bells were ringing,
'Earth to earth, and dust to dust,'
My free soul, on faith depending—
Faith, and love, and perfect trust—

"Would approach Him, humbly praying
(All the little ones around)— [ing.]
'Jesus, Savior, take Thy servant!
Give to her Thy children's crown."

How Tender Grapes Are Spoiled.

First little fox—"I can't." Some of you have formed the habit, when an act of self-denial is required of you—some errand for father or mother—of saying "I can't." Beware of this little fox.

Second little fox—"Not just now." When you are deeply interested in a story and it is school-time, you have said," not just now," "Pretty soon," "In a minute or two." How much good do you destroy? Beware of this little fox.

Third little fox—"It wasn't me." When you laugh in the school-room everybody says, "It wasn't me," or when a ball has gone through the school-room window, everybody says, "It wasn't me." It is the best way to say, I had something to do with that." Beware of this little fox.

Fourth little fox.—"I can't help it." A little boy has a wretched temper, and he says, "I can't help it." He has heard grown people say it. A little girl always trips and falls, or is always knocking something off the table, and says, I can't help it." When the French army was in danger of being defeated by the Austrians, a French bugler got into the rear of the Austrian army in the early mist of the morning and sounded a retreat, and the whole army fell back, and the French were saved. Be wise like this French bugler, and conquer your temper, or you will get to be a coward and unable to stand up before your duties and perform them.

Fifth little fox—"I don't care." Many boys and girls by constantly saying get into habits of not caring. One little thistle seed floating in the air, if allowed to take root in the earth, will produce thousands of others. A man had a great many servants, and in order to test them he put a great stone in the middle of the road. Twenty passed by without trying to remove it. At last one came up who said it ought not to be there, and with great efforts removed it, and found hidden underneath a purse of gold to reward him for his carefulness. So you will lose the esteem of others, the greatest prize you can win, if you do not drive away this little fox.

Praying Better Than Stealing.

Some poor families lived near a large wood-wharf. In some one of the cabins was a man who, when he was sober, took pretty good care of his family; but the public house would get his earnings, and then they suffered. In consequence of a drunken frolic he fell sick. The cold crept into his cabin, and but one stick was left in his cellar.

One night he called his eldest boy, JOHN, to the bedside and whispered something in his ear.

"Can't do it," said JOHN, aloud.

"Can't—why not?" asked his father, angrily.

"Because I learned it at the Sabbath-school, 'Thou shalt not steal,' "answered JOHN.

"And did you not learn, 'Mind your parents,' too?"

"Yes, father," answered the boy

"Well, then, mind and do what I tell you."

The boy did not know how to argue with his father, for his father wanted him to go in the night and steal some sticks from the wood-wharf; so JOHN said to his father:

"I can pray to-night for some wood; it's better than stealing, I know,"

And when he crept up into the loft where his straw bed was' he did go to God in prayer. He prayed the Lord's Prayer, which the Sabbath school teachers taught him, only he put something in about the wood, for he knew 'God would give wood as well as "daily bread."

The next noon, when he came home from school, what do you think he caught sight of, the first thing after turning the corner? A load of wood before the door, his door. Yes there it was. His mother told him the overseers of the poor sent it; but he did not know who they were. He believed it was God; and so it was.—The Christian to Work.

Value Of The Morning Hours.

Tom Jones was a little fellow, and not so quick to learn as some boys; but no one in class could beat him in his lessons. He rarely missed in geography, never in spelling, and his arithmetic was always correctly done; as for reading no one improved like him. The scholars were fairly angry at him sometimes he out did them so constantly.

"Why Tom, where do you learn your lessons? You don't study in school like the other boys"

"I rise in the morning, and study an hour before breakfast;" answered Tom.

Ah! that is it. "The morning has gold in its mouth."

There is a little garden near us, which is the prettiest and most fruitful spot in the neigborhood. The earliest radishes, peas, strawberries, potatoes, grow there. It supplies the family with vegetables, besides some for market. If any body wants flowers, the garden furnishes the sweetest roses, pinks, and "all sorts" without number.

The soil we used to think, poor and rocky, besides being exposed to the north winds; and the owner is at his business all day, yet he never hires any one to dig or to weed for him.

"How do you make so much out of your little garden?" he was once asked

"I give my mornings to it," he answered; "and I don't know which is the most benefited by my work, my garden or I."

God is the God of love—Christianity is a religion of love. Jesus Christ was an incarnation of love. He was love, living, breathing, speaking amongst men. His birth was the nativity of love; his sermons, the word of love; his miracles, the wonders of love; his tears, the melting of love; his crucifixion, the agonies of love; his death, the sacrifice of love; and his resurrection, the triumph of love.

The Ministry we Need. By S. Sweetser. Published by the American Tract Society 239 Washington Street Boston: Hurd & Houghton 13 Astor Place N Y

This is a neatly bound volume of 124 pages filled with reading of great importance, embracing subjects of rare interest especially to our ministers and teachers. The following are the opening chapters: "The Work," "Confidence in the Truth," "The Love of Christ." Good-will to Men," "Enduring Hardness," &c. We have perused its pages with interest and profit and believe that thousands more might do the same.

The Christian Sabbath Vindicated and the Sabbath in its political aspect. By Ignotus. Philadelphia, Claxton, Remsen, and Haffelfinger, Publishers.

At this time, when the Sabbath question is being discussed through our columns, we look with pleasure towards any source which will throw a beam of light on the subject. With this feeling we opened the above named volume expecting that important revelations would be made. In this we were not altogether disappointed as the arguments as far as they pertain to the subject are good and have weight, but, as the saying runs, the author did not bone his subject, but ran wild dabbling into themes quite foreign to the title and intent of the work and also of revelation. The whole argument might have been put in one-fifth of the volume and done credit to the author by omitting some twenty-three chapters for another volume bearing a different title, such as the "Public policy of Zerchoum," "Meditations of Angels," "Reasons for the humble birth of Christ." "Political import of baptism," &c., &c.

The Phrenological Journal and Life Illustrated for May must suit all classes of readers, so diversified is its reading matter. Beginning with an appreciative sketch of Charles Summer—a portrait accompanying—the large pages are filled with other interesting subjects, viz: Conversations about Faces, or running analyses of several distinguished characters; Horse Physiognomy, with illustrations; Are troubles blessings in disguise?—a Southern lady's opinion of affairs down South; Charity, True and False—a practical hint for the times of scarcity; The Lathi and Teutonic Races—an elaborate and learned article on the causes of modern German growth; A visit to Pompeii—a pleasing recital of an incident of travel; How to Govern and Train Children—the mother who reads the JOURNAL will be grateful for this; Yale metaphysics—a sharp and logical consideration of Dr. Porter's strictures on Phrenology; A real Gentleman—everybody should read it; Life in the Deep Sea—an elegant bit of composition; Sir Barthe Frere, the African Commissioner, ect., ect. Price 30 cents; $3, a year. Address S. R. Wells, New York.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times Women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with trouble of the breast, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy going and indifferent doctors, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder; and while they are thus only able perhaps to palliate for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and other complications made, and which a proper medicine directed to the cause would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort instead of prolonged misery.

From Miss Lorinda E. St. Clair, Shade Athens Co., O., Oct., 14th, 1872:

"Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me. I am better already than I have been for over two years."

From Ella A. Schater, Zanesville, Ind. Aug. 8, 1872:

"Dr. Pierce,—I received the medicine you sent me and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment I feel better than I have for three years."

From Mrs. John K. Hamblin, Odell, Ill., March 19, 1872:

"Dr Pierce—The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am very thankful for."

PEACE BE STILL.

BY WESLY.

See the maddened waters, raging
Lash the shores of Galilee;
Wind and wave in war engaging,
On the dark Tiberian Sea.

See the vessell swiftly flying
Toward the debris covered shore;
Hear the frightened sailors crying,
'Mid the tempest's awful roar.

Now each heart to grace a stranger
Breathes a prayer on pallid lips;
But one cries amid the danger,
"Is not Jesus in the ship?

Yea HE slumbers on HIS pillow,
Nothing daunted, though the breath
Of the tempest, strew the billow
With the countless seeds of death.

Now his followers gather near him,
As the waves in fury rage;
For they know that devils fear him,
Can He not the storm assuage?

See He rises from his slumber,
Whilst the waves the vessel fill,
And rebukes the ocean's thunder
With a whispered, "Peace be still."

What a calm prevades the ocean,
It is harmless as a rill,
Not a breath to wake its motion,
Since the mandate "Peace be still."

Oh! that Jesus' love may ever
Each disciple's besom fill,
When we near death's angry river,
May He whisper, "Peace be still."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

PLAINNESS OF SPEECH.

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." Isaiah 58: 1.

Some very good people, who, no doubt would be greatly shocked should any one question their reverent regard for the teachings of the sacred Scriptures, seem, nevertheless, to have become wise above much of what is written in them, in the way of admonition and warning as regards certain great sins, especially sins of the flesh. They seem to think in these days of super-refinement, when in the gay world of fashion, it is customary to gloss over with delicate phrases, evils which, when called by their true name, become hideous and revolting, that it is hardly allowable to speak out plainly and use the good old Saxon language when we would denounce vice and warn against its deplorable consequences. Such persons seem to think that those who, either from the pulpit or through the press, would rebuke vice must do so in language tame and pointless, and in terms indefinite and obscure, lest some one should consider the rebuke personal or its terms indelicate. Now all such over-sensitive people show, in our judgement, a very imperfect appreciation of the value and potency of the Divine method of dealing with vice and all manner of wrong-doing. We pride that all the worthy line of prophets, evangelists and apostles, who spoke by inspiration, employed no uncertain language, but rather great plainness of speech, when they rebuked the vices and crimes of those to whom these words were first addressed. "Cry aloud and faint not;" seemed to have been the watchword. When Nathan had his plain talk with king David he left his majesty in no doubt whatever as to what was meant and who was meant. "Thou art the man," left no room for misconstruction. And we find the Bible ever deals with vice and sins of every degree, plain direct language is always used, language that a wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot misunderstand. Is there not a lesson here that it would do well to heed? Are there not thousands of young and inexperienced persons falling daily into the traps set by evil-doers who lie in wait to deceive, and who ply their arts with increased success because many of their hapless victims have never been fairly warned and plainly told of their danger? It was a wise provision in the old Church economy which called for the continual reading, in the hearing of all the people, of many portions of the Old Testament Scriptures that are now seldom heard read in many bodies of Christian people, as for example, such Scriptures as the sixth and seventh chapters of Proverbs, where there is a plainness and directness in the warnings and admonitions against vice, which some good people would seem now to regard as rather lacking in delicacy and refinement. Sins that are most sharply and in the plainest terms pointed out and reprobated in the sacred Scriptures—sins which sap the very foundation of the social order, degrade humanity below the brute creation, and poison the springs of moral life, many persons now seem to think should never be mentioned either in the pulpit or in the press. It is indelicate, say these prudish people to mention such matters in any stronger language than the social evil. Beyond this there must be a profound silence observed to all such plague spots. We may discuss without stint sanitary questions, and call for the removal of that which promotes merely phisycal evils, but when we come to moral evils, to the existence of the houses of those who, in the rather strong language of the Scripture, are the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death, we must be very, very cautious. We must be just the opposite of plain and outspoken. Now we venture to think differently, and believe firmly that it is our duty as journalists to denounce and expose vice, especially vice of the most pernicious character, in language which can admit of no misconstruction. In a word we are the advocate of plainness of speech in regard to the great evils to which we are now calling public attention. And in this we have no doubt that we will have the approval and support of every worthy citizen."

So speaks Charles C. Fulton, editor and proprietor of the "Baltimore American and Commercial Advertiser." And although no religious paper, yet he lays hold on all grades of vice and immorality with such vigor and plainness of speech, that the guilty ones cannot misunderstand. The American never gives an uncertain sound, and a certain class of evil-doers dread falling into the criticism of the editor of the American more than all the preachers combined, and I feel well assured that he excites a greater moral influence than the whole city pulpit. These well established truths have suggested to my mind the propriety of plain preaching, and plain dealing in our dear brotherhood against evils, innovations, and departures from the gospel as understood, believed, as observed by the ancient and general Brotherhood. It is a fact painfully true that there is a kind of preaching, and dealing with certain grades of departures from the simplicity that is in Christ, very aptly termed by some, "milk and water preaching." Milk and water mixed is neither milk nor water, so I infer that those who employ the term, mean to say, that the preaching is neither pure gospel, nor pure world, but a mixture of both. Brethren are these things so? If so, how stands our account with the Master when he will come to his house to reckon with his servants with whom he has left the house with authority, and every man his work?

My dear brethren, we all know that there is a painful departure, in perhaps all of our churches from the simplicity that is in Christ in the article of dress, and why is it so? Simply because of this compromising religion with the world. I am now 33 years in the ministry of the word, and I tell you brethren there has a great change set in since. But what is the preacher to do? Parents stand up against him, accusing him of strenious and meddlesome in such minor things, and it is not as such and such things would be &c., as if one evil was to balance the other, and so square the account. This class of parents constantly affirm that a little gayety in dress in young people does no harm, and it will all get right, &c. Now to all such I will use plainness of speech and tell them what I do know about it. And that is, first, it draws the children from the love and society of the brethren and the services of the church, and attaches them to such whose fashions they follow. Thirty years ago when preachers were over night with the brethren, and that often occured, for parents would urge them to come, urging in justification for their demand, we have children grown &c. &c. All on such occasions were together, children would hear the brethren talk to, and pray for them. Many, very many, were the tears shed on such occasions both by parents and children. But since fashion prevails in the Brethren's houses, how, O how is it now? It is no uncommon thing for brethren and parents to spend the evening in one room without seeing the children who are with their gay fashionable associates merry-making in the parlor in the other end of the house. Let one case at hand suffice. I in company with another ministering brother spent the night with one of this character of families. We four occupied the dining room, adjoining it was the parlor in which the daughters were enjoying their Roman Catholic society; a door led from the dining room to the parlor and when the father requested prayer, we requested that the parlor door be opened. "O no!" said the mother, "that would so insult the girls that they would never forgive me." I however opened the door and stood in it awhile to let them know who did the deed, so that it they had any curses to dispense they might know upon whom to bestow them; they however came in and bowed with us in prayer. I need only add that these parents have no children in the Church, and judging according to appearances they never will have, though they have Catholic sons-in-law.

Another. Sometime ago I preached for the brethren in their county town in an adjoining State, and observing a sister whose features I recognized seated in the rear of the house with a peculiar head-dress; a "milk and water" hat, or bonnet surely, for it was mixed with world and religion, about three fourths world and one fourth religion, and indeed was in fashion with neither. After meeting I was standing on the street corner for the conveyance to come up to convey me on, while thus waiting she came along, and giving me the hand of fellowship she said, "Father Sayler I suppose you don't know me." "Yes I do, I recognized you in church." "Oh I suppose you find fault with my bonnet, but you must bear with me, you must make some allowance for me." &c. "Sister why do you think I find fault with your bonnet? Did your conscience tell you that?" "Yes, but you must make some allowance for me." "Why make allowance for you? Did God deliver two sets of services, or systems for salvation, one for you and one for others?" "Yes but you must make some allowance, I must accommodate." "Who do you accommodate, the world or the church, who do you serve, God or the devil? You cannot serve both, one or the other is your master." Yes but you must allow me— At this stage the conveyance came up and we parted.

Remained over night with a family in which parents and children love and serve God. To this family I repeated this dialogue, and from them learned the reasons why this sister thinks certain allowances must be made in her favor. The circumstances are as follows: She lives a mile or so from town, and between the two is located a college and seminary, where they manufacture Lutheren preachers &c. The mother, this sister, (the father opposed it) will have her daughters to suit the taste and fancy of the students, and of course fashionable dressing enters largely into the programme, three married students, one at least a Lutheren preacher. This one however before marriage felt that she ought to be a sister and requested one of the ministering brethren to have her case attended too, but at the same time she felt that she ought to reveal the state of her mind to her intended husband. He promptly replied that that could not be, if you unite with that Church I cannot marry you, and that was the last of her religion. Now this mother, after accomplishing all her desires in that direction, claims allowance because she must accommodate, not God and the brethren, but her Lutheren sons-in-law.

My dear brethren, these may be considered extreme cases, but it is just where this world compromising principle in the Church leads to. The Savior says, "Iniquity abound, and the love of many will wax cold." Yes brethren, so cold that we may even claim exemption from religious duties, and family discipline, because we have compromised with the world, and have sacrificed our children to the Moloch of fashion and pride. And to such an extent has this thing gone that the preacher who does open his mouth in plain and unmistakeable language against it, he will very soon have empty seats to preach to.

Another degrading, and degenerating evil exists around us in would-be professed religious circles. The child of Valentine Cook, christened and called THE MOURNERS, OR ANXIOUS BENCH. The advocates of this idolatry teach the people that the only way to religion is through its process, and many are made to believe this monstrous falsehood, among whom are found even Brethren's children; while all close observers know that every time a person is ground in this mill they generally come out worse than before. If it be a woman she adds a flounce and a ribbon—if not downright debauchery. If a man, a bottle of rum is taken along to the picnic &c., &c. But so notorious has this thing become, that to speak of it in plain and unmistakable language brings curses down on the head of the daring preacher. Even parents will say "Preach the Gospel, and let such little matters alone." These are like those Mr. Fulton says we ought only to speak of that grade of vice, he so vigorously attacked as the social evil. He however wishes these to know that he thinks differently, and will speak in language that will admit of no misconstruction. So brethren let us do with an undivided and unbroken point; and that which remains may, and will be strengthened, but if not there is great danger of one candle-stick being removed.

D. P. SAYLER.

"GO YE INTO ALL WORLD."

The above is a text much used in our periodicals of late and some find much fault with the Church in not doing her duty in evangelizing the world. I am not an apologist for the Church in not having done what might have been done. If amiss in her duty, it is so just in proportion as her members are amiss in their duties individually. But just here I wish to say that we should not put more stress on any passage of Scripture than really was intended. We must understand the text in a qualified sense. The Savior did not mean the persons to whom he delivered the message should themselves go into all and every region of the world and that they should teach every individual person. But as he said "the Kingdom of heaven is at hand" and all men press into it, we understand in this expression that all had the privilege of setting the bond free, male, female, Jew and Gentile. So with "go ye into all the world," privilege is now granted to go into all the world and teach all nations The disciples did not get into all the wide world yet we cannot say they failed in their duty. The Church has not yet been instrumental in carrying the Gospel in its purity to all the world, yet it is not good policy to be upbraiding the Church for her failure in duty. When we look back and see what has been accomplished in a proud world, in a fast age with a doctrine so averse to the carnal and proud mind, we have to say blessed be God for his blessings upon the labors of our brethren and the prosperity of Zion. We admit more might be done to advance the Master's Kingdom than is done, but we want to call attention to a few things before we launch with broad sails into the missionary seas. First, we want the fountain pure or the stream cannot be pure. We do not question the purity of our plan of salvation as it emated from our Lord, but looking at the visible church as the fountain from whence influences go forth and teachers are sent, it is essential we hold it forth to the world a doctrine in harmony with the Gospel, and our teachers be students of Christ's school. Our brethren at Annual Council labor and faithfully too to neutralize opposing elements and harmonize our faith and practice to the principles of the Gospel that we may have one mind to the one body, as respects the divine scheme of redemption and the adopting principles belonging to the same. After the faithful labors of our brethren are over we have criticisms, something like this: "The great question of carrying the Gospel to the whole world was laid aside, and matters of no importance taken up and the time spent upon them."

To this we will say, "from little acorns giant oaks grow," and if the questions termed by some, "of no importance" are not attended to, step by step they lead to matters of such magnitude that our nationality, as the people of God, will be lost and we drift out into the stream of popular religion. If we cannot maintain the purity of the Church and her heaven-ordained principles at home, it is not wise to devise means to carry our principles with their defects to the world at large. We are often cited to the success of other denominations abroad. In the main they teach doctrines not fully in harmony with the Gospel. Unless we can send forth a doctrine that will harmonize with the teachings of our Savior, and men who bear the marks of a crucified Redeemer in their bodies—whose lives are expressive of the characteristics of the life of Jesus, we had better send none. We believe our desire for the conversion of the world is as strong as it need or can be, and we are willing in our limited capacity to work to that end, but we want a genuine true conversion—a conversion to God and not a conversion merely to some worldly religion that make momentary sanctified saints, while hours and days are spent bowing at the shrine of worldly idolatry. We have too much of that now. Pride with a presumptuous hand is robbing the Church of that important outward evidence of the principles of non-conformity to the world. Where that evidence is wanting we fear it has shallow root in the heart, and if lacking in the heart, conversion to God after the order of the Gospel is lacking. Unless the peculiar principles of the Church are enforced, maintained and respected, we need not concern ourselves about the missionary cause, others are doing enough to convert the world to a religion without a cross.

But what we do want is our principles enforced and carried out in practice, the Church kept free from innovations, and every effort possible put forth to spread the Gospel in its purity to the world. We are pledged to our God and to the Church, and to our conscience to do what we can for a maintenance and perpetuation of our cherished principles—the principles of our fathers, from the fact that they so beautifully harmonize with the Gospel of peace. We may be well spoken of, but it is better, much better, for us to suffer than for the truth to suffer if we can help it. Now we venture the prediction that if we all throughout the Brotherhood will crucify self entirely and, compromise our opinions upon the basis of the Church rules and regulations such as we know they were when we united with the Church and thus have peace at home—in the Church—and work in one concert of action, soon, very soon the Gospel of peace will wing its way over distant lands and enfold within its blessed embrace, thousands upon thousands as golden sheaves for our Heavenly Father's use. Union and prosperity at home will insure prosperity abroad. J. S. FLORY.

REPENTANCE.

Repent every one of you.—Acts 2 : 38.

Having investigated the term faith and showed the difference between Assenting and Saving faith, the next link in order is that of Repentance. The definition of the term repentance is sorrow for any thing done or said, the pain or grief which a person experiences in consequence of the injury or inconvenience produced by his own conduct. Repentance is also the giving up of any practice upon the conviction on the part of the penitent that such practice is an offence to God. In theology repentance is distinguished by Evangelical and Legal. The latter usually called repentance simply, is real penitence, sorrow or deep contrition for sin as an offence and dishonor to God; a violation of his holy law and the basest ingratitude toward a being of infinite benevolence. This may exist, without a reformation of life. It is termed a legal repentance in order to distinguish it from evangelical repentance. This legal Repentance is always accompanied by this assenting to dead faith, while Evangelical Repentance is accompanied with saving faith made perfect with works. Legal repentance is that feeling and terror that exists in man called fear being excited by the terrors of legal penalties. It is that emotion in man produced and excited through the fear of punishment not accompanied by that love that casteth out fear. It may exist with us as long as life shall last unless we banish it from us and implant in its stead pure evangelical repentance, which is an abandonment of sin, a turning unto God, living a new life, hating the things that we once loved and loving the things that we once hated; having that perfect love that casteth out fear, consecrating our lives unto God, with a total disrelish for any thing that would dishonor or displease him. This is evangelical from the fact that it converts or changes the mind from sin unto God. The other is legal or in other words, adjuncts of repentance, and not Repentance itself, but is so closely connected with it that it is hard to show the distinguishing line. We as a body of believers, believe that evangelical repentance consists in turning from sin. This of course is accompanied with sorrow that we have displeased God, which sorrow arises from the fact of our knowledge of sin; this godly sorrow not being repentance with in its self, but only the adjunct or flower of it, this flower may wither and leave no sign that it ever existed. But when the flower produces fruit, which fruit is a turning from sin, this is repentance and brings salvation not be repented of. "This salvation is Christ." Luke 2: 30.

Is repentance then essential to salvation? Looking at it in this light we are bound to acknowledge that it is. It eminated from God and was commanded by the "Horn of salvation that God raised up," (Matt. 3 : 2.) Jesus who obtained all power in Heaven and in earth (Matt. 28 : 18) and stamped his own divine power upon it. "Except ye repent ye shall all in like manner perish." (Luke 13.) "Repent ye therefore and be converted that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshings shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts 3: 19. Such is the characteristics of repentance. It is of such a character that we cannot lawfully approach God without it. May the good Lord help us to so frame our minds that we may be awakened out of sleep before it is everlastingly too late. "Come unto me," is an injunction of our Savior. Matt. 12. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the House of God, and the first begin with us, what will be the end of those that obey not the Gospel, and if the righteous scarcely be saved where will the sinner and the ungodly appear. 1 Peter 2. "He will not stand with the righteous, therefore he will not stand in heaven." 1st. Psalm. "For he will thoroughly purge his floor, gather the wheat into his garner, but burn the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. 3. From the above we see at a glance that repentance is essential to salvation from the fact that it is commanded by the highest power known to man, even by Jesus Christ, the Son of God. Take heed to the way, draw nigh to your God and he will draw nigh to you. May the good Lord assist you in so doing, is my prayer. In our next we will notice the ordinance of Baptism and the office it is intended to fulfill. Yours in love. JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH.

We must take heed how we govern the church of God. Our Lord usually called the Church "the kingdom of God," and "the kingdom of heaven;" and he has not been less careful in providing for its government, than for its enlargement. The scriptures afford all necessary instruction on the subject. On this point a responsibility as weighty as eternity rests upon the Church. Her official members are made stewards of their Master's house. To them has he commited his treasures, to them has he given a charge to feed, instruct, and correct his children and he will not fail to avenge the wrongs practiced upon them. If we say our Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to beat our fellow servants, he will come at a time when we look not for him; and he has informed us that we may expect no mercy at his hand. We have, therefore, no less need of caution in this particular than in those already noticed. It should be impressed upon the mind of every member of the Church, whose duty it is to judge in the Church, that he take heed how he acts in the discharge of their duty. On this subject our attention is called to a number of particulars.

1. We should be faithful in noticing what may be considered small deviations from the Christian character. Custom may have removed the reproach from some sins, and they may be termed trifling offences; but custom can never sanctify sin, or make that right which is wrong, nor can a perseverance in what is wrong ever bring our Lord to consent to it. We are not willing to resign the small pecuniary claims we hold against those with whom we have dealings, nor allow our property to be purloined in small articles, or pass unnoticed small insults upon our persons, or slight aspersion upon our characters. When, then, should we be less particular with the interest and honor of our Divine Master, when they are committed to our care? God has said, "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him." Lev. 19: 17. The scriptures are a sufficient standard by which we may determine what is proper to be allowed in the Church. These little unnoticed foxes spoil the tendervines of the Church. They characterize the worldling, proffessor of Christianity. Our own faults may not be urged as a reason for indulging others in theirs. This would be a mutual encouragement to sin, and a kind of mutual assurance against its consequences. Mutal faithfulness will promote the general health and the increase of the Church.

2. In the government of the Church we must be prompt. Faults should be noticed as soon as they are known. They are not likely to correct themselves, but will increase in strength and number by letting them pass unnoticed. If a sin be considered trifling, and a solitary individual only be concerned in it, if connived at, it will probaly become general, until, by its long continuance and the numbers implicated, it becomes hopeless to attempt a correction. In this manner have all the corruptions of Christianity obtained there standing in the Church. And thus the honor of religion, and the reputation of the Church, materialy suffer, and perhaps the unfortunate member perishes. It is therefore needful that the remedy be applied as soon as the disease appears.

3. We should be impartial in the government of the Church.

No person should be privileged to do wrong. In this particular we are exceedingly liable to err. It is difficult to reprove the faults of those whose friendship is needful to us or whose relations are numerous and honorable, or whose age and former usefulness entitle them to our particular regard.

We may fear that a faithful course in such cases, will result in the withdrawal of pecuniary assistance, or in family disaffection. But whatever may be the consequence, we must not forget the admonition, to "know no man after the flesh." The members of the church have equal right to justice. Although this equal administration of discipline may sometimes be painful, the health and prosperity of the church requires it. To permit a faulty member to live in such a manner as to impoverish his own soul, and bring it to ruin, is a wrong method of manifesting our kind feelings, either for him or his connection. It is well known that persons in such circumstances do not wish to be reproved; but our covenant engagements binds us to do it; and if we neglect it, we shall incur the displeasure of our Master.

The faithfulnes of the prophet Nathan with king David. 2nd Sam. 12: 7—14; Micaiah with Ahab, 1 Kings 22, 17—21, and John the Baptist with Herod are noble examples of Christian duty. "Open rebuke is better than secret love." And,

4th We must be meek, spiritual, and scriptual in the discipline of the church. "Brethren if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; consider thyself, lest thou also be tempted"—Gal. 6: 1. Too unkind or overbearing in such cases, would be the direct way to harden and disaffect the unfortunate brother. The object to be had in view in all our labors of this kind, should be to "gain our brother." And we should be scriptual in what we do. There has been many discipline makers, and many rules have been made for what offences and in what manner we shall deal with our delinquent brethren. But not much credit is due to those who have affected to be wise above what is written. The rules the scriptures give will be found in the end, to be the best calculated to affect the desired object. We assume an awful responsibility when we depart from them. There are but few, comparatively, who are invulnerable to acts of kindness and to a tender Christian solicitude. We must also be unwearied in our efforts to reclaim a wandering brother—not less so than when we attend on a brother who may be sinking under a literal sickness. In this case, if the first or second dose of medicine prescribed for him has not the desired effect, we do not abandon him, to fall a prey to his disease; but persevere in our efforts while life remains. And should we be less patient and persevering in saving a son from hell, than we are in restoring a body to health? Certainly not. And "he that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

James 5: 20. E. H. ROSENBERGER.

Hints To Young Ministers.

Your prayers and promises, your baptism, your election to the ministry, and all other legal forms to which you have submitted, considered formally, are all very well indeed as far as they go.

The severe trials success, and the great rewards all follow these outward signs or ceremonies, if you are faithful.

"The servant is not greater than his Lord." If the right way for your Master to be made perfect, was through sufferings, then it is the right way for you to approach perfection. If you want to approach the greatness of Paul, you must expect and endure perils. You are not fit to have an important trust in the gospel ship untill you have seen her approach, encounter and escape from great storms, dangers, and enemies.

You are much better qualified to fill any position in the church after you have by reason of perils wished yourself out of the church and dead, and have repented again and again, than you were before.

Do not be discouraged or astonished when you get into perils among false brethern. The Christian world is yet comparatively speaking in its infancy, and every thing outside of it is gross darkness. The period when "all shall know the Lord" is yet, comparatively speaking, far distant. Almost the whole world lies in wickedness. It is cold and selfish. Hypocracy and self righteousness predominate in almost every nook and corner of it. Highly educated beasts abound, while good saintly loving men are few. Therefore do thou "the work of an evangelist." "Make full proof of thy ministry." Do not think when you are able to preach three, four, or a half dozen good sermons that you have finished the work.

See well to the real wants of your congregation. For this purpose you will study human nature as a physician studies anatomy. But what would you think of a physician who is obliged to go home and consult his books every time before he knows what to do for his patient, or of one who has all his life despised medical and all other schools, finding his way into a hospital with a pair of saddle bags full of many different kinds of medicines, throwing it around among the sick by hand fulls telling them that the medicine is all good,— to help themselves, and that so much science and system and study about it was all a humbug! Therefore give attendance to reading. Do not read merely to obey the command as an external form of righteousness without life or spirit. The best text book for your purpose is the Bible. It is the foundation upon which you must build if you are successful in the end. To you it must be the book of books now and forever. There are other books which you should, read but two or three careful perusals of them should be sufficient to give you all the knowledge you need of the subjects of which they treat. You should lay them on the shelf as you did your primer. Not so with the Bible, you must refer to it and draw supplies from it as long as you live. Therefore read it carefully and thoughtfully to the end of your life. J. B. GARVER.

SECRET PRAYER.

In various ways did the Savior set forth the importance of prayer. He did so by the form which he composed; by the example of prayer which he exhibited; by the miracles in answer to prayer which he performed; by the promises concerning prayer which he gave; by the instructions on the subject of prayer which he delivered; and by the precepts regarding prayer which he enjoined.

Of those precepts, one of the most important is contained in these words: "But thou when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." This is a precept the neglect of which cannot fail to lead to the most serious consequences. To live in the habitual disregard of the special exercises to which it relates is altogether incompatible with true piety; and to attend to it in an irregular and perfunctory manner, clearly indicates the want of spiritual mindedness.

Matthew Henry well said that "apostasy from God begins at the closet door." In view of the truth of this observation, how earnestly should the Christian guard against slighting this gracious command of the Redeemer! Let the consideration of all that is solemn in departing from the living God; all that is ruinous in making shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience, constrain us, whatever we neglect, to attend with all diligence to the closet of secret prayer.

All deeply pious persons have much private intercourse with God; the closet is to them a hallowed place, a Bethel to their souls, a spot which they find, like Jacob of old, to be none other than the house of God and the gate of Heaven. It is a Tabor where spiritual transformations are realized; where we are changed from glory to glory by the spirit of God.

Christian, resolve to prize thy closet more, and to frequent it oftener. It is only thus that thou wilt become a follower of those who, through faith and patience, shall finally inherit the promises. They found the advantage of drawing nigh to their Heavenly Father, and, if thou wilt imitate their example, thou shalt not go unrewarded. The benefits will be great and numerous. "Thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." Remembering this promise,

> "Go when the morning shineth,
> Go when the moon is bright,
> Go when the the eve declineth,
> Go in the hush of night.
> Go with pure mind and feeling,
> Fling earthly thought away,
> And in thy closet kneeling,
> Do thou in secret pray."

SPRING.—Spring has come again—the resurrection morn of nature has burst upon the world—all things animate and inanimate seem to be praising God, our soul in accents of sweetest joy would whisper, "Blessed be God," that we are what we are with a hope through Jesus' blood we shall in the resurrection morn come forth to meet the rising throng.—J. S. Flory

Higher and higher rises the current of "popular religion," the surging billows wash around the "Rock of Ages" but impregnable are her bulwarks—stand dear one, upon that foundation—cling to the cross and then thou shalt go up higher; let go and soon the sweeping flood will bear thee away to the great abyss of ruin!—J. S. Flory.

Peace does not dwell in outward things but within the soul; we may preserve it in the bitterest pain, if our will remains firm and submissve. Peace in this life springs from acquiescence not in an exemption from suffering.—Fenelon.

OUR TRIP.

As our position seems to make our attendance at A. Conference necessary we have concluded to take advantage of the opportunities afforded and go on out through Iowa and Nebraska. Since we have come to this conclusion, the time is too short to make any arrangments for either visiting or preaching, however, if at all we can make it practicable, we shall stop off by the way at such places as will be convenient, If we can determine on any special points by the way, we will drop a note to such persons as we may think will be most likely to get it. We expect our brother George Brumbaugh to accompany us. We will start between the 15th and 18th of May, and pass over Pittsburg and Ft. Wayne road to Chicago and from there over the Burlington and Mo. road to Ft. Kearney, Neb. Our principle object in making this trip will be to see the country, therefore if we stop our stay will be necessarily short.

OUR ABSENCE.

On account of attending our District and Annual Conferences we shall not be able to give the Pilgrim much personal care for several weeks, but as we expect to take our pen along and keep our eyes open, we feel assured that our readers will not lose any thing by our absence. Whatever may be for the general interest of our readers we shall try to gather up even to the crumbs. During these meetings we shall be pleased to meet our patrons and friends who have labored so faithfully for us, and where misunderstandings or mistakes have in any way occurred, they can then and there be corrected. While in the flesh we are all subject to err but if we possess the spirit of Christ, we will apprise each other of our faults and thus be reconciled.

A SUGGESTION.

As a number of our agents and readers expect to meet with us at the Annual Conference and there settle accounts, we make the following suggestion: Make out a list of all the names and their addresses, that you intend to pay us for. This you can can give to us which will save us any further trouble and enable us, on our return to give credit to the proper persons. We will be pleased to attend to as much such business as the circumstances may demand, but can not take our books along. So none need expect us to know how accounts stand unless they have a knowledge of it themselves. Hoping that the above suggestion will be duly considered we shall endeavor to oblige a swell as be obliged.

CHURCH SLEEPING.

Some think that in Church, during the time that the sermon is being delivered, is a most charming time to to take a good nap. The singing kind of sedafies the worshipping spirit, and by the time the sermon gets fairly opened the eyes are nearly closed, and where could a better place be found to sleep than right in the Church? It is so inviting, so invigorating and at the same time so safe, for surely Satan would not think of entering so holy a place as the sanctuary. Is it possible that any one professing the name of Christ can reason thus, or is it because they allow their drowsy feelings to overcome their better judgment?

The devil would have us all sleep, and nothing would please him so well as to catch a whole congregation snoozing. He first goes to the drowsy saint and whispers in his ear, "all is well," it don't matter whether you hear what is said or not, the object of preaching is to save sinners, there are plenty such in the house and it is for them that the sermon is intended and you may just as well while away a little time in sleeping as not. The sleepy saint drops his head, and while the poor minister is exerting every power to reach the soul of saint and sinner, passes the precious time in oblivious sleep. Satan, having thus far accomplished his purpose; he next approaches the minister. See, over yonder! Are not the saints commanded to pray for the minister that the word may have free course? But behold they sleep! Why thus labor and be concerned while others equally interested are not only unconcerned, but really sleep while you try to preach! The poor servant feels the mist of doubt gathering around him, his zeal fags and he wades through the remainder of his sermon as if he were all alone. He then goes to the sinner and points him to the sleeping professsor, and gently whispers, "no use, no use!" Why be alarmed while those who profess to be the children of God sleep while the "bread of life" is being delivered. Surely there can be nothing in it or they would not miss such a feast of pretended richness. Why strive to gain a thing that is so little relished by those who have it? Thus it goes. The members sleep because they feel sleepy and don't care to hear. The minister cannot preach because his brethren and sisters are sleeping and therefore are not praying for him, and sinners are not converted because they feel that none care to have them saved.

Brethren and sisters, think of things before it may be too late. Remember, you have a work to do and an influence to exert. For this God holds you responsible. It is not only our duty to attend church and remain awake but to hear and pray that others may hear and be benefited thereby.

A SABBATH AT HOME.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

On last Saturday evening we hurried to the station to take the train for James Creek, it being the time for services in the meeting-house on Sabbath, but to our surprise we were about two minutes too late, as the iron horse was yet in sight, but slowwending its way onward. The result was one passenger left behind and a disappointed one too, as we auticipated a joyful season with our brethren and sisters in the sanctuary on Sabbath morning. This was one of the little disappointments of this life, and upon mature reflection, we considered it a very small one indeed compared with those which we have met, and most likely will meet yet in this life. It was all because we neglected to get ready at the proper time, and this brought to mind the great disappointment of those who do not get ready to meet Jesus while he may be found. What must be the extent of the disappointment of those who loiter away all the time allotted to them for this purpose, and Jesus calling loudly, come! come! Oh, come! and yet they indifferently linger until it is finally too late. Jesus ceases to knock at the door of the heart, and then after a while the poor soul becomes awakened from his drowsy, sleeping condition, and findeth his beloved has "withdrawn himself." He is gone, yes, gone forever. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended and I am not saved." This is a disappointment of which none greater can be realized, and the thought of this should arouse every unconverted soul to action. Dear reader get ready, the hour of death is approaching and how soon is unknown. This little incident will serve to make this a motto for ourself in the future and after our return to our studio, long did we muse upon this theme, "get ready." Soon we will be to pass the dark Jordan of death and then we hope to be ready to go with Jesus who will gently lead us over and land us on the sunny banks of eternal deliverance.

SABBATH MORNING

is here. What a beautiful morning! The sun in all its splendor illuminates and warms the now apparently inanimate earth; but soon its genial rays will give warmth and life to that which is apparently dead, and there will be a general resurrection demonstrating the power and wisdom of God. Then with Cowper we will exclaim,

"How sweet to muse on His skill displayed,
Infinite skill! in all that He has made;
To trace in Nature's most minute design,
The signature of a power divine."

This beautiful morning we think too of the many devout Christians who are now wending their way towards the house of God. In the rural life the Christian father has called early the sleeping family, the morning hymn is sung, a chapter is read, prayer is offered, the morning meal is eaten, and then away, over the hills and through the valleys to some distant church, there to worship God in His holy sanctuary. We imagine we see many of God's children on their way to church at this hour with hearts warm with the love of God. Then too, the prayers, the sighs and the groans that will ascend to God this day from the millions of worshippers, all over this land of ours. Are they all meaningless? Nay, "The prayers of the righteous availeth much," and what a vast amount of strength the cause of Christ this day must receive. The subjects of His kingdom are strengthened, sinners are converted and new soldiers are enlisted to fight under the "blood-stained banner of Immanuel. This is a thought that is pleasing and tends to buoy up the soldier of the cross. But then again, when we think of the deception, the pride, the vain mockery extant in the world there is a dark picture, and this is a theme we do not wish to think of now. The church bells are ringing and we mean to at the Baptist church. The Rev. Mr. Hooter the pastor, is a very pleasant and sociable man, and an earnest worker in the cause he advocates. Services were opened by singing the good old hymn,

ATTEND SERVICES

"Nearer my God to Thee"

and then after prayer the following text was read: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."—Ps. 133. The subject, "Christian Unity." The speaker had time to notice only a few points in the great subject, which was done in a very intelligible manner. He noticed first in what Christian unity consisted; 2. the basis on which it must be formed; 3. the evils resulting from the lack of unity in Christian effort, and lastly the beauty of Christian unity. He endeavored to show to the younger portion of the church, in a very plain and pointed manner, the reason why they practiced close communion. The main idea was, as they believed that the immersion of a believer in water only constituted baptism, and as it is acknowledged that baptism precedes the communion, therefore they could not consistently invite those who were sprinkled to their communion. A man's actions should always correspond with his faith, and that we thought a very fair view of the matter. The only true basis upon which true Christian unity can be established, he said, was upon God's word, and upon this all men ought to be united. This is certainly so. The Scriptures teach it in unmistakable language. Hence the apostle in writing to the Corinthians says, "I beseech you brethren by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joned together in the same mind and judgment." In the main the discourse was a good one, and should. have made some good impressions After the sermon, the communion which they term the Lord's Supper was administered. Of course they do not believe in feet-washing, or they would certainly practice it. Is it not one of the doctrines of the Bible and should not all men agree upon it? And then too, where in the Bible is the communion called the Lord's Supper? A bit of bread and a sip of wine, at the middle of the day does not look much like a supper, nor do we believe that Christ ever intended it to be called a supper. But enough of this at present. We are sorry that we cannot agree with our Baptist friends from a gospel basis on these points. We however cherish a very kind feeling towards them, and indeed toward all the different denominations. But while this is so we shall endeavor to prove all things by the infallible guide and hold fast only to to that which is good. Whosoever will come down to the plain teachings of the Bible with a mind willing to comply with them all, we are willing to accept as our brother and our sister. This we claim to be infallibly safe for Christ says, "I came not to judge the world, but the words which I speak the same shall judge you in the last day."

On Sabbath eve, we went to the Methodist church, but as we did not know the time when services commenced, we were too late to hear the text and get the main idea of the subject. We were there only in time to hear several reasons why the wicked are permitted to live. Thus ended the Sabbath day at home. J. J. B.

Letter To Sister Crouse, W. Va.

My Dear Sister:—

Yours in a late number of the PILGRIM to me was perused with much pleasure and was pleased to know I still have a place in your remembrance, and that you are zealous in the good cause of our Master. I will try and pen you a few lines hoping it may be of some interest to the readers of PILGRIM, more especially to my many friends scattered over the East and West. You say you often think of us since we left there. My mind often goes back there where I spent some years with the dear members of the Church and formed such tender ties that I hope shall never be broken, though now far separated, yet memory's chain is unbroken and you all are dear to me. It was indeed hard to part from you all, but circumstances were such that I willingly came to this territory with my husband and children, hoping all will be for the best in the end. We have had a very successful trip out and I can say I like it better here than I expected I should. We have neighbors all around us who are kind and sociable.

Have taken a claim and built a house close by the rail road, and near the banks of the Platte River; have a fine views of the valley up and down.

The most I missed when we first came was the privilege of going to preaching and meeting with the dear members. But now we are having that privilige as there has over 20 members of the Church came here since we did, and we have public preaching regular at our own house and soon will have at other places. The brethern are now making arrangments to put up a house in which to have preaching. We expect other members to move in soon.

Some of my relations and old acquaintances has moved here. You know I use to spend many lonesome days while my husband was away preaching to the needy and inquiring souls, which I was willing he should do for the sake of Jesus and a perishing world. But here when he is from home I have plenty of company, we have several here boarding with us.

We all have enjoyed good health since we have been here untill the measels was brought into the family by a family from Illinois, stopping a few days with us. All my children had them at once except Mary A. who is staying in Greely. After they were all about well the three youngest caught cold and had a relapse and were very bad but thanks to God all are about well again

I was glad to hear that the church with you is getting along in love.—How glad we are to hear such news and we hope dear sister you will give your influences always for peace, love, and union in the Church and thus be an encouragement to your dear companion who is set as a watchman on the walls of Zion, also it will encourage more of your dear children to come to the church of God. We know by experience ministers wives have crosses to bear that others know nothing about, but let us endure all things through the grace of God and hope for a reward in the world to come. To you and all the dear ones. I can say, I hope the Lord will bless you all and that you all will be faithful until death. My love to all. Your sisters in the bonds of love.

ELIZABETH FLORY.

P. S.

I am sorry our friends heard such a false report about the Indians out here and that they molested us. We don't have any fears at all. I have not seen any Indians here yet.

Dear Pilgrim:—

This cold Sabbath morning I am deprived of going to church, the roads being bad and my health not being very good, I concluded to stay at home and spend my time in composing a few lines for the PILGRIM. I do not however expect to edify any one much with what I can say or do. I have not written any thing for the paper since the new year has come in, but I think it will do yet as every day is new to us. When the old day is past we have new duties to perform and thanks to our heavenly Father for keeping us alive that we might prepare ourselves for heaven. There I think, will be no old year days; no, one eternal day with God and those that will be permitted to dwell with him. But what will be the condition of those that will be driven from God where they have to take up their abode in lamentation and weeping. No new year to change their condition. Awful thought! No change for the wicked. I think if there are any in that gulf of despair, if they could have one cheering promise from God that they would be released from their punishment, next new year by obeying him, forsaking their sins and following him, there would be nothing that God would require of them that they would not do if they could be released from their punishment. No I think that they would fall before the Lord and worship him both day and night. But that cannot be. He has given offers of mercy and salvation which in the world, after death, their will be no change. The righteous will go to the right hand of God, and the wicked to the left hand. There will be a separation between the wicked and the righteous. It may often be said why are you so particular about every little thing, but I think when we appear before the Judge of all the world, then those little things will appear big.

A few words to the careless and unconcerned sinners. How can you feel happy while living without hope and without God in the world, trampling upon forbidden paths of sin and folly? O! can you, can you, live away from your God when he is so willing and ready to save you, standing with outstretched arms willing to receive you. Oh, turn sinner, turn from your wicked ways while mercy's door is standing open to let sinners in; but if mercy's door once is closed against you, you may stand and knock but no entrance can be given to the wicked. Awful thought to those that stay away and come too late. I hope there will be some one who will read this that will give themselves to the Lord. Pray for me

NANCY WISE.

Scenery. Hill. Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Brother Samuel Garber came here the last of December and preached a few sermons for us. The weather then became very cold and as other ministers were expected soon, the brethren concluded to discontinue the meetings for the present. We think brother Garber did his duty in warning sinners to flee the wrath to come, and teaching them what is that true and acceptable will of God, by which they might gain an entrance into the region of eternal bliss. As we were disappointed in the other ministers the above is the only preaching we had the past winter besides our regular appointments. On April 25, the Brethren assembled at the house of our Elder J. S. Snyder to transact such business as might come before the Church. Among other business was the following: One fallen member received; resolved to hold our lovefeast on the 6th and 7th of June, and a choice made for a Speaker and Deacon. The lot fell upon brother Michael Herman for Speaker, and Abram O. Diehl for Deacon. May the Lord give them grace to perform the work whereunto they have been called. Brethren Jacob Brower and Benjamin Flory were with us at the above named meeting and preached for us the day following to a large congregation assembled at our school house. May the Lord bless their labors. How pleasant to set under the sound of the Gospel. It is a sweet, though faint foretaste of Heaven, that new Jerusalem the city of God, that place of which is written "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Then my dear brethren gird on the whole armor of God and go forth fighting the battles of the Lord, and we shall become more than conquerors through Him that loved us and enter in through the gates into the sunny clime of happy deliverance. From your young brother in Christ. S. C. MILLER.

More About The Sabbath.

Dear Pilgrim:—

It does seem that there has been enough written concerning the Sabbath but still I feel like casting in my mite if it will have any tendency to adjust the matter.

Br. Moore (I think) opened the fire and we heartily agree with his position but there are some that do not.

I do not wish to be understood as accusing any of ignorrance but it does seem to me that the parties do not properly understand each other.

It appears that there are two days discussed and one meant. I do not understand Br. Moore to say that the Sabbath was ever changed, but sets forth the Christian Sabbath.

Now that the Lord God rested on the seventh day and that the Jewish Sabbath according to the law is on Saturday is a conceded fact, hence we do not obey or observe the Jewish Sabbath.

Why? Because Christ was the end of the law. Lo I come to do thy will O God. He taketh away the first that he may establish the second.

"Old things have passed away and all things have become new." Hence we observe that Christ came to fulfill the law not to destroy it. To illustrate: If we have made a contract we are expected to fulfill it, but I opine that we are not apt to fulfill it but once, and then when it is fulfilled, it at once becomes null and void and we are not held to it any longer. Christ did necessarily have to destroy the law, to make it void into us, but when it was fulfilled that was the end of it to us. Hence we find ourselves under the gospel. But if we are to obey the Jewish Sabbath why not obey the law in other particulars such as sacrificing &c. Then inasmuch as Christ was the end of the law, and gave us the gospel. he naturally gave us another day. And he rose on the first day of the week, and on that day the appostles assembled. On that day we concluded to celebrate the rising of the Lord and Master as the apostles did,—devote the first day to the Lord in place of the last and work the remaining six.

Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

INFORMATION WANTED.

In a letter from Bro. John Beechly, I am directed to go to A. M. from Columbus by way of Dayton and Cincinnati, by the Cincinnati, Hamilton, & Dayton R. R., from Cincinnati by the Mississippi & Ohio R. R. to St. Louis, from there by the Chicago & Alton R. R. to meeting. And according to the distances Bro. Beechly named it is 22 miles shorter than the published distance from Baltimore to St. Louis. This however is not the line Bro. J. H. Moore published in PILGRIM No. 17. Perhaps brother Beechly named the above line because I had made St. Louis a point in my letter to him.

It is proper that the Eastern Brethren should be well informed on this subject so that they can take the shortest and cheapest line. The published distance from Baltimore to St. Louis is 968 miles, and the fare at this date, April 27th, is $23, and I think it is the cheapest line. Going by Indianapolis certainly must add to the distance. It is 704 miles from Baltimore to Indianapolis, and from there to meeting seems like a long distance. And as brother Davy says that the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne, & Chicago R. R. will take and return persons to A. M. for four cents per mile, I think all who can conveniently reach the B. & O. R. R. should avoid that line, as four cents per mile is but a fraction less than full fare charged by the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. The distance from Baltimore to Columbus is 509 miles, and the full fare is $13.50, but a fraction above 2½ cents per mile. Local fare may be a shade higher.

In my report of arrangements with the B. & O. R. R. I requested the brethren West to designate a line from Columbus to meeting. This should have been done, and all who come by that road be directed to go by that line. Now it appears that two lines are designated. Which of the two shall we take? The shortest and cheapest we want. Let us know before we go. The arrangements made and published by Bro. Davy and also J. H. Moore to connect my arangements at Columbus to Indianapolis over the Pan Handle R. R. is impracticable to Eastern brethren. Bro. Davy says that all must procure tickets from him in advance. This is not understood and is too inconvenient to comply with. Procuring a ticket, implies paying for it, and how can this be done? We from the East having a long distance to go, had better buy the cheapest fare through, and return the best way we can to Columbus, and from there home I expect no trouble. D. P. SAYLER.

OUR ANTEITAM LETTER

{ WAYNESBORO, PA.
{ May 6, 1871.

Our Lovefeast will be held (D. V.) on the 3rd of June at the Antietam meeting house (Price's) Franklin Co., Pa., 2 miles north of Waynesboro.

On the evening of May 1st. brother Leonard Furry and brother Samuel A. Moore, of Bedford Co., visited this Church and remained until the morning of the 4th, and then went on their way to the Marsh Creek Church, en route for our Annual District meeting in York Co. They preached the word boldly and persuasively to saint and sinner, endeavoring to excite us to an appreciation of our profession of godliness, and a closer walk with our Father. O that we would put into practice the good counsels we hear so frequently. But we are prone to forget some duties, and live too much after the vain customs of "this present evil world." Dear brethren you will have the thanks of all the faithful in Christ wherever you go, for straight-forward, plain, pointed preaching of the self-denying Gospel of Christ.

It was gratifying to meet these dear brethren with whom we became acquainted when we were Assistant Editor of the Companion in 1869, and hear them preaching the same primitive doctrine of saving grace. Brethren, we trust you may be moved to come this way again ere long. May our Father comfort us all, and help us to "purify our souls in obeying the truth" in pure faith and abiding charity. Unworthily,

D. B. MENTZER

Railroad Items.—Important.

The following directions are intended for those who wish to attend the A. M. from the east, and avail themselves of the railroad arrangements that center at Indianapolis.—Let all those from the east make for this point that you may avail yourselves of the half-fare arrangements that I have made between this place and Bloomington.

Aim to be in Indianapolis very early on Saturday morning, May 23d. The train, for the west, will leave this place at 3: 50 a. m. and pass through Crawfordsville 6: 09, Danville 8: 00, Urbana 9: 25, and arrive at Bloomington 11: 50. Here you will lay over a few hours and then take the South bound train on the Chicago & Alton R. R. and arrive at Annual meeting the same evening about 6 o'clock. The fare from Indianapolis is about six dollars, and at the meeting I will give you a ticket that will return you free. (These tickets will cost you about 5 or 10 cts. each, just enough to pay me for making the arrangements.) Pay full fare going, say nothing to the agent about it, as they know nothing of it. Those who wish to do so, can also, make their way to the A. M. in good time, by leaving Indianapolis at 3: 50 on Monday morning May 5 These directions are not intended for those who wish to pass over this road to meeting before the above mentioned time. They can go when they please and at the meeting they will get their return tickets.

At Bloomington you will pay full fare to the A. M. and at the meeting receive your return ticket. I will aim to meet the train in Urbana at 9: 25 on Saturday morning, May 23. Those who order the Railroad map will have no difficulty in keeping this route. Observe the above directions in connection with my former article and you will get through all right.

Mail Management.

Editors Pilgrim:—

Please announce to the Brotherhood through the PILGRIM, that all mail matter coming to parties during the Annual Meeting should be directed in care of C. C. Gibson, Girard, Macoupin Co., Ill. it will then be delivered to the owner at the meeting. DANIEL VANIMAN, Corresponding Sec. Virden, Macoupin Co., Ill.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Presbyterians are now about raising funds to erect a chapel in West Huntingdon for Sabbath school purposes and lectures.

As the Lovefeasts are now being held in the different churches, we hope soon to have reports. Some one in every church should give a report of the meeting. These reports need not be lengthy. Be short and to the point. Let us hear from all.

W. H. BAILY of Raliegh, W. Va. says, "To the many brethren who are waiting for appointments from me, I would say, I am now suffering from a fall that I had sometime ago and in consequence, had to cease preaching for the present and perhaps forever. Pray for me."

HUNTINGDON has dismissed old Mr. "Panic" and gone to work. New houses are building up all around, and improvement seems to be the order of the day. The weather, so far, has been quite unfavorble to building, but as it has now, for a few days, cleared up with better prospects, foundations are being commenced and soon we will see houses on them.

EVENING AT HOME, is the title of a new quarterly journal, devoted to useful and instructive reading for the family circle,—a pleasant family companion. It is published by H. A. Mumaw, Elkhart, Indiana, at 40 cents a year. Each subscriber receives as a premium a copy of GOOD MAN'S LEGACY, a neat pamphlet valued at 25 cents. Subscribe for it. Liberal terms offered to canvassers.

SISTER Wealthy A. Clark an employee in our office for over three years left last week and went to her home near Shirleysburg, Huntingdon Co., Pa. She served a very creditable apprenticeship, and had become one of our most useful and reliable hands. Being at the business so long, she preferred a chance of labor, at least during the summer season.

BRO. W. B. Sell of Mo., under date of April 27, says: "By these few lines I inform you that we arrived safely in the neighborhood of Martinsville, Mo. on the evening of the fourth of March. Since here we have had 7 meetings—good order and very good attention to the word spoken. We learned since here there are about 13 members in this county—Harrison. Some are from Pa. Some from Indiana, some from Iowa, and some from Virginia.

A "FALSE PROPHET."—A remarkable man, claiming to be the Messiah, has recently appeared in Arabia, where his fame has spread far and wide. He came forth from the desert, where he spent many years mortifying the flesh, and he pretends to work wonders and perform miracles, and give the evidences of his Divine mission. He has a melodious voice, remarkably brilliant eyes, and a fascinating appearance, and is wielding followers.

WE HAVE just received a Report of the Service Commission to the President. It embraces the theory and result of the reform introduced by the President pursuant to the act of March 3, 1871.

The results of this reform are more readily seen on paper than by practical observation. While we live in a country we are more or less concerned about its government and our prayers should ever be for a wise and just administration, and every step in this direction should meet our approval, but as long as hot-headed politicians are to receive all public favors and help to hold the government reins, but little advance towards equity and moral good can be expected.

THE WAY TO MAKE TIMES GOOD. While going down street we noticed a man just commencing an excavation in his lot, and enquired of him, the design. The reply was, "I intend to build a house to help make the times good." That man understood the wants of the times and had decided on the only sure remedy. Croakers may hang around the corners and grumble about the hardness of the times and scarcity of money a thousand years, but they will never get any better until people "go to work." This man starts a move that may indirectly benefit half the town. A score or two of such men in every town would do the county more real good than a thousand such sittings as was our late financial congress.

PERSECUTION OF THE BAPTISTS IN SOUTH RUSSIA.—At the march meeting of the Evangelical Alliance Council of the British the Rev. Dr. Blackwood introduced Pastor Oncken, of Hamburg, and made a statement on the subject of the persecution still carried on in the district of Cherson, South Russia. Letters were also read to the Council, giving particulars, by which it appears that members of the Orthodox Greek Church had, for professing altered views on the subject of baptism, and for leaving that communion, been heavily fined, beaten, imprisoned, and threatened with banishment to Siberia. A chapel for the use of the Baptists, and towards the creation of which the German churches contributed, had been closed by the Government seal. The subject was carefully considered, and thanks were presented to Rev. Mr. Oncken for attending meeting and supplying information on the subject. The Council assured him that their most careful consideration would be given to the case.

RELIGIOUS STATISTICS OF CALIFORNIA.—A Franciscan monk took posession and planted Papal missions here 104 years ago. Protestantism first gained a foothold 25 years ago, and to-day has 108 Methodist and 38 Methodist (South) churches, 67 Baptist, 66 Presbyterian, 64 Congregational, and 40 Episcopal churches, and a number of other denominations—not a bad record for 25 years. But many of these churches are weak, and must have help from abroad; and Home missions and Sunday school missions can have little aid from them. Oregan and Nevada, too, are greatly neglected and sadly needing Sunday schools, which are found to be wonderfully adapted to their needs, as numerous examples show. A small village which, a few years ago, had a very bad name, which was a byword, had a Sunday school organized by a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, which grew into a church, and the village is now redeemed. Another Sunday school, similarly organized, has grown into a church, with a settled pastor. There is progress on all sides.

STATE OF RELIGION IN LOUISIANA.—A correspondent of the Watchman and Reflector writes very despondingly of the state of Louisiana. He says: "I have been living in Louisiana over twenty-one years, and never before witnessed the degree of religious unconcern which exists in the State at this time. It is not confined to any denomination or section of the State, but there is an alarming indifference on the subject pervading all sects and all parts of our territory. A reviva. of religion, even of small proportoins, would be almost an anomaly." This state of things he ascribes partly to the unsatisfactory political and temporal condition of the people. "The people of Louisiana feel (I was going to say hopeless), I may safely say eminently insecure, so far as their temporal future is concerned. I do not believe they are prejudiced against the colored population, but they feel (and I think justly), that with negro rule, which seems inevitable here, down go all the material interests in the state. The people of Louisianna see their danger, and it alarms them. The majority are already hopelessly involved in debt, and a dark future looms up before them. The result is, that mind and heart are fixed upon temporalities, and then find no time to devote to the great subject of salvation."

A terrible tornado passed over Nashville and vicinity, Tenn., recently doing an immense amount of damage. It crushed in the fronts of several large buildings, including a Methodist church, and many small buildings from their foundations. Many poor families were rendered homeless. At Nashville the Cumberland river had risen twenty feet in the channel, and the width of the river increased from one hundred feet to one mile. In the lower streets of the city hundreds of families have been compelled to move. From all portions of Tennessee are reports of great damage by water.—The bridge over the Tombigbee river below Chattanooga was floating when a train ran on it; the engine and three cars went into the river, and the engineer and fireman were killed. From New Orleans it is reported that delegations of planters from the river parishes, bordering on the Ouashita and Red river, as well as from parishes bordering on the Mississippi, waited on the Governor, stating that their cattle and stock had all been drowned, and their lands and houses inundated and themselves and their laborers reduced to destitution by the unprecedented flood. They are so straitened they have been compelled to appeal to the United States authorities for a supply of rations until they can get to work again.

BRO. J. C. Richer of Peru, Miami Co., Ind. says: "The Spring has been very cool and dry in this section of country, consequently the wheat crop has suffered very severely. Wheat on the upland is almost a failure. A great many farmers are plowing up their wheat fields and putting them in oats and corn. Wheat on the River bottoms is pretty good. The grass is not growing much yet, consequently feed for stock is getting very scarce. Farmers have sowed their oats and have a good deal of their ground plowed for corn. Yesterday it rained and last night snowed and stormed, and this morning it looks like mid-winter. The earth enwrapped in a mantle of snow about five inches deep, and still snowing and blowing. How we long for the warm rays of the sun and warm spring showers which would be so reanimating to all created nature. Fruit so far is promising yet, good prospects for peaches, which we don't have every year. Health is good in this part of the country. I only know of one sick person and he has been confined to his bed for a long time."

Eld. John Murray of Quarry, Marshall Co., Iowa says: "As others are giving accounts of the weather &c. through the PILGRIM I will also state how it was here about Easter. On the 4th inst in the afternoon my wife and I went twenty miles south-west to visit old Bro. and elder Samuel Garber. Found them well and enjoyed our visit much, but found it very disagreeable traveling as the roads were very bad and pretty cold. That night snow fell to cover the ground. The next day, Easter Sunday, went with them to meeting in that neighborhood, and for the first time had the happy privilege of uniting with them in the celebration of the resurrection of our blessed

Redeemer, which proved to be a feast to the precious souls present. About 10 o'clock the sun came out and the snow melted. In the afternoon we returned home again, but found our 20 miles long enough, as the dust was now mud from the snow that had fallen and melted.

I have now lived in Iowa 17 years and last winter was the pleasantest winter I ever seen anywhere. But winter before last was the roughest I ever seen anywhere. There is quite a difference even in different parts of Iowa. Here in the central part we generally have not much snow before Feb. and March, but last winter we had plenty in January to make good sledding and we had the best sledding and sleighing for about six weeks that I ever saw anywhere, and the weather so pleasant that people could enjoy sleighing.

I also wish to say through the PILGRIM to our dear brethren, sisters, and friends, that through the care love, and mercy, of my kind Father in heaven, I am permitted to enjoy tolerably good health, and am again able to travel and preach some, which was far beyond my expectation one year ago. I have not suffered from the effects of the Catarrh for several months, thank God."

MARRIED.

RADY—SMITH.—By the undersigned, April 26, 1874, at the residence of Mr. Smith, Mr. John Rady to Margaret A. Smith. Both of Tippecanoe Co., Ind

SAMUEL ULERY.

DIED.

KNEPPER.—Also in the same congregation, March 8, '74, brother Peter Knepper, aged 71 years, 4 months, and 24 days. Funeral services by the brethren, from Matt. 24: 44.

ETTER.—Also in the same congregation, April 28, '74, brother Jacob Etter, aged 76 years, 5 months, and 13 days. Funeral improved by the bretbren from Rev. 14: 13.

D. H. BONEBRAKE.

TANGER.—In Logan Church, on April 22, 1874, David Tanger, aged 63 years, 11 months, and two days. Disease, dropsy and heart disease. Funeral services by Eld. Joseph N. Kauffman and the writer, from Mark 13: 33.

The deceased died very suddenly. He was as well as usual, walked to his sons and walked about the farm through the day, but sometime during the night his companion awoke and hearing him make some noise, spoke to him but received no answer. She became alarmed and ran to her sons one fourth mile distant, but when she returned with her son the spirit had fled. Old and young take warning.

J. L. FRANTZ.

HARSHBARGER.—In Spring Run congregation, Mifflin Co., Pa. April 30, 1874, Charles Elmer, son of brother David H. and sister Isabella Harshbarger, aged 1 month, and 3 weeks. Funeral sermon by the brethren, from Mark 10: 13.

Dear brother and sister, you now have a little angel in heaven. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and except we humble ourselves as a little child we cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Now if we follow Christ in all his appointed ways, we will all meet the sweet litile boy in the paradise of God. S. W. BOLLINGER.

BOYER.—In Falling Spring congregation, Franklin Co., Pa. April 23, 1874, our beloved brother and Elder, William Boyer, aged 76 years, 10 months, and 18 days. Funeral improved by the brethren from the words, "I have fought a good fight." Brother Boyer had the oversight of the church upwards of 25 years, and in the ministry a much longer time. In his death the church has sustained a great loss. But our prayer is that his spirit may fall in a great measure on our two old brethren who will have to take his place in the church. He leaves a widow, but no children.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

THE MORNING BRIGHT.

Children, the birds are waking,
Their early notes I hear—
Come, rouse you from your slumbers,
The glorious morn is here—

The robbin's low sweet chirrup,
As he nestles 'mid the leaves,
The swallow's little twitter,
In his home beneath the eaves.

They shake their feathery garments,
And warble forth their song,
Rejoicing in the daylight,
Their notes of love prolong.

The sky is bright and glorious,
The sun about to rise;
Come, children, from your slumbers,
And ope your wondering eyes.

The dew is on the flowers,
And they raise their pretty heads,
The violet, and the daisy bright,
From out their lowly beds.

The air is fresh and balmy,
The world is wide-awake;
Come, children, from your slumbers
Awake! awake! awake!

First kneel and bless your Maker
For all His care and love,
And ask His pardon for your sins,
And mercy from above.

Thank Him for all His mercies,
For health, for life, for rest,
For pleasant sleep, and morning light,
And sunshine warm and blest.

Ask Him to kindly guard you
Throughout the livelong day,
Make you be good, obedient, kind,
At study or at play.

God's blessing then upon you,
Come forth at early dawn,
And see God's glad and glorious world
On this bright sunny morn.

THE NAME OF MOTHER.

Oh! how much is in that name—"Mother!" It is the whisper of a gentle voice that rocks to sleep in the cradle of its love every care of life. It has a charm that sustains and cheers us when every thing else earthly fails.

Mother! It is the voice that we never tire listening to, and its sweet tones make us forget life's burdens.

A mother's love! can any one fathom it? Pure, deep, and truthful, springing from no improper or selfish motives, it is always ready to make any sacrifice, however painful, for the pleasure of the subject of its affections. We look in vain through the world for another example of such love as hers.

Have you a mother? Cherish her comfort her, cheer her by your pleasant looks and consoling words: devote the remainder of your life, if you are spared, to the care and comfort of her "who had thine earliest kiss."

Have you no mother? None to go to in the trying hour? None to share your taoubles and to whom you can tell your grief? Do you realize the absence of the hand than a lothers most gentle and loving? Live then to meet her above? Let your life be a constant remembrance of her who has gone!

Dear child,

"Be kind to your mother, for when thou was young,
Who loved thee so fondly as she?
She caught the first accents that fell from thy tongue,
And joined in thy innocent glee."

Youthful reader, thy mother is the best earthly friend. The world may forget you—thy mother, never; the world may willfuly do you many wrongs—thy mother never; the world may perseeute you while living, and when dead plant the ivy and nightshade of slander upon your grassless grave; but thy mother will love and cherish you while living, and if she survives you, will weep for you when dead such tears as none but a mother knows how to weep. Love thy mother? Do you love her? What is the proof? Jesus says "He that loveth me keepeth my commandments."

Now, if you love your mother it will manifest itself. Every little boy and girl who loves mother will be kind, attentive, obedient, ready to do quickly whatever told cheerfully, smilingly. A son that will disobey his mother exhibit a spirit of unkindness toward her, treat her disrespectfully or abusively in the least, is sure to smart for it sooner or late. Nature herself cries out in vengance against it; all heaven gathers blackness. The most fearful, awful judgments are denounced against disobedient, recreant sons and daughters. Hark! "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother; and all the people shall say, amen." Deut. xxvii. 16.

"The eye that mocketh at his father and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it."—Prov. xxx. 17.

There are a great many occasions when mothers do not see fit to give their children leaf to go where and do what they wish, and how often they are rebellious and pouting in consequence of mothers decision. Trust her, and smooth down her ruffled feelings by the sweet and beautiful thought, "My mother knows best." It will save you many tears and much sorrow. It is the gratitude you owe her who has done and suffered so much for you.

Keep nothing concealed she ought to know; never do anythig you would be ashamed to tell her. Be willing always to open the secret recesses of your heart.

Be sure to make your dear mother a special friend, a friend above all others, and chief confident. Conceal nothing from her, but make her acquainted with the company you keep, the books you read, and even the faults which you commit.

Happy the sons, happy the daughters who are not afraid to communicate to their mother their most secret objectionable thoughts. Whilst they remain thus artless and undisguised they are free from danger.

"A mother's love, how pure,
How tender and how strong!
How long it will endure;
How passive bear each wrong!"

—The Christian Cynosure.

PLANTING.

If a girl plants in her garden "morning glory" seed, a vine will grow up and have beautiful flowers. When a boy goes to school and plants spelling, arithmetic and other good things in his head, after a while they will sprout and bear excellent fruit, better fruit even than cherries and strawberries.

There are other seeds we should plant in the spring time of life; one we will call "Faith in Jesus Christ," this will blossom into "Forgiveness of Sin," Another is "Love to God," and that will ripen into the sweet fruits of "Obedience." Another is "The Gift of God" or "The Holy Spirit;" ah, if we place that in the garden of our heart we shall have a rich cluster of fruits, "Love," "Joy," "Peace," "Gentleness," "Goodness" and "Meekness." When these are in flower we have the most beautiful bouquet that can be presented to God. But these seeds don't grow nor develop so well if we leave off planting them till late in life—till we are old. So let boys and girls make everything within, ready for the good husbandman and keep away the enemy who will sow bad seed. Fence in your garden with "Prayer."

But if we plant the seed "Selfishness," what a horrid crop of bad weeds will spring up! Here is a list made out by one of the undergardeners (Paul was his name) "Envyings," "Hatred," "Strife," "Drunkenness," "Uncleanness," and many still worse. Sometimes even "Murder" grows from "Selfishness," and perhaps oftener than those people think who do not read the Bible, for there we are told that out of the heart proceed "evil thoughts" and "murders."

Now if you see this bad weed "Selfishness" growing in your garden, root it out, for it has a tendency to grow wild and rank, and spreads and chokes out all the other good little tender plants. "Idleness" is a bad weed: often it has "Theft" for its fruit. So be sure what you sow in youth.—Child's World.

TO PUT AWAY FAULTS.

One day I was watching a great Newfoundland dog. He had been told by his master to fetch him a basket of tools that the gardiner had left in the shed. The great dog went to obey his younger master. He took hold of the basket with his mouth, but he could not lift it. What did he do? Give it up? No never! One by one he took the things out of the basket and carried them to his master.

One by one! That is what we must try to do with our faults. Try and get rid of them one by one. Jesus knows how hard it is for you to do this, and so he has given you a word that will help you to do it, and that word is "To-day."

I will show you how. Take one fault—we will call it bad temper—and in the morning, when you get out of bed, ask God for Christ's sake to help you "to-day" to overcome that bad temper. Perhaps by and by something will begin to make you feel angry; then remember your prayer, and try and drive away the angry feeling, and say, "Not to-day."

If you have learned any bad, wicked words, like some poor children in the street, who do not know any better, then ask God for Christ's sake to help you to day; then, when you are tempted to do so, remember, "Not to-day," I will not say wicked words to-day." And do the same with all your faults. Take them one by one, and try for one whole day not to give way to them. It will come easier then.—Guiding Star.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following is a statement of the facts touching intemperance, and should cause every one to seriously reflect:

"It" says the Independent, "gives a million drunkards and paupers, a hundred thousand idiots and insane, and nearly or quite a thousand murderers and suicides every year. Add to these the homes that are desolated by intemperance, and we have a host of slaves like that liberated by war. Not one drunkard but began as a moderate drinker, intending to remain such. One in ten of our moderate drinkers becomes a drunkard, and eight out of the other nine are injured, and not one of them benefited by the indulgence. It was the example of reputable men who drank moderately, which encouraged this army of drunkards to think that they can safely do the same. The result is poverty, death and hell. How any man, with these facts before him, can make his brother to offend, we cannot understand. It is not enough to say the drunkard does not follow the example of the moderate drinker. He does follow it till his moral sense and will are weakened, and he outruns his teacher.

COLD IN THE EAST.—We have been complaining of a chilly April, after an unusual mild winter, but the whole season has been exceptionally severe in many of the sunny, eastern climes. From Constantinople we have the following remarkable account:

"The winter has been unusually severe; the snow deep. Bears and wolves driven into the towns by the prevalence of the snow have been roaming through the streets of Scutari. They have also been at Hissar, prowling around Robert College, the inmates of which did not dare to venture out after night fall. Mr. Hanson, the English banker shot a wild boar on his own grounds on the Asiatic side of Bosphorus. Several persons have been killed by wild beasts in the neighborhood."

Baynard Taylor, writing to the Tribune, from Cairo, Egypt, March 20, says: "As if to make the change more emphatic, the wintry weather we tried to escape by leaving Italy has followed us here. After a sharp north wind on Tuesday, Wednesday came in cloud and a chilly rain which lasted all day, and obliged us since fire places are unknown, to sit in cloaks and to go to bed early in order to keep warm. March is usually the most pleasant month of the year in Egypt; but now, when Constantinople is snowed up, and people freeze to death on Chios, we must needs shiver on the banks of the Nile."

ORIGIN OF AN OLD PHRASE.—"To scrape acquaintance" comes to us from the Roman Emperor Adrian. He was at the public baths one day, when he saw one of his veteran soldiers scraping his body with a tile. That was such poor luxury, that Adrian ordered that his old comrade should be supplied with more suitable cleansing materials and also with money.

On a subsequent occasion, when the Emperor again went to the bath, the spectacle before him was highly amusing. A score of old soldiers who had fought under Adrian were standing in the water, and each one currying himself with a tile and wincing at the self inflicting rubbing. The Emperor perfectly understood what he saw, and what was the purpose of the sight. "Ha! Ha!" he exclaimed; "you had better scrap one another, my good fellows." He added, "You certainly shall not scrape acquaintance with me."

The cost of liquors in the United Kingdom in 1871 was $511,000,000, and the liquors drank there in six years, 1865 to 1870 inclusive, would build 22,000 miles of railroad, 7,000 more than they now have. The quantity of grain used for the six year's drink would make bread sufficient to support the whole population of the United Kingdom for two years, and the amount spent would build a fine house for every family of five persons. In New York city three glasses of liquor are drank for every loaf of bread eaten, the liquor costing thirty cents and the bread ten. If the waste occasioned by drink could be stayed, a national debt would be unknown and taxes would be trifling; if it continues without abatement there is danger that the debt will increase beyond the ability to even meet the interest.—Carleton Sentinel.

In the course of last year, there were published in England five hundred and seven new novels, and two hundred and twenty-one new volumes of poetry. To these may be added, for the year's product, half as many more books of the same sort published in this country. A similar fertility has occurred in previous years. But how many of these books have had any just pretensions to be read or remembered! To be as charitable as possible, it may be asserted, that nine-tenths of the annual crop of novels and poems represent only the waste of human aspirations.

It is reported from New Orleans that the Mississippi floods have brought partial or or entire ruin upon 25,000 persons in and near that city. Northern cities are contributing largely to their relief. Many of the finest plantations of Louisiana are under water, a number of women and children are reported drowned, hundreds are without food and shelter, and vast herds of stock are dying for want of food.

SCIENTIFIC AND SAFE TREATMENT.

When applied with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche and accompanied with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as constitutional treatment, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy produces perfect cures of the worst cases of Catarrh and Ozena of many years' standing. This thorough course of medication constitutes the only scientific, rational, safe and successful manner of treating this odious disease that has ever been offered to the afflicted. So successful has it proven that the proprietor has long offered a standing reward of 500 for a case of Catarrh which he cannot cure.

INDISPENSIBLE EVIDENCE.

THOS. J. BISHOP, of South Brooklyn, N. Y., writes that his wife had suffered since a child with Catarrh until it had resulted in what eminent physicians pronounced Consumption; that she has used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and they have worked wonders with her case.

LONGING FOR HOME.

BY WESLEY.

I am longing for the coming,
Of the snowy-vestured band,
That shall bear my weary spirit
To the sinless Summer land.
As I tread the narrow causeway,
Through this thorny vale, I dream
Of the joys that ever brighten,
Where the pearly waters gleam.

Where the flowers, by the river,
Give their fragrance to the gale
Where the ransomed of the Father,
The rich odor may inhale:
While a strain, unknown to mortals,
Wakes the echoes of the shore,
As it sweeps its glassy surface,
In the happy evermore.

I am waiting for the signal,
That shall speak my full release,
And present my welcome passport
To the realms of perfect peace.
Yea, and when my lagging sandals,
All the dusty way have trod,
I shall sing among the angels,
By the golden throne of God.

I am longing to be going,
Yet my Father's kind command,
Bids me tarry mid the shadows
Of this misty lower land.
When my pilgrimage is ended,
I shall stem the turbid flood,
And recline upon the bosom
Of the spotless Son of God.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

PARABLE OF THE UNJUST STEWARD.

This parable was addressed to the disciples, but in the hearing of the Pharisees. The rich man represented the Lord, himself, the sole proprietor of all things. The steward, the man who is entrusted with worldly riches and misemploys them. Every one is in some measure the Lord's steward, and all his posessions and endowments are entrusted to him that he may with them glorify God, and do good to men. And an account will soon be required of his use of them. The steward in this parable was accused by the Lord of wasting his goods. He had employed his Master's property in his own indulgences, or suffered it to be by others, or wasted it by bad management. Thus men spend their riches in gratifying their pride, vanity, or curiosity. They lavish them upon those who do not want them in such expenses as tend to encourage vice or folly; in short, they do not obey the commandments and seek the honor of God in using them, and stand accused of wasting their Lord's property, though they neither amassed wealth by repine or injustice, nor hoard it. Nay, though they obtain a high reputation for generosity, for that must be wasted which is spent to no good purpose. Matt. 25: 14—30.

The Lord is not described as expostulating with the steward who could neither deny the charge nor excuse himself, and was therefore ordered to make out his account and quit his stewardship.

This teaches us that men will not at last be able to vindicate their waste on improper expidenture of worldly things, and that death will shortly turn every man out of his stewardship. When the steward heard the decisive sentence of which he knew there would be no reversal, he considered in what manner he might so employ his present advantages that they would stand him in stead, when dismissed from his place; otherwise he foresaw that his case would be very wretched, as he had never been accomed, and was not able to dig or get his living by hard labor, and was ashamed to beg his bread after having lived in credit and plenty. This represents the wretched state of ungodly men put out of their stewardship by death. Accordingly the steward devised a plan well suited to his purpose, and consistent with his character, determining to seduce his Lord's debtors to concur in defrauding him for their own advantage. By this measure he could at his Lord's expense confer an obligation on them, and making them accomplices in fraud, they would be restrained from informing against him, and yet if they should refuse to give him in his distress assistance, he would have them in his power, and as a desperate man who had nothing to lose, he could inform against them to the great injury of their characters and property. Thus he made himself sure that they would one after another entertain him in their houses, or provide for him some other method of subsistence. He therefore called them to him separately and ordered one of them to give a note of hand, as we say, for half of what he really owned, instead of one for the whole, and another with the deduction of one fifth, and so to the others. When the protest came to light, his Lord commended the unjust steward, not for his iniquity, but for his policy. He could not deny but it was a well conceived plan of providing against the time of approaching distress; and in this respect alone it is proposed for our imitation. For our Lord added that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. Worldly men who make temporal things, their primary object are more prudent in respect to their present interest than the children of light. The people of God are in respect to their eternal concerns in the choice of their object, foolish, but in the selection of means and perseverance in subordination, every other concern to the favorite pursuit, and rendering everything subservient to it in politic contrivances, to prevent disappointment, to get over untoward circumstances, and to reduce advantages from them in these and various other particulars, they are exceedingly wise in their generation, yea, far wiser even than real believers who are not given up to the pursuit of their great object, here so active and unremitting in the choice and use of means in order to the attainment of it. Much more then, are they wiser than men in general are about their religious concerns or than professed Christians are in improving their advantages.

The Lord seems in this place to teach us that the good things pertaining to this present life were granted to us by God, not that we should not spend them to our own will, but that we should dispose of them as entrusted to us by the Lord, in entire faithfulness. But men, those to whom greatest abundance is committed, are used to abuse them in luxuries by gratifying themselves and others. Hence it comes to pass that the Lord no longer enduring this waste, justly determines to deprive us, as bad stewards of our stewardship, either by taking our abused goods from us, or calling us by terminating our lives, to his tribunal. But the proper way of averting this doom and procuring the continuance of our stewardship and obtaining the means of greater beneficiencies, is to make amends to the poor, by a charitable use of them. Thus it will come to pass that God perceiving that we more properly use these things will count us more worthy of more valuble endowments.

THE NECESSITY OF PRAYER.

Pray without ceasing is the teachings of the New Testament and by its rules we profess to be governed, but some will say we can not always pray. That is a mistake. I for one would say we can, for it is just as easy to have our thoughts directed heavenward as soon as we awake in the morning as it is to have them directed to our temporal matters. I don't wish any better opportunity to do this than when I am following my plough. A brother said to me once when a man has hands about him to work, he has not time to pray and have family worship. What a mistake! If this world were our home this might do, but we fear, there are too many live in this way, for we often meet with brethren that seat themselves to their tables and partake of the gifts that God has given them without thanking him for them. Daily prayer is too much neglected, for by it we overcome temptation, the more we give attention to prayer the less danger there is of us being drawn into the snares of the world, such as "Granges" or other secret lodges which belong to the world. I often think that is why some of the brethren are drawn, and enticed away from the Church. I think it an easy matter to get rid of those that trouble us about joining their societies. I had a neighbor who tried hard to get me into the temperance lodge, but I told him I had no appetite for ardent spirits and besides all that, I had joined the Church of Christ and that required all my means and time, and had none to spare for others, and I do consider that the Church of the Brethern is the oldest temperance society on the earth. Why do we leave the Church and go to these societies? What can we expect of them? Can they do more for us than God who is the giver of all things spiritual temporal? Therefore dear brethren and sisters, let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world so that we may be ready when the Master calls that he come not upon us as a thief. Let us be engaged in prayer.

A. J. KREPS.

In its own sphere, power is greater than Suffering; but, in this sphere, Suffering is greater than Power. Power creates; Suffering cannot create. Power provides, Suffering cannot provide. But can Power redeem? Oh, no! it is Suffering, and Suffering only, that redeems. Power can illuminate the obscure constitution; Suffering cannot do that. But can Power correct the perverted character? Oh! no Suffering, and Suffering alone can do that. Power, like the lightning, strikes a single object; suffering, like the cloud, baptizes the world with its tears, and bends the rainbow of peace over mountains all rustling with thanksgiving and valleys of silent beauty, all sparkling with praise.—Thomas. H. Stockton.

The setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone, shadows of of the evening fall behind us, and the world seems but a dim reflection itself—a broader shadow. We look forward into the coming lonely night; the soul withdraws itself. Then stars arise, and the night is holy.—Longfellow.

Our brightest, moments are frequently those which arrive to us from the bosom of care and anxiety; the gems that sparkle upon the dark ground.

Baptism—What is It?

Having examined briefly the itemes Faith and Repentance and found that they emotated from God, and binding prerequisite to our entering the Christian Church, the next link in the chain is that of baptism. In discussing this subject our aim will be to be more particular and enter into a deeper investigation than we did of the subject of faith and repentance, as the minds of professing Christians are more divided upon this subject than they are upon the former subjects. We will begin by asking the question, what is baptism? Answer. It is a sacrament of the New Testamenant and is attributed to the nations of the earth. Math. 28. Mark 16. And is the inducting rite into the Christian Church. John 3. And is the antitype of the ark in which Noah was saved. Peter 3. The word is defined by Webster thus: The application of water to a person as a sacrament or religions ceremony by which he is initated in to the visable Church of Christ, and says Webster, this is usually performed by sprinkling or immersion. But that it was primatively performed by sprinkling is seriously doubted. All of the laws pertaining to the Kingdom of this world are liable to be changed, and when ever a law is changed the law that takes its place, or the change that takes place in the old law, is just as legal as it was before it was changed and this is right, for the law is with the people to change as they think proper. "But Christs kingdom is not of this world." John 18:36. "And to this kingdom of Christ there is but one law given and that is God." "See that you refuse not him that speaketh. "Hebrews 12 and 25. "And think to change times and laws." Dan. 7 and 25. "But receive a kingdom that cannot be moved." Hebrews 12 and 28.

"For till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Math. 5 and 18. He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words has one that judgeth him; the words that I have spoken tho same shall judge him in the last day." John 12 and 48. "Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God. Whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation, Jesus Christ the same yesterday and to day and forever." Hebrews 13:7, 8. Although we have a right to change our own fundamental laws that we have enacted and that pertains to earthly kingdom, we as the subjects of Christs kingdom have no right to make any change in the law pertaining to that kingdom, neither have we a right to define any word in that law so as to make it signify something that God never intended it to signify; for as quoted above, Jesus must be the same yesterday as he is to day. Now I am speaking unto you and if I do not make Jesus the same now as he was then reject me.

Words are the sigas of ideas. God in delivering his law to the people made use of words, and whatever those words meant when God made use of them, is the thing that God wants us to do. The New Testament was written in the Greek language, words were selected from the Greek vocabulary and whatever was meant, or the sign expressed by the word, when it was selected is what God wants us to do. There are three words in the Greek language namely, Baptizo, to dip, Rantizo to sprinkle, and Elkizo to pour. Hence if God had wanted us sprinkled with water, he would have used the term Rantizo to have expressed it, and if he would have wanted the water poured upon us, he would have used the term Elkizo to have expressed it, as these two words are expressive of sprinkling and pouring, hence it is evident that sprinkling and pouring does not have any relation to the ordinance, seeing these expressive signs are not used. But that God did intend us to be dipped under the water is evident from the fact that God selected the term Baptizo to express it, and that this Greek term Baptizo is expressive of dipping we need only refer to the Greek lexicons themselves. In the Greek and English lexicons of Donnegan baptizo is defined thus; To immerse repeatedly into a liquid. Bretschneider defines the same word properly often to dip, often to wash. Liddell and Scott, authors of reputation, define it in the same way. So much then for the Greek termination of the word. We will next see if John the baptist and Christ and his apostles so understood it. Turn to Matt. 3:5, and read, "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and was all baptized of him in Jordan. And Jesus when he was baptized went up straightway out of the water." Matt. 3:16, "And were baptized of him in Jordan." Mark 1:5. "And was baptized of him in Jordan, and straightway coming up out of the water." Mark 1:9, 10.

Thus we have shown by the mouth of two witnesses that John the baptist baptized the people in the river of Jordan and not out of it; that Jesus himself was baptized in the river and that he came straightway up out of the water. "And he commanded the chariot to stand still and they went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunoch and he baptized him, and when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the Eunoch saw him no more." Acts 8:38, 39. Also in this case the candidate and the administrator both went down into the water and both came up out of the water. Ah yes, says the critic, I admit that John the baptist and the apostles went into the water to perform the rite of baptism, but can you tell us how the rite was performed prior to their coming out of the water? Yes, I have told you that the definition of the Greek term baptizo as given by the lexicons was to dip, to wash, to immerse. Yes but I would prefer Bible proof. Well then to the Bible we will go. Christ says, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." John 31:5. Hence while they are in the water they must be born of the water. "Know ye not that so many of us as was baptized into Jesus Christ was baptized into his death; therefore we are buried with him in baptism into death. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection. Rom. 6:3–5. "Buried with him in baptism wherein ye are also risen with him." Col. 2:12. Then we must also, while we are in the water, be buried and planted together with him in the likeness of his death. Now turn to Heb. 10:21 and read, "And having a high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed with pure water." Thus we have shown independent of the lexicons, that they went into the water, that they must be born of water, and that they must be buried, hence they are under water, that the must be planted, hence their bodies must be covered with water, and their bodies must be washed with water, hence they must be dipped in the water, and this is the rite as performed before they come up out of the water. Sprinkling and pouring is not baptism, as Christ and his disciples never instituted it, and therefore must have eminated from those who have changed times and laws.

We readily understand now that the rite is performed by going into the water, and being buried under the water, and our bodies washed with water, and you have proved this very satisfactorily to my mind by the signification of the term baptizo, and also by the practice and teachings of Christ and his apostles. Yes, this conclusively proves that immersion is the mode, and that by trine action. Trine, what do you mean by that expression? I mean that the candidate must be dipped into the water once in each respective name of the Trinity. Jesus Christ in commissioning the twelve, uses this language, "Baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28:12. We have noticed that the lexicons defined the word baptizo to immerse repeatedly, and and also to dip, and to wash. baptizo is the encompoond of bapto. The writers of the Old Testament employed the term bapto in every instance but one. In one instance they employed the term baptizo in the case of Naaman's the prophet and commanded Naaman to dip himself seven times in the Jordan, hence if bapto means one dip, baptizo means more than one. The Savior in the commission makes use of the term baptizo when he says, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Now we will see if this language will bear out the idea of the lexicons in defining baptizo as being a frequentative verb, How could believers out of every nation be baptized with one dip if I would take you into the water, call the names of the trinity, and then dip you under the water? Would that be dipping you? I trow not. Or if I would call the name of the Father and then dip you, would that be dipping you? I think not. But if I would say, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and then dip you, then say, of the Son, then dip you again, and then say of the Holy Ghost, and then dip you again, this would be dipping you. The language is, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28:19. We notice that this language is a compound sentence, made up of suppressed sentences. The sentences being suppressed by the use of an elipsis, baptizing them in the name of the Father, stands as a single proposition, and is a complete sentence. And of the Son, is not a complete sentence, it being shortened by the use of the copulative conjunction and. Now whenever a sentence is shortened in this way we have a perfect right according to the rules of Grammar to complete the sentence. When this is to be done we must have a rule to work by. Grammarians tell us that we must use the first sentence as a model. Hence when we supply these sentences according to the established rules of Grammar, we will make the first clause of the second and third sentences read just like the first sentence. Then the commission recorded by Matthew 28:19, would read as follows: Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and baptizing them in the name of the Son, and baptizing them in the name of the Holy Ghost. Hence trine immersion. Suppose I would give my note in this form. I promise to pay unto you one hundred dollars in gold, and of silver, and of greenbacks. Would one hundred dollars satisfy you to give up that note? I trow not. You would want three hundred, which would be yours justly. Just so I want three dips in baptism, seeing that the language is constructed precisely alike. As the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three distinct names constitute one triune God, even so does one dip into each name constitute one triune baptism, and nothing short of this is a valid Christian baptism. This is the baptism that can be traced in an unbroken line from the present age to the apostolic age, and is the only baptism that can so be traced. If any of you doubt this, send 75 cents to J. H. Moore, Urbana, Champaign Co, Ill. and he will send you the documents to prove it. Call for the "Historical Chart and Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles," and read them well, and you will come to the same conclusion.

I will now dismiss this part of the subject by asking, what we are baptised for? Some people say that ye are baptised in the place of being circumcised, therefore say they, baptism in nothing more than circumcission made without hands. Col. 2:11. Baptism is performed by the hands of an administrator, hence there ideas must be incorrect. Others affirm that it is to represent the death and burial of Christ, and therefore they immerse backward. When Paul says we must be planted in the likeness of his death he don't saya thing about being planted in the likeness of his burial, but in the likeness of his death. Romans 6:5. When Christ died he bowed his head. John 19 chapter.

Paul says, "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup you do shew the Lord's death till he comes." Cor. 11:26. Hence it is the office of the communion to commemorate his death and sufferings, and as there is no use of two sacraments to express the same thing, baptism must mean something else. What is it?

In order that we answer this question correctly we will have to appeal to the scriptures. Dipping and bathing the body in water was associated with divine service under a former economy, and belonged to the ceremonial law of cleansing, which law was added because of transgression. Gal. 3. All of the Jewish sacrificial offerings were instituted for the purpose of cleansing them of their immoral defilements. Now then turn to the 18 chapter of Numbers and read. The law as instituted by God is a purification for sin. 19th verse, "And a clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day, and on the seventh day he shall purify himself and wash his clothes and bathe himself in water and shall be clean at even." I might sight you to similar instances of this kind, but this is enough to show that dipping or bathing the flesh in water was incorporated in the law of cleansing, and must be observed by the Jews in order to insure the remission of their sins, for the law further says, "But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from among the congregation;" hence brethren the flesh in water, under the Jewish economy was for the remission of sins. Now let us examine the gospel baptism. Mark says, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God as it is written in the prophets, behold I send my messenger before thy face which shall prepare the way before thee. John did baptize in the wilderness and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, and there went out unto him all the land of Judea and they of Jerusalem and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan confessing their sins." Mark 1: 4, 5. Matt. 3 and Luke 2. A critical examination of John's mission shows that it was the receiving of the gospel; that baptism and repentance was associated with it, and that this was for the remission of sins.
